On April 10 the Archbishop will return to New York to attend the meeting of the House of Bishops. The Church Club will give him a dinner that night, and the next day he will make his farewell appearance at a meeting at Columbia University. Shortly after that he will slip away as quietly as he came.

WAR COMMISSION WILL REACH $500,000 GOAL

Several Important Dioceses Have Not Yet Made Returns

NEW YORK CITY.—Although not all the dioceses have been heard from, it was announced at the office of the War Commission that little doubt was felt as to reaching the half million dollar goal set for the offerings for the war work of the Church. To date the offerings total $450,000. The largest gift from any single parish comes from Grace church, New York, and is $49,473.72.

Benediction

WE commend the interests of our dearest country to the protection of Almighty God and those who have the superintendence of them to His holy keeping, together with all those who serve and support our Nation in the struggle for righteousness, justice, liberty and an enduring peace. The Lord bless us and keep us, the Lord make His face to shine upon us and be gracious unto us, the Lord lift up His countenance upon us and give us peace, both now and evermore. Amen.

G. F. S. AND C. M. H. PLAN MEETING FOR ARCHBISHOP

His Grace to Start Drive for War Work Fund

NEW YORK CITY.—A meeting for Churchmen and women is being planned by the Girls' Friendly Society and the Church Mission of Help to be held in Synod House on Wednesday, March 6, at 2.30 p. m. The Bishop of New York will preside, and the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Rhode Island, Mrs. Pease of the Church Mission of Help and Miss Katharine L. Potter, chairman of the G. F. S. War Service Committee in New York, will be the speakers. This meeting is preliminary to a "drive" to raise money for war work with girls.

GENERAL BOARDS TO ADOPT SINGLE BUDGET SYSTEM

National Committee to Study Financing Forward Work of Church

NEW YORK CITY.—A comprehensive plan for a budget system whereby the Board of Missions, the General Board of Religious Education and the Social Service Commission may combine in raising the money needed annually by them, and an immediate drive of a million and a half dollars to meet the present obligations of these boards, are subjects that came before the recent meetings of the Board of Missions and the G. B. R. E. and which are now in the hands of a committee to carry out.

By invitation of the officers of the Board of Missions, a number of Church men and women from Provinces I, II, III and V met on January 30 to confer in regard to this matter at the Church Missions House. It was recognized that 1918 is a critical year; 75,000 Churchmen are already in the ranks of the new army; many of the leading clergy are absent on war duty. The people of the country have made a wonderful response to the Government's call through the Red Cross and other agencies. The question considered by the conference was, "Is it right to allow this spirit of self-sacrifice to be expressed chiefly through agencies outside of the Church while the Church makes no concerted effort to call forth a similar spirit on behalf of the fundamental matters entrusted to her"?

The conference noted such facts as these:

1. That the Board of Missions and the General Board of Religious Education closed their last fiscal year with deficits;

2. That the Social Service Commission has plans which it is unable to carry out for lack of funds;

3. That several of the schools federated under the American Church Institute for Negroes are hampered in their work because their incomes are insufficient to meet the increased cost of operation.

The question was asked:

Would it be practicable for these various agencies for once to make common cause and present to the Church in one statement the needs of the various activities for which they are responsible, instead of allowing each to carry its load alone? Would it be possible to go a step further and to ask the domestic missionary bishops, all of whom have to carry a heavy load of anxiety in providing for that portion of the salaries of their clergy not provided for by the appropriations of the Board of Missions, to pool their needs and so present to the Church a unified statement and make a united appeal on behalf of these needs?

After hearing from a number of men who know the conditions, Mr. Ludlow of China, Bishop Touret, Dr. Teusler, Dr. Gardner and Mr. Crouch, the conference then formulated their opinions in a set of recommendations to the agencies involved: (1) That a million and a half dollars be raised at once to meet the immediate needs of the Board of Missions, of the G. B. R. E., Social Serv-

BISHOP BRATTON SPEAKS ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Helps in Campaign of St. Mary's School, Raleigh

ASHEVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA.—In connection with the campaign now going on in the Carolina dioceses to raise $250,000 for St. Mary's school, Raleigh, on Sunday morning, February 10, the Rt. Rev. Theodore D. Bratton, Bishop of Mississippi, preached on "The Responsibility of the Church to Education" at Trinity church, Asheville. Bishop Bratton was formerly rector of St. Mary's school in Raleigh and is an ardent advocate of Church schools and colleges and of this movement that has been inaugurated by the trustees of St. Mary's school. A large congregation filled the Church and the speaker preached a powerful and convincing sermon, setting forth the fundamental and permanent place that education occupies in the Christian system. The Bishop of Asheville was present, and, in introducing the speaker, urged the necessity of pressing this matter at once, notwithstanding the many calls of the day, that the school may be prepared when the war is over to carry on its constructive work. At the evening service, Bishop Bratton spoke more particularly of the school and its wonderful contribution to society, Christian culture and the Church during its long life of seventy-five years.

In the afternoon the Rev. Francis M. Osborne, who is the special representative of the trustees in the movement to raise the $250,000 fund, held a conference with the committee of representative men and women of the district to lay plans for a canvass throughout the district of Asheville.

ce Commission and Church Institute for Negroes; (2) that a committee of the ablest men the Church can provide be appointed to study the question of the support of the three boards and the extension of their work.

On February 6 the committee, through its chairman, Mr. Oliver J. Sands of Richmond, presented the matter to the Board of Missions. The Board immediately appointed a committee of five, consisting of the Very Rev. Caroll M. Davis, the Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown, Messrs. Oliver J. Sands, Charles E. Mason and Dr. J. H. Dillard, to study the report and make recommendations to the Board.

This committee, through its chairman, Dean Davis, submitted resolutions which were unanimously adopted, which expressed cordial approval of the general purpose of the committee and authorized it to proceed with a committee of five from the Board on a plan to create a national committee and to consult with the G. B. R. E., Social Service Commission and Church Institute for Negroes "or other like agencies of the Church, for the purpose of unifying and co-ordinating the needs of the Church and securing annually a sum sufficient to conduct adequately the various branches of the work of the Church".

Vigorous steps are now being taken to secure the organization of the National and Executive Committee provided for by the resolution. While no date for the concerted effort has yet been decided upon, it has been proposed that the week April 28 to May 5, both inclusive, should be selected for this purpose.

The needs which it is proposed to meet by this special effort would include, among other things, the deficit of the Board of Missions, the heavy extra expense to which it has been put through its entrance into the Pension System on behalf of missionaries at home and abroad and the great rise in the cost of silver in the Orient, certain building operations to which it is already obligated, such as St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo; the Church Hospital at Wuchang and St. Paul's College, Tokyo, the requirements of the domestic missionary bishops in addition to the appropriations of the Board, the plans of the General Board of Religious Education to meet the opportunities resulting from the war in reaching the students of the country, and numerous other items.

REV. R. P. KREITLER WANTED BY FOSDICK COMMISSION

Feels, However, It Is His Duty to Stay in Scranton

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.—There has come to the Rev. R. P. Kreitler, rector of St. Luke's church, here, within the past few weeks an opportunity to do a "bit" for the country in this time of stress. The call was from the Fosdick Commission on Training Camp Activities through the Committee on War Camp Community Service, and included an invitation to act as administrator of its work in the national capital for a long period of months. After consultation with the vestry and a number of leaders in the Church, he felt it his duty to decline the call.

G. T. Ward (Wilkes-Barre); 24th, "The Evangelistic Challenge", the Rev. E. G. Holmes (Montrose); March 3, "The Social Challenge", the Rev. Ernest Tuthill; 10th, "The World Call", the Rev. E. HISTORIC ST. JOHN'S IS REOPENED IN BANGOR, ME.

Had Interesting Point of Contact With Trinity, New York

BANGOR, MAINE.—On Sunday, February 10, St. John's Episcopal church, Bangor, was dedicated. The service was most impressive. After the choir had marched in, Bishop Brewster, of Maine, preceded by the wardens, Mr. Bryant and Mr. Howard Corning, and the rector, the Rev. J. Edward Hand, marched up the aisle reciting a responsive psalm. The sermon was preached by Bishop Brewster, the text being, "This Is God's House". The service was well attended, the church being crowded to the doors with an eager and admiring congregation.

Several gifts were also dedicated; the pulpit was a memorial to the Rev. Mr. Newbegin, and was given by subscription; the altar, given by the Rev. Leonard W. Lott in memory of his wife, and the reredos, in memory of Thomas N. Egery and Sarah Edith Egery, by their daughters, Mrs. Clara Washburn Gibson and Mrs. Sarah Edith Prescott. The choir stalls, sedilia, altar and altar rail were built from designs of Hobart B. Upjohn, architect.

The reopening of St. Johns brings up many interesting facts in regard to its history. The old church dates from about 1840. The Church retained as architect Mr. Richard Upjohn, of Boston, to design a new building. Mr. Upjohn was then a young man and had completed quite a little work for the city of Boston. This, however, was his first church building. An ardent Churchman and a deep student of Gothic, the delights of which he had enjoyed in England, he decided to design the building in the perpendicular Gothic style. The interior was finished with a full Gothic vaulting ceiling, the first to be built in this country.

About the year 1840 Trinity church, New York, decided to rebuild. It so happened that hanging on the wall of the vestry-room at the time the vestry met to consider the rebuilding of the church was a picture of St. John's church, Bangor, Maine. One of the vestry asked the rector what church it was and who designed it and on being informed, offered a resolution that Mr. Upjohn be sent for to build the new Trinity. So from this small wooden church in Bangor started the fame of a man who was to become the first president of the American Institute of Architects, a member of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and the foremost church builder of his time in this country. He carried forward the Oxford movement in this country and built many churches throughout the land.

In May, 1911, St. John's church was burned to the ground, and his grandson, Hobart B. Upjohn, of New York, was sent for and retained as architect for a new church building.

Taking in a general way the lines of the old building, but expanding on them according to modern thought and practice, the new church was designed. It is granite in English perpendicular Gothic, and has a full system of vaulting. The chancel has an ambulatory and when the building is completed a Sunday school and choir room will be added.

HUDSON RIVER CHURCHES TAKE CHILDREN FROM CITY

Kingston Parishioners Receive Boys and Girls Into Their Homes

KINGSTON, NEW YORK.—A remarkable plan for taking children from the insufficiently heated tenements of New York during the cold, hungry winter weather has been worked out by the parishes in this city. The rector of the Church of the Holy Cross conceived the idea and went, among other New York rectors, to the Rev. Dr. Slattery. This is the story in Dr. Slattery's words: "Several weeks ago I received a call from the Rev. P. F. Lange, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, Kingston. He said that he had spoken to members of his congregation about the possibility of receiving city children into their homes during the exceedingly cold weather, when it was difficult to get sufficient heat and food in the New York tenement houses. He therefore, in the name of his parishioners, came to me, asking if we would like to send some of our children to be guests in the country. I now continue this story in the words of Miss Day: 'The plan for taking children to Kingston has been most successful. I have sent fifteen children, just visiting their homes to tell their mothers of the plan, and the schools also to assure myself that they would not lose standing in their classes. On January 26 I made a journey to Kingston, taking with me nine very small children. A party was in progress at St. John's church, and I had an opportunity to see all the children who had gone up in the first party. They all showed great improvement in health and seem to have made themselves acceptable guests. We notice a great deal of anæmia among the children this winter, due to their poor feeding. Two girls of fourteen have been taken to the New York Hospital and will be sent to their country home in White Plains.'"

The other churches in the city have followed the same plan, and something like forty children altogether have been taken in this way as guests of the Kingston Church people. The children have been assigned to their hosts by the committee, who have tried to fit the right child into the right family. They have attended the Kingston public schools, and in so doing have not lost any of their school work. So successful has the plan proved that other parishes on the Hudson have the plan under consideration.

A BROTHERHOOD SECRETARY AND A SICK ARTILLERYMAN

What Our Men's Organization Did for One Soldier

SPARTANBURG, SOUTH CAROLINA.—A young man lay on a bed in a room in a hotel here recently, who had just been discharged from the Army on a surgeon's certificate. Too weak to leave the room, he waited there with a friend while Joseph Calhoun, camp secretary of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, was making the final arrangements for his departure.

For the young man lived in New York, and, since his health would not permit him to continue in the Army, he was about to return to that city.

While waiting he told his friend the story of the Brotherhood secretary's kindness. He had enlisted six months before, he said, and was assigned to the artillery. But he was unfortunate. No sooner did his Army work begin than he was attacked by a stomach disorder, which had troubled him in former years, and sent him to the Base Hospital. He remained in the hospital four months, and while there, Calhoun, the camp secretary, became acquainted with him.

Calhoun rendered the young soldier many little services while he lay in the hospital. He attended to numerous details in connection with the artilleryman's discharge. He collected the sick man's pay; he brought him to town, bought his railroad ticket, attended to his reservations, and was now making final arrangements for his comfortable journey home. With eyes that were suspiciously moist, the young fellow declared that he never encountered such a friend.

This illustrates the kind of work the Brotherhood of St. Andrew secretaries are engaged in.

War Changes Meeting Place

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.—Bishop Tucker has sent a letter to the clergy and vestries of the diocese of Southern Virginia stating that the congestion caused by war conditions has made it impossible to hold the meeting of the Diocesan Council at St. Paul's church, Newport News. The meeting will be held at St. Paul's church, Lynchburg, on May 28.

DO NOT WRITE TROUBLES TO BOYS IN THE SERVICE

Need Stimulation of Heartening Letters From Home

NEW YORK CITY.—The following paragraphs are from a letter of Mr. Lee F. Hanmer to Mr. George Porter of the Council of National Defense:

"Camp authorities are feeling that the kinds of letters written by the home folks to the boys in camps are making it more difficult to keep their minds on their work in hand and to develop the spirit for the service that is most necessary. Without thinking of what effect their letters have on the boys the home folks write about their various troubles, tending to disturb the boys in camp and to centre their attention on home affairs which they are generally unable under present conditions to do anything to remedy. One camp commander put it: 'They write about the mortgage coming due, that father has pneumonia, a horse died, or a building burned etc., etc.'

"If the home folks, in some way, were made to realize that it is difficult enough for the boys to concentrate on the serious task in hand, they would write of the more encouraging side of things and such matters as would help instead of hinder."

General Johnson, in command at Camp Upton, Yaphank, New York, made the same comment recently to a representative of one of the denominations. He said that if ministers could bring the matter to the attention of their congregations and could induce them to write letters of the "cheer up" sort, they would render a real service to the Army administration.

MRS. WHIPPLE RECEIVES $4,084 FOR NORTH ITALY

NEW YORK CITY.—Dr. Slattery makes the following report about the fund for Mrs. Whipple's work in North Italy in the Leaflet Letter just mailed to the parishioners of Grace church:

"At the morning service on the first Sunday in January I spoke to you of Mrs. Whipple's work in northern Italy, and asked your co-operation. Generous gifts came in throughout the afternoon, and the next morning I was able to cable two thousand dollars to her for the relief of the refugees for whom she is caring. I also made an appeal through THE CHURCHMAN and many in distant places have sent gifts through me and directly. Besides the direct gifts I have received in this way $4,084.97."

GIFTS AND MEMORIALS

There was recently dedicated in Christ church, Hackensack, New Jersey, a new memorial window, given to that parish by Mrs. Sherwood and her daughters. The design, which was especially composed for this church, is Gothic, the edifice being built in that style. The design, composition of the figures, and superintendence of the window in construction are entirely the work of Mr. Taber Sears, of New York City, whose work at Grace church and the Chapel of the Intercession, New York, has been so favorably commented upon.

TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND STUDENTS STUDY BIBLE

Comprehensive Campaign Launched in American Colleges

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.—The most comprehensive and thorough campaign ever attempted by American colleges and universities to Christianize student thinking and acting is about to be launched, among other institutions, at the University of Pennsylvania. Two hundred thousand students throughout the country are being enlisted in a nationally organized movement for the study of Christian principles. It is hoped that at least two thousand Pennsylvania men will be grouped in squads, in charge of members of the faculty and others specially trained, to study in six sessions the topic, "What Did Jesus Teach"? Simultaneously, Dean Frank P. Graves, of the Department of Education, will conduct a teachers' training class to standardize and vitalize the work. Students in every department of the university, and in each fraternity will be approached and invited to join one of the groups, which will be arranged to accommodate the rosters of all departments.

The campaign had its origin in the Student Volunteer Conference of East Northfield, where students, professors and leaders of the Church expressed the conviction that a thorough re-study of the teaching of Jesus Christ was the prime ethical and spiritual need of the times. An institute was held at Phillips Brooks House, Harvard University, where 120 students and professors adopted a resolution presented by Professor H. H. Horne, of New York University, "to invite urgently 100 per cent. of the students in its field to join in groups or other studies of Christian world problems". Dates have been set for similar institutes in the schools and colleges of Michigan, Illinois, the Dakotas, Indiana, Kansas, Colorado, Ohio, Nebraska, Texas, Oklahoma, Georgia, Virginia, the Carolinas, Maryland and Pennsylvania. At Wellesley College the campaign has already begun and every student, it is assumed, will enrol in one of the groups. At Mt. Holyoke similar classes have been formed, which have been pronounced by President Wooley "as valuable as the special war courses" recently added to the curriculum. At Penn State College thirty-two Bible study groups are meeting regularly, side by side with a normal training class. The movement has been heartily endorsed by President James of the University of Illinois, President Hibben of Princeton and Provost Smith of Pennsylvania.

YOUNG MOTHER MUST GIVE UP BABY FOR WANT OF $50

Church Mission of Help Needs Money to Educate Girls

New York City.—How one of the workers of the Church Mission of Help told The Churchman representative such a pitiful story that before she got through said representative had forgotten in what capacity she was listening to the story and was promising the worker the very suit off her back, is pretty convincing proof that there is room for charitably-minded Christians to come to the rescue of some of the unhappy girls whom the C. M. H. is trying to help in their upward struggle.

One of the greatest needs the C. M. H. faces is that of capable girls, many of them unmarried mothers, eager to make any sacrifice to support their babies, who are earning pitifully small wages in factories or shops, but who are quite able to take positions of greater responsibility and opportunity if only they can first increase their education.

"Here are Ella and Gertrude, for example," the worker said. "They are sisters; Gertrude has a baby. They are children of a Roman Catholic woman now in the insane hospital, and a Jew. Gertrude was seventeen when her child was born. She is boarding it for $15 a month and supporting herself, all on a pitifully small weekly wage. She needs clothes. She can't afford to buy any herself. But she could earn a good wage if somebody would support the baby while she learned.

"You see," continued the worker, "with the upheaval in women's work, the girls who used to get a good wage for fine hemstitching are thrown out of work. There isn't the demand for luxuries there was. The girl fitted for hemstitching or making lampshades is offered a Post Office job, or a telegraph job. Neither Ella nor Gertrude are fitted for the jobs that offer them advancement. While they are learning they will receive small pay. But when they have learned, they can earn a respectable living."

"How much would Gertrude need?"

"Let me see," calculated the worker. "Why, $50 for the baby and some clothes for herself would do it." (This is when the suit went.) "She will have to give up the baby otherwise as she is earning so little now.

"It is a patriotic appeal," the worker continued. "The country is asking its women to step in and do men's work. These two girls, and plenty whom I could cite, do not want to be public charges or to give up their babies. All they need is a hand to help them become independent."

"Have you any girls who are learning to better themselves in this way?" the worker was asked.

"Yes; there is Ernestine. She was making $8 a week. She is learning stenography in the evenings from a kind woman who is teaching her for nothing. But her baby has died, and she has lost all ambition. Still her work does keep her courage up. You know, these girls are burning to create. It is not reasonable to expect them to take a deep interest in their work when it gives no scope to their natural creative instinct. The whole secret of the situation is: you can't make these girls machines and expect them to stay good."

BERKELEY SCHOOL HAS SOCIAL SERVICE MEETING

Labor Leader Stirs Clergy With Desire to Know Workingman

MIDDLETOWN, CONNECTICUT.—The Social Service Conference of the diocese of Connecticut held at Berkeley Divinity School recently was well attended. Bishop Acheson presided. The general subject of the Conference was "The Church and the War". It opened with an address by the Rev. J. N. Lewis, D.D., of Waterbury on his experiences as a chaplain at Camp Devens. The State Food Administrator, Mr. Robert Scoville, followed with an able exposition of the present grave situation, and with a plea to the clergy that they should encourage all possible saving of the foodstuffs which can be exported. In the afternoon attention was concentrated upon the topic of "Social Service in Industry". Mr. F. J. Kingsbury, a prominent layman of Bridgeport and a trustee of Berkeley, the president of the Bridgeport Brass Company, gave an account of the schemes of "social service" which have been adopted in his own shops and in others throughout the country. This interesting exposition of the point of view of the "enlightened employer" was followed by a statement by Mr. Mordecai, the president of the Connecticut Federation of Labor (who mentioned that in his childhood he had attended one of our Sunday schools), in which he described the aims of the laboring man. He made a stirring appeal for "Round Table" conferences between employers and employees. One of the points generally agreed upon in the discussion following was that hitherto few of the clergy have made sufficient effort to come in contact with laboring men and to understand their position. Several of the clergy present expressed their desire of in future getting into touch with their local Labor Councils.

The members of the Conference were entertained throughout the day by Professor and Mrs. Ladd at the deanery of the school, and at 5 o'clock they were given the opportunity of attending Evensong in the school chapel and of hearing the last of the Mary Fitch Page lectures, given this year by the Rev. Ralph Birdsall of Cooperstown, New York.

SKY PILOTS OF CAMPS NO LONGER MERELY PIOUS

St. Andrew's Secretaries Minister to Bodies as Well as Souls

The "Sky Pilot" of the camps is no longer an effeminate-looking individual, with a black coat and white necktie, surrounded by an atmosphere of piety. On the contrary, he is usually a bright, up-to-date, aggressive man, who was making a success in one of the professions or in some line of business when the War called him to a higher work.

The camp secretary realizes that there may be times when physical comfort is of more vital importance than spiritual advice.

Gordon M. Reese, camp secretary at Quantico, Virginia, recently had an experience which illustrates the "new kind of missionary work" that is being conducted by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

A number of enlisted men arrived at Quantico from one of the southern cantonments, coming suddenly from a warm southern climate into one of the "cold waves" which swept the northern part of the country early in January. They had no Winter underclothing, no blankets, no sweaters. For a few days they suffered intensely.

Mr. Reese at one time telegraphed to Frederick S. Titsworth, executive secretary of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood, asking to have two dozen sweaters and two dozen blankets forwarded immediately.

Upon receiving Reese's wire, Mr. Titsworth telegraphed to Colonel William Cary Sanger, district manager of the Red Cross of the Potomac Division. On the following day the sweaters and blankets arrived at Quantico.

The boys shivered no longer. And they thanked Gordon Reese, the Red Cross and The Brotherhood of St. Andrew for their thoughtful attention.

Everyone will appreciate what an "opening" this little incident gave the camp secretary. It established him as their friend; it gave him prestige. They thanked him personally, and wrote letters to the headquarters of the Army and Navy Department expressing their appreciation of Mr. Titsworth's good offices.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION GETS NEW COURSE AT SEWANEE

Results from Recent Meeting of Provincial Board

SEWANEE, TENNESSEE.—The Executive Committee of the Board of Religious Education of the Province of Sewanee met at Sewanee recently.

The committee perfected a pamphlet called "Training for Christian Service in the Province of Sewanee"; considered plans for the development of the system of religious education in the province, involving the education of women, the training of laymen for Christian service, and the extension of Summer training schools for Church workers, and approved a plan of diocesan co-operation, which, when perfected, will create an extensive organization of field workers and parish correspondents working in harmony with the Provincial Board.

The Faculty of the University of the South was asked to provide courses in Christian Service in the University, both for regular students and for such special students as might desire to equip themselves as lay readers, lay missionaries, Y. M. C. A. workers, Sunday school workers, Brotherhood workers, workers with boys, etc.

The Board meets next in August at Sewanee during the session of the Summer Training School for Workers.

Shortly after the adjournment of the committee the University authorities arranged a course, covering the scholastic year, to special students wishing to qualify as social workers, lay missionaries, Sunday school teachers, etc. The course, which leads to a certificate of proficiency, includes Bible, public speaking, English, sociology, ethics and Christian evidences, Bible history, Prayer Book, religious pedagogy, and practical work in Sunday school, social service, etc., assigned, supervised and graded as laboratory work.

DULUTH AUXILIARY FAVORS WOMEN ON MISSIONS BOARD

Would Have Members of Board Elect Women Co-workers

One of the most absorbing topics of discussion in the Woman's Auxiliary this year is the question of the recommendations to the Board of Missions made by the Joint Committee of the Board and the Auxiliary. The women of the diocese of Duluth discussed this subject at a recent meeting. Mrs. J. D. Morrison, president of the branch, has written THE CHURCHMAN the following account of that discussion:

"We held our Winter board meeting of the diocesan Woman's Auxiliary here last week and I then read aloud the symposium that appeared in THE CHURCHMAN last May, and the other opinions in regard to the recommendations I have since seen. We talked it all over at length, and decided that we (all) thought there should be a national organization of the Woman's Auxiliary, and that sections 1 and 2 receive our approval.

"In regard to section 3 we think that the 'term of office' of the secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary (appointed by the Board of Missions) should not, however, coincide with that of the president of the board. The reason being that, in case the president died suddenly, it would be some time before another could be elected, and meantime we would be without a Woman's Auxiliary secretary, at the same time, as without a president. Her office should hold over until the new president had an opportunity of getting his hand on things in general.

"Article 4 received our approval. Article 5 we would change to read, 'There shall be an executive committee consisting of sixteen members, eight of whom shall be elected by the Board of Missions, and eight by the provincial organizations, one from each province.'

"This would eliminate the article 6. You see we are western enough to think it all right to have women on the Board of Missions. It may be that we are also unsophisticated enough to think readily along these lines. It takes experience to give wisdom. It is true that California, unsuccessfully perhaps, tried the experiment of women in the 'House'. But this wise provision, that the Board of Missions elect the eight women to sit with them, would make it quite possible for the board to choose or reject those who might be not quite to their taste, or, in their judgment, unwise to place in the office.

"I think Miss Delafield is quite a statesman. She sees the possibility ahead of provincial organizations taking their own ways, and under imaginable circumstances forming an independent organization of their own. Personally, I think that women on the board would, for a time, make little difference in the working out of things, for the right kind of women would be very careful not to antagonize the majority; while on the other hand I feel sure that the men would recognize the fact that the women had taken time, and thought, and had really studied the conditions, and needs and plans that would be brought before them, at the meetings, and therefore that their opinion would be of value to the whole body."

DULUTH

St. Paul's Church Consecrated—On Sexagesima Sunday the Rt. Rev. J. D. Morrison consecrated St. Paul's church. Several of the clergy were present, all old rectors having been invited The Rev. C. A. Cummings was the only one who could accept, and he acted as chaplain to the Bishop. The Rev. W. E. Harmann carried the Bishops' crozier and the Revs. T. J. E. Wilson and E. D. Weed read the morning prayer. The Bishop was celebrant and a large number communed. The sermon by the Rev. George Craig Stewart was a brilliant presentment of the place of religion in this time of catastrophe and trial. Dr. Stewart also preached in the evening on "Rational Optimism". An augmented choir with a full orchestral assistance rendered a rich and appropriate service for the day and occasion. Large congregations were present, though the temperature was bitterly cold.

DENVER

Daughters of the King—The members of St. Peter's parish take a just pride in their convenient guild-room. Having realized that the continual expense of hiring room for every social or money-raising affair took a large percentage of possible profit, it was determined to own a suitable room themselves. As the matter was talked over, parish needs seemed to increase and the result was the acceptance of a plan which included a future rectory over a large basement room to be built at once for present parish use and to be followed as finances permitted by the entire structure. The basement foundations stretch up their walls three feet above the ground, so the room has plenty of windows, is large, well-lighted, and amply equipped.

To this practical guild-room the "Daughters of the King" were bidden for their seventeenth local assembly meeting on Thursday evening, February 7. Each Daughter was asked to bring her lunch, and hot coffee was served. Thirty came and a delightfully informal get-together supper was enjoyed. The business meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. W. W. Colvin. The devotions were led by the Rev. Harry Watts, rector of St. Peter's. Miss Juliet C. Smith, a recent and valuable addition to the order in Colorado, was the speaker of the evening. Her subject was "Privilege and Responsibility". She made us glad that we were believers in the religion which represents God the Father as seeking man, begging him to come to Him; God the Son as our best friend, who redeems us; God the Holy Ghost who comforts and guides us in all perplexities; glad of our belief in immortality; glad of our Bibles, of the "Orders" in our church, of our Prayer Book with its liturgies. "Oh! how much better we ought to be than we are!"

In speaking of our responsibility she quoted the text: "Ye shall not see my face unless your brother be with you." We must pass on our privileges, must help others, lead others to Him, pray for them and with them, "heart to heart talk with God", and often we must partake of that "Heavenly food" which gives us strength and grace to do His will.

Mrs. Johnson Convalescent—We are glad to report that the bishop's wife, Mrs. I. P. Johnson, who has been in St. Luke's Hospital the past week following a serious operation, has passed the danger point and is convalescing nicely.

$5,000 in Ten Minutes—Bishop Tuttle recently visited St. George's parish, St. Louis, and confirmed a class of twenty. At a dinner given under the auspices of the Church Committee in the parish house a few nights before, $5,000 was raised in ten minutes to apply on the debt which has been resting on St. George's ever since the present plant was erected nearly thirty years ago. Many subscriptions have been already promised toward the payment of another $5,000 on the debt. Under the wide awake leadership of the Rev. Benjamin T. Kemerer, who is back at St. George's again after campaigning for a number of months in the interests of the General Board of Religious Education, St. George's is very busy in all kinds of good works for Christ and humanity.

Final Payment Made—The children of the Sunday school of St. Alban's mission are just rejoicing in the success of their efforts to complete the payments on the new organ for the chapel. A little over a year ago the balance was $230. This amount has all been paid and the children have now pledged themselves to raise the necessary funds for the interior decorations of the church, which it is hoped may soon be built. The pastor of St. Alban's is the Rev. H. N. O'Connor, of the staff of the cathedral.

NEWARK

Day of Devotion—The clergy of the diocese met at Trinity cathedral and Trinity house, Newark, recently, on invitation of the bishops for a Day of Devotion and Conference. About seventy-five were present, a very good number in view of the absentees for duty, the delays on the railways and the number of clergy in the Government service. Bishop Stearly had charge of the devotional service and the morning addresses, speaking of the importance of the personal character of the minister, his proper message and his work of ministration. In the afternoon the address was made by Bishop Lines, concerning the special duty of the clergy and the people toward the soldiers and the military camps; the influence of the War upon religion; the recruiting of the ministry from among the soldiers whose minds may be turned to a desire to take up religious work.

Personal—The Rev. Wm. O. Leslie, Jr., has entered upon the rectorship of Holy Cross church, Jersey City.

Farewell Dinner—Recently three hundred people came together at Jersey City for a farewell dinner for the Rev. Sidney E. Sweet, who has resigned St. Stephen's to accept the rectorship of St. Paul's church, Columbus, Ohio. It was a very remarkable gathering; a great testimony to the regard in which Mr. Sweet is held. Brief addresses were made by the two bishops, Judge Tennant, the Rev. Dr. Stoddard and others. The Rev. Carl Stridsberg has sailed for France for the Y. M. C. A. service. The Rev. C. W. Popham and the Rev. E. L. Cook are in service at Camp Dix. The Rev. Mr. Mabry as chaplain in the Regular Army is in France. Several other clergymen are expecting soon to be away in similar service.

Church Club Meets—The Diocesan Church Club met on the evening of February 4. Addresses were made on "Our Duty Towards the Colored People" by the Rev. Dr. Patton and Mr. William J. Scheffelin.

NEW YORK

At Grace Church—Preparations are being made for the bishop's annual visitation for confirmation. The rector, Dr. Slattery, has begun his instructions on Friday afternoons in Grace chantry. The Men's League held its annual meeting in the choir house on the eleventh, and listened to a most interesting address from Mr. Lawrence Chamberlain, who has recently returned from France.

Besides the contribution of $49,473.72 made by the parish for the War Commission and the $4,084.97 given for Mrs. Whipple's work in Italy, other forms of war relief are steadily going on in the parish. Red Cross Auxiliary 77 meets in Grace House for the making of surgical dressings every Tuesday afternoon from half past two to half past five, every Thursday evening from eight to ten, and every Friday morning from ten to half past twelve. And on Friday mornings also a committee of Section D of this Auxiliary (formerly known as the Comforts Committee) meets in Grace House to give out wool for knitting for both the Army and the Navy, and to receive completed work. At the chapel, Red Cross Auxiliary 49 has meetings every week day evening except Saturday. In this Auxiliary there are eighty-seven enroled working members; and since November, when the work began, 680 articles have been forwarded from the chapel, including bed-sheets, pajamas, bed-socks, hot-water bag covers, socks, helmets, sweaters, mufflers, and wristlets. At the Neighborhood House the Knitting Class has met on Saturday evenings to make socks for soldiers and sailors.

Porto Rico Meeting—On Sunday afternoon, March 3, a meeting in the interests of Porto Rico will be held at the Colony Club. March 2 is the anniversary of the granting of the citizenship to the Porto Ricans. Dr. John Finley, president of the University of the State of New York; Dr. John Barrett, director general of the Pan-American Union, and Signor Felix Cordova Davila, resident commissioner of Porto Rico at Washington, will speak. This meeting is being given by the Club, but is of special interest to members of the Woman's Auxiliary, who are also members of the Club.

Lent at St. Mary the Virgin's—Dr. Delany is giving a series of talks on personal religion in St. Elizabeth's chapel on Tuesday evenings. The talks are so timed as to enable the members of the Men's Guild to attend them first and go to the guild meeting right afterwards. Dr. Barry will conduct a quiet day for laymen on Washington's Birthday. The noonday preaching at St. Mary's (at 12.25) is by the rector and his assistants. The subject of the course is "The Ideal Life" as set forth in the sermon on the Mount. Every Tuesday night there is a missionary lecture illustrated by lantern slides.

Jubilee Anniversary—On Wednesday evening, February 6, Miss Elizabeth H. Wisner celebrated the golden anniversary of her Mothers' Meetings in the parish house of St. John the Evangelist. The Mothers' Meeting was founded by Miss Wisner fifty years ago, and she has been its president ever since. The celebration was, probably, unique in the annals of our Church in this country. Eternity alone will reveal the value of Miss Wisner's influence for the last half century in the lives and homes of hundreds of people.

Church Music—There will be a repetition of the requiem by Antonin Dvorak by the choir of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, assisted by the New York Symphony Orchestra, given at the request of many who were unable to hear the beautiful performance of this work earlier in the season. The tickets range in price from 25 cents to $5.00. The boxes are $35 and $50, and may be had by applying to Miss Martha Maynard, 129 East Seventy-sixth Street. The concert will take place at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, March 12, at 8.15 o'clock. The receipts are for missionary work and War relief.

On Quinquagesima evening the annual service of lights was held at Calvary church. This service sets forth in music and in symbolic lighting the drama of our Lord's birth and death. At first, while the Christmas hymns are sung, the Epiphany star is lighted. Gradually all the lights are dimmed until only the cross is bright. Finally with the Passion-tide music that light also is extinguished and the procession moves out of the chancel. The service closes with the singing of "The Strife Is O'er" by a single boy chorister at the foot of the cross.

Diocesan Fellowship—The diocesan Board of Religious Education has offered, as it has for several years past, a fellowship of $500 for the year 1918-19. It is open to men and women alike. Three points will be considered in awarding the fellowship: (1) The scholastic standing of the applicant; (2) All-round development of character, interest in religious education or allied subjects as shown by the elective courses pursued and the practical work undertaken by the applicant; (3) The ability to represent the Church, particularly in the field of religious education, and the promise of successful leadership in this field of work. It is understood that the recipient of the fellowship will devote himself unreservedly to study and practical work, and that his program, which shall include not less than sixty hours of volunteer field work, shall be approved by the Executive Committee of the University Council.

BOSTON

The Beginning of Lent—The weather that ushered in the Lenten season here in Boston was of an amazingly spring-like quality. After the continuous weeks of unprecedented cold, Ash Wednesday came to us as a welcome relief and many are hoping as a harbinger of a warm Lent and the coming of an early spring.

Lenten services in all quarters of the diocese are being cut down in number, and not uncommonly all week-day services are held in parish houses, in obedience to the imperious demands of the near-famine in coal. It will, for the most part, be a wholesome religious experience for us. More than one parish priest has felt for years that Lent in the average parish had become too nearly a religious debauch and had gotten very far from its ideal as a season of intimate, personal heart-searching and service. Our very generally restricted and simplified services this year will turn our thoughts in the right direction.

The following message from the rector of St. John's church, East Boston, in his parish leaflet, is notably pertinent to our Lent this year:

"It is harder to be neighborly in the city than in the country. Neighborliness is a trait of character into the strengthening of which a little of our Lenten earnestness may well be put. Make a constant effort to be more neighborly part of your Lenten self-discipline. Don't be afraid of the people around you. They will meet you more than half-way in friendliness. Give them a chance, and, unpromising as they may look at first, they will make you wiser and happier in return for the effort you have made in being friendly to them."

A Soldier's Letter—The following letter from an enlisted Churchman in France to his rector in Boston makes it clear that the Church War Commission has already gotten its machinery in running order and that those parishes that are steadily maintaining their contact with the commission and keeping up-to-date lists of men in service before are already being repaid by the expressed gratitude and loyalty of the soldiers and sailors:

"Somewhere in France.

"January 18, 1918.

"Dear Mr. ———:

"Just a line to thank you and the Church for the kind interest you have shown by your letters and package, both of which were much appreciated. No one knows back home how much it means to the boys over here to receive letters or packages from the folks 'back in the States'. It's pretty lonely for us boys 'over here', and it's just those remembrances that form the connecting link between us and all that we hold dear.

"You may be interested to know that I received a Christmas card from Bishop McCormick, of Western Michigan, now located in Paris. I hope to be able to take advantage of his kind invitation to call if I visit Paris, although it hardly seems possible from present conditions.

"Again thanking you for your kind remembrance, I remain,

"Sincerely yours,

Naval Service Club—The new Naval Service Club of the Church in Boston is preparing to open for business next month. The contractors are actively engaged in remodeling the old City Club building on Beacon street, and the full equipment for the club will be ready for installation by the time the work is completed.

It may be a timely suggestion that the effective operation of this club will require the devoted services of so many men and women of the Church that offers of volunteer workers of the right sort from various parish organizations would be welcome to the governors of the club.

Food Demonstrations—The Cathedral Service Unit is conducting a series of demonstrations and conferences on food conservation on Monday afternoons in Lent in the Cathedral rooms.

The presence of delegates from various parishes at these conferences is serving to spread a working knowledge of practical household food conservation pretty widely among the women of the Church. The first conference was held on February 18 and dealt with "Substitutes for Meat".

A very pertinent development of this activity would be the gathering together of groups of men who were willing to be instructed as to the real edibility—as well as nutritive value—of new and varied items on household menus. Something of this sort is probably needed to help stabilize the very practical domestic "law of supply and demand"!

The Harbor Forts—Boston has no less than seven harbor forts teeming with men, old and young, serving in the Coast Artillery division of the army. All of these forts have their quota of Churchmen among the soldiers. Only two of them are anywhere near one of our parish Churches. The Churchmen in all the others are dependent on the visits of priests of the diocese for the ministration of their own Church. The bishop is already taking steps to see that this considerable body of the Church's sons shall have the Sacraments and personal service of the Church with some regularity in the near future.

Personal—The Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, rector of Grace church, Lawrence, and a member of the Standing Committee of the diocese, is expecting to go to France shortly after Easter to engage in active war work for army men for which he is so eminently fitted. Grace church already has considerably over one hundred men of the parish in active war service.

VERMONT

Annual Convention—Notwithstanding the extremely severe weather the convention of the diocese held at Trinity church, Rutland, Wednesday, February 6, may be regarded as successful and certainly up to the average in interest and in useful work. The shortage of fuel prevented the use of the church building. The services were held on the lower floor and the business sessions on the upper floor of the parish house.

A part of the bishop's annual address was devoted to interesting statistics as to the ecclesiastical, military and domestic status of Vermont Churchmen enlisted in the national service as gathered from the card catalog kept at the bishop's house and duplicated for the central office of the War Commission in New York.

The exceptional severity of the weather, with the breakdown of the train service, prevented a good many both of the clergy and of the lay delegates from getting to Rutland. It was natural therefore that proposals should be made for changing the date of the convention, which was only last year fixed for February, in consequence of the rule made by the General Convention that all reports and accounts should be made up for the calendar year. But none of the other dates suggested found general favor and it was decided to give the new date a further trial next year, when it is proposed in connection with the Convention to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the bishop's consecration.

For the most part officers were re-elected. The principal changes were in substituting Mr. S. W. Hindes, of Burlington, as a lay member of the Standing Committee in place of Mr. Charles F. Chapman, of Woodstock.

On the Missionary Committee the Rev. A. C. Wilson, of Bellows Falls, and Mr. F. W. Hayford, of Montpelier, succeeded the Rev. R. W. Magoun, of Fair Haven, and Mr. W. J. Brown, of Middletown Springs, whose term of office expired. On the Social Service Commission the Rev. M. K. Crawford, of East Fairfield, and Mr. D. Clift, of Fair Haven, succeeded the Rev. J. C. Stephenson and Dr. Chisholm. On the Board of Religious Education the bishop appointed Miss Mary Maud Patrick director of teacher training in the Burlington High School in place of Professor Adams, of the Castleton Normal School.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod of New England, which will meet in October at New Haven, Connecticut, were chosen as follows: The Rev. Messrs. A. C. Wilson, G. W. Davenport, W. H. Bamford and W. C. Bernard, and Messrs. J. T. Stearns, H. M. Kendall, Dr. J. S. Hill and Dr. E. L. Wyman.

There was an interesting discussion on the subject of inadequate clerical stipends, in view of the greatly increased cost of living, and a committee was appointed consisting of the bishop coadjutor, the Rev. F. B. Leach, and Messrs. Chapman, H. H. Wheeler and Harrison I. Norton to consider and report at the next convention on the whole subject, including the maintenance of rectories. Interest was expressed in the work of the Social Service Commission, and a desire that the diocese should take a more active part in this department of Christian effort.

The Rev. P. C. Manzer, rector of St. Paul's, Windsor, and chaplain of the State Prison, is the new chairman of the Social Service Commission.

Wednesday evening was devoted to a consideration of missionary work and the means of gaining interest and support for it. The increased apportionments proposed by the Missionary Committee had been adopted earlier in the day and by a larger representation of the Convention. These total $8,000, half for diocesan and half for General Missions. After the report of the committee had been read by the secretary, the Rev. E. B. Holmes, admirable addresses, vigorous and pointed, were made by the bishop coadutor, the Rev. Messrs. Davenport, Wilson and Leach, and by Mr. C. F. Chapman from the layman's point of view.

During the day reports from the Committee on Finance and Audit were read on two important matters to which General Convention has called special attention—the adequate insurance of church property and the holding of endowment funds by incorporated trustees and not by private persons or parochial authorities.

COLORADO

Dormitory Opened—Canon B. W. Bonell has opened his dormitory for resident candidates for Holy Orders at Greeley, where he and the Rev. C. H. Brady will be the instructors. The pastoral field will be Todd County and the State Normal School will give credits for the secular studies there taken. The house opened with two students.

Denver Lenten Services—The Lenten Noon Day services in Denver will again be held for the last three weeks but one of the Penitential season, Bishop Anderson, Bishop Johnson and the Rev. Craig Stewart each taking a week in the opera house.

Personal—The Rev. Thos. Worrall, formerly chaplain of the Bellevue Hospital, New York, and since then removed to Monte Vista, Colorado, has accepted a call to Longmont in the same diocese.

Articles of incorporation were recently drawn up for the Oakes Home for the Tubercular, appointing as the first six trustees the following gentlemen: Bishop Johnson, the Rev. F. W. Oakes, Messrs. Nye, Hallett, James Cowles and Warren Oakes.

CONNECTICUT

Return of Dr. Miel—One of the most interesting events in civic and Church life in Hartford for some time past was the return of the Rev. E. de F. Miel, D.D., from Red Cross work in France. Dr. Miel left for France early in July last with a Red Cross unit, and was actively engaged in the work with General Pershing's men until his return. His stay in France was of much greater importance to Connecticut people than his official duties signified. A man well known and beloved throughout the State, he held warm personal touch with many men of Connecticut whom he saw in France, and at the same time was a great comfort to the relatives and friends of those men at home. He filled a role which meant much to those abroad and those at home, and both Churchman and citizen alike honor and appreciate the work of Dr. Miel in this dark and terrible struggle.

No happier tribute could have been paid Dr. Miel than the assembling of the great congregation which greeted him at his first service, on Sunday, February 3. Probably no greater number of people have ever gathered in Trinity church. Dr. Miel was deeply moved as he faced the great congregation to preach, and both preacher and people alike felt it to be a solemn and stirring moment. On Friday evening, February 8, Dr. Miel spoke to relatives and friends of men at the front, when the church was again packed to the doors. He will continue his connection with the Red Cross while carrying on his parish work, which has been effectively cared for by the Rev. Robert E. Marshall during Dr. Miel's absence.

Noon-day Services — Noon-day services will be held at Christ church, Hartford, during Lent. Special preachers have been procured for these services, and also for the Thursday evening services, which will be held in the same place as joint services of all the parishes in Hartford.

Notes—Mrs. E. Campion Acheson and Miss Bessie L. Franklin addressed a large group of women of St. John's church, Hartford, in the interests of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Bishop Brewster attended the funeral of the Rev. H. M. Sherman, at St. Paul's church, Bridgeport. Mr. Sherman was archdeacon of Fairfield.

PHILADELPHIA

Dr. Conwell's Anniversary—On the seventy-fifth birthday of the Rev. Dr. Russell H. Conwell, founder and pastor of the Baptist Temple, there was a very remarkable demonstration of Church unity. Leaders of all denominations met to express appreciation and congratulation of the service Dr. Conwell has rendered to the religious and educational life of the city. Provost Smith of the University of Pennsylvania; the Rev. Dr. Roberts, clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church; Bishop Berry of the Methodist Church, and the Rev. Dr. Tomkins of Holy Trinity church were among the speakers of the day. Dr. Conwell modestly disclaimed all credit for his achievements as builder of the Baptist Temple, founder of Temple University and of the Samaritan Hospital. He said these works were carried on by others, who deserved the praise.

An Unusual Letter to an Editor—To the Editor of the Public Ledger: Sir—I visited the Episcopal Church at Overbrook a short time past. As I listened to the sermon, I thought of John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness. (Not that Overbrook is a wilderness, nor the people living there anything but up to date.) But here was a man who is very quiet, dignified, with no sanctimonious manner, but a good fellow, preaching a Christian religion that is healthy, modern, and to whose doctrine I feel no one could take exception. He stood erect and with a pleasant musical delivery poured forth a wealth of illustrations and quotations on the fellowship of Christ and man. It was very cold outside, the Church was warm and the seats comfortable; but no danger of your going to sleep while he was preaching.

How many Philadelphians know there is a preacher at Overbrook who is a very unusual man? Don't take my word for it, go out and see for yourself.

War Time Subjects at St. Luke and the Epiphany—On Monday afternoons in Lent the Rev. David M. Steele has planned a list of speakers on war subjects. Miss Mary C. Goodwillie of Baltimore on February 18, Mr. Franklin B. Kirkbride, New York, on February 25; the Rev. Joseph H. Odell on March 4, the Archbishop of York on March 25.

Dr. Anthony Accepts Call to Wayne—The Rev. Dr. G. W. Anthony, D.D., vicar of St. Augustine's chapel, Trinity parish, New York, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Mary's church, Wayne, and expects to take charge by May. He will succeed the Rev. Mr. Armstrong, who died last year.

Mrs. Pilsbry Writes on Women's Church Work—Mrs. Pilsbry, educational secretary of the diocese, has written one of the "Editorials for Women by Women" in the Evening Ledger. Her successful work in organizing mission study classes gives her the authority of experience with which to make "Churchwomen's Work in War Time" readable and forceful. She says: "All our Church work is truest war work today, as distinctly as the Red Cross. Why, the very name is the secret of its success. That great society of mercy carries the Cross as its symbol. The Church is calling up to study Christian patriotism this Lent. Let us not be content with knitting and conserving food; let us also conserve the faith. Let the women wait on God. Let us heed the call to pray. So may we women give a sure strength. So shall we keep the 'home fires burning till the boys come back'".

UTAH

Emery Memorial House—At the University of Utah, Salt Lake City, the Church owns a large club house for men known as the Emery Memorial House. It was opened to men students during January, 1914, completing its fourth year last month. On the anniversary there was flung to the breeze a service flag with forty stars, representing the number of men who have lived in the house during four years and are now in the service of Uncle Sam. The house accommodates thirty-five men.

Red Cross—The Cache County Chapter of the Red Cross, with over three thousand women at work in the various activities of that body, is under the able leadership of the Rev. E. T. Lewis, of St. John's church, Logan.

G. F. S. and the Soldiers—The various branches of the Girls' Friendly Society in Salt Lake City have united to entertain the enlisted men at Fort Douglas. The Emery Club places its auditorium and dining-room at the disposal of the G. F. S., enabling them to care for over one hundred soldiers at a time. A number of associate members are always in attendance, as well as the clergy of the city.

NEVADA

A Welcome Visitor—Archdeacon Jennvey, who worked several years in Nevada during Bishop Whitaker's time, paid us a visit last month. He came on a very pleasant mission—to perform a marriage ceremony. While here he had services in Reno, Carson and Virginia City, and was cordially welcomed by many old friends.

Elko—We are pleased to announce that the parish here has raised its quota for the Church War Commission Fund and a check for the same has been sent to the Bishop. The War has called away one more communicant from St. Paul's, B. G. McBride, son of our worthy senior warden, thus adding another star to our service flag. He has been commissioned a captain in the Ordnance Department, and is now stationed at Washington, D. C.

Trinity Church, Reno—On the 27th of January we made our response to the appeal of the Church War Commission for the support and equipment of our chaplains at the front and in our training camps. By the very generous gift of a daughter of St. Thomas' church, New York, the offering reached the sum of $91.85.

The Indian Work—A very urgent call has come to our missionary at Nixon to return to Idaho to rebuild the Indian work there which he carried on for several years. Nevada feels that it ought to make the sacrifice necessary. We are more than fortunate in being able at once to find a most competent priest to take up the task of caring for our Indians in Nevada. The Rev. Sherman Coolidge, a full-blooded Arapahoe Indian, for over thirty years a priest of this Church, has cast in his lot with us and has been appointed general missionary among the Indians. He will have services every month at the Pyramid Lake Agency and also at the school at Stewart. He will also work among the scattered Indians who have been given land near the larger towns in the State. The work at Stewart is most important as here are over 250 children. We have many baptized and confirmed among them. It is hoped that it will soon be possible to get a woman worker for Pyramid Lake Agency who will be able to build on the splendid foundation laid there.

St. Bartholomew's, Ely—The interest in war relief work seems to be the one ruling interest of our Ely district and is constantly growing. The various Red Cross agencies are crowding ahead. The attendance at Church services has fallen off considerably through this general absorption in war relief. But the more serious tone of our community life is surely a good symptom. The first soldier of this parish to lay down his life in the service of the country has just been brought home for burial. This is Private Henry Yelland. He had gone with his regiment to the East, but when they embarked for France he was in the hospital with pneumonia, of which he died later.

CHICAGO

Sister Frances Retires—Sister Frances of the Community of St. Mary, who has been in charge of St. Mary's Home since its humble beginning in the cathedral parish in 1895, has withdrawn from the active work of the Home. Concerning her retirement Bishop Anderson says: "The many friends of Sister Frances, profoundly thankful for her long and faithful service in St. Mary's Home, and full of regret that her increasing age and responsibilities make her retirement necessary, will follow her with affection and sympathy and wish her rest and quiet after her long and arduous labors." In 1903 the present commodious building was dedicated by Bishop Anderson. In 1897 the first cottage of the Summer Home was erected on the grounds of Kemper Hall in Kenosha, the precursor of several others. The Summer Home has meant life and health to many of Chicago's dependent children. In 1911 property adjoining the Chicago Home was secured. In 1914 a gift of $10,000 made possible the erection of the Domestic Science House, where the older girls receive special training in domestic science. Thus in a few words we may tell of the permanency of the contribution of Sister Frances to the Child Welfare Work of the diocese and city of Chicago.

New Pastor at Holy Apostles'—The Rev. Edward Sidney White, S.T.B., on the first Sunday in February entered upon his work as priest-in-charge of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Chicago's newest parish. Mr. White is well known throughout the diocese for his splendid work of the past five years at Libertyville, where at St. Lawrence's church he served as lay-reader, deacon and priest. During his ministry the church building and a newly-erected parish house were burned to the ground. He was responsible for the erection of a new church and parish house costing $25,000 of which $18,000 has already been paid $2,000 having been granted by the Board of Missions. At Antioch Mr. White organized St. Ignatius' Mission, which has prospered. He also cared for the work at Gray's Lake.

New Rector for St. Bartholomew's—The Rev. Edward L. Roland, rector of St. Paul's church, St. Paul, has accepted a call to become the rector of St. Bartholomew's church, Chicago. Mr. Roland is no stranger to Chicago, having graduated from the Western Theological Seminary. His first cure was that of St. Margaret's, Windsor Park. He has been a delegate to two General Conventions — Cincinnati and New York. He served for some time as archdeacon of Cairo, and was an examining chaplain in the diocese of Springfield.

Rector Leaves La Grange—The Rev. Leonard W. S. Stryker, rector of Emmanuel church, La Grange, and chaplain of the Second Regiment, Illinois Reserve Militia, has resigned and accepted a call to the rectorship of St. John's church, Youngstown, Ohio. Mr. Stryker has been rector at La Grange for the past four years, his administration being marked by a distinct forward movement in the parish.

New Rector at Freeport—The Rev. Floyd Erwin Bernard, M.A., who for the past eight years has been rector of St. Ann's church, Chicago, has been elected rector of Grace church, Freeport, and will shortly enter upon his new work. He will be succeeded at St. Ann's by the Rev. Thomas M. Baxter, who has for some years served as priest-in-charge of St. Elizabeth's church, Chicago. Mr. Baxter was responsible for the organization of St. Matthew's church in 1914, one of the successful new missions in the diocese.

Cathedral Parishioner Made a Novice—Miss Faith Sherman of the Cathedral Congregation, who has done some good wo vith the children of that parish, was recently clothed as a novice of the Community of St. Mary at St. Mary's Convent, Peekskill.

Gift to Canon Knowles Library—Mr. Thomas Wilde, for the past forty-six years a member of the Cathedral choir, has presented the Canon Knowles Library, which is housed in the Cathedral clergy house, with a copy of George Herbert's poetical works. Much interest is attached to this particular volume, as it was presented to Mr. Wilde by Canon Knowles himself on Christmas day, 1875, in token of four years of faithful service in the Cathedral choir. Mr. Wilde is still a faithful member of the choir.

Mr. Bertram Smith, a candidate for Holy Orders from the Cathedral parish, and a member of the Middle Class of the Western Theological Seminary when war was declared, writes that he is now with the 115th Company 3d Pro. Reg. W. S. Marine Corps, Santo Domingo. He is acting as a lay chaplain of his particular corps, preaching, praying with the men, and leading a very successful Bible class. In addition he is working acts as "promoter" of athletic games and acts as librarian of the Y. M. C. A. building.

Memorial Tablet at St. Paul's—A memorial tablet has been erected in the lower hall of St. Paul's parish house, Kenwood, in memory of Mr. E. B. Myers, by whose efforts more than those of any other person in the parish the present well-equipped parish house was erected. Mr. Myers was for many years a warden and vestryman of St. Paul's.

The clergy of St. Paul's have assumed responsibility for the chapel services on Sunday afternoons at the Church Home for the Aged during the absence of the Rev. Luther a Pardee, the chaplain.

Kindergarten at DeKalb—A daily Kindergarten has been opened at St. Paul's parish house, DeKalb, under the auspices of the Drama Club of DeKalb, and is in charge of Miss Lillian Bailey of St. Andrew's church, Chicago, and Miss Sarah Cadwell of the Church of the Holy Nativity, Longwood.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Mass Meeting of the G. F. S. in Syracuse—A largely attended mass meeting of all the Syracuse branches of the G. F. S. was held on Monday evening, February 4, at Hazelwood Memorial House (St. Paul's parish). After supper an address was made by Miss Alma Schilling, head of the Girls' Patriotic League, urging the members to engage in war relief work. The address of the evening was made by the new Archdeacon of the Diocese on the diocesan missionary work. The branches presented their accumulated offerings for missions, which they present once a year at a missionary service. Part of the offering this year is for General Missions and in addition the members undertook a scholarship for a girl in the Philippines. Miss Mary Hanson was elected president for the coming year and Mrs. Ethel B. Mosner, secretary.

Mrs. A. E. Dunham, wife of the rector of Trinity church, Fayetteville, recently underwent a serious operation at one of the Syracuse hospitals and it is now expected that she will make a full recovery.

Conferences on Personal Religion—A very successful series of Conferences on Personal Religion came to a close on Friday, February 8, at St. George's church, Utica. They were conducted by Bishop Fiske and were held on Friday evenings in January.

Quiet Day—A Pre-Lenten Quiet Day was held for the clergy of the Syracuse Clerical Club at Grace church, Syracuse (the Rev. H. G. Coddington, D.D., rector), on Monday, February 3. The conductor was the Rev. John Keble Burleson, D.D., of Rochester, New York.

Missionary Mass Meeting—The fourth in the series of missionary mass meetings held under the auspices of the Clerical Club of Syracuse was held at the Church of the Saviour, Syracuse (the Rev. Karl Schwartz, Ph.D., rector), on Thursday evening, January 31. The speaker was Bishop Burleson of South Dakota. The subject for this service was the "Missionary Problem of the Middle West". The service was largely attended and the offering was given for the missionary work in South Dakota.

WALTER E. JONES.

ARIZONA

Ogilvie Conference—The generosity of Mrs. Clinton Ogilvie of New York has made possible an "Ogilvie Conference" for this diocese. The first one was held at Grace church, Tucson, on February 5 and 6. The first subject taken up was "The Opportunity and Responsibility of the Church in the Present Crisis", and was ably presented by the Rev. F. M. Johnson, Jr., of Globe. Mr. Johnson has been a military man for many years, and now holds a commission as major in the Officers' Reserve. He has been in command of the Globe Home Guard for the past year, and was only recently ordained to the priesthood. A keen discussion followed his address. A "Round Table" was the principal feature of the Conference, at which, in its various sessions, all sorts of important matters were talked over in a delightfully informal and intimate manner, such as is impossible at the meetings of Convocation.

Dean Scarlett of Phoenix preached at a public service on Tuesday evening and led a devotional hour on Wednesday morning. Mrs. Dixon, with her accustomed hospitality, entertained the clergy at a dinner and a luncheon. They were also entertained, at the close of the Conference, at the State University by its president, Dr. Von Klein-Smid.

On Tuesday afternoon the clergy present, and many outsiders, assisted in the dedication of "St. Luke's in the Desert", which has just been established as a branch of St. Luke's Home for Tubercular Patients in Phoenix. This branch is especially for those who are needy and unable to pay what is required in ordinary hospitals, etc. This project was made possible by the gift of $3,000 from a friend outside the State, and by another gift of $4,000 from the late Mrs. Steward of Tucson. At the close of the dedicatory service, which was conducted by the Bishop, an additional gift of $500 was announced for the purpose of building another room, or "unit". Mr. E. C. Clark, vestryman and lay reader of Grace church, gives his services as superintendent, and Drs. Metzger and Watson of the "Tucson, Arizona, Sanitorium", close by, are to give their medical services. Patients are to be charged the nominal sum of $9 a week, which will not half cover their expenses. Doubtless there will be some who will be admitted for even smaller amounts, if not actually gratis.

Personals—The Rev. Jacob M. White of Winslow and the Rev. H. S. Brewster of Bisbee have changed places, for mutual benefit, and each is now established in his new "cure". Mr. Luther Moore, principal of the Winslow Grammar School, and formerly a Baptist minister, has been received into the Church and is about to become a candidate for Holy Orders. He is at present acting as lay reader in charge of Epiphany Mission at Flagstaff, and after this spring will devote his whole time to ministerial work.

J. R. JENKINS.

NORTH CAROLINA

War Fund—From the reports thus far received the indication is that the diocese will raise more than was asked of it for the work of the War Commission. Christ church, Raleigh, gave more than one-sixth of the amount apportioned to the diocese.

For Soldiers—The local parishes in Charlotte are doing all they can for the soldiers in their midst stationed at Camp Green. Recently the bishop of the diocese visited the camp in company with the Rev. Dr. Milton, a member of the War Commission. It is probable that the Rev. Henry O. Nash of Southern Pines will soon be sent there as a chaplain to give special attention to the Base Hospital. Another clergyman of the diocese, the Rev. Bertram E. Brown, rector of Calvary church, Tarborough, is doing work in a training camp as a Y. M. C. A. secretary. If the War continues much longer the diocese will probably be called upon to give up more of its clergy for War service.

Gift of an Organ—Christ church, Raleigh, has recently received a magnificent new organ. It is a memorial to the late Major Rufus S. Tucker and his wife, and to their daughter, Mrs. Florence Tucker Winder. The organ was made by the Hall Organ Company, New Haven, Connecticut. While the parish is rejoicing over the gift of the fine new organ it is grieving over the loss of its curate, the Rev. C. P. Willcox, after faithful service for four and a half years. He has done a notable work among the children at St. Saviour's, the parish mission. Fortunately the parish has procured a successor to Mr. Willcox in the person of the Rev. Charles C. Kelsey, who began his duties the fifteenth of February.

MINNESOTA

Theatre Services—The generosity of a number of Minneapolis laymen has made it possible to hold the noonday Lenten services in the Shubert Theatre this year. The services will be held each day in Lent except Saturdays from 12.10 to 12.30. The first services will be held by Bishop McElwain and during the remainder of the season by the clergy of the Twin Cities.

In St. Paul the Lenten services will be conducted by the clergy of Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Clericus—Bishop McElwain gave the pre-Lenten meditation at the regular monthly meeting of the Twin City Clericus held at St. Matthew's church, Minneapolis, last Monday. The Bishop also gave an account of the work accomplished at the last meeting of the G. B. R. E. in New York City.

Educational Meeting—The educational days held in Minneapolis and St. Paul last week were very successful. Instructions were given by Mrs. H. Theopold of Faribault, Miss Mary Smith of Minneapolis, Mrs. Robert Williams of Minneapolis, and Miss Yardley of St. Paul. The evening sessions were devoted to the teachers' work of the Church schools in the two cities.

A Word on Lent—Writing to his people of St. Mark's the rector, Dr. Freeman, says: "It has always been hard for us to understand how a God-man whose ministry was to be of three years' duration could take out of this brief span six weeks for a lonely vigil and for self-introspection and a larger revelation to His own consciousness of the great plan to which His life was committed; and yet He did it, and it constitutes one of the outstanding incidents in the brief chronicle of the Gospels."

FREDERICK D. TYNER.

RHODE ISLAND

Mass Meeting—The Junior Auxiliary of the diocese held a mass meeting for the Sunday school children of the parishes at Grace church, Providence, on Saturday afternoon, February 2, when the Rev. Royal H. Balcom of Wind River, Wyoming, made a stirring address to the children on his work among the Indians.

S. S. Association Meeting—The quarterly meeting of the Providence District Sunday School Association, comprising the Episcopal Sunday schools of Providence and vicinity, drew a goodly number to Grace church, Providence, on February 4, despite the extremely cold weather. The address on "War Relief Work in the Sunday School" was made by the Rev. Dr. Lester Bradner, well known to his hearers on account of his recent successful rectorship of St. John's church, Providence.

Lenten Preachers—The Lenten noonday services at Grace church, Providence, Rhode Island, which have always been attended by the people of the city regardless of church affiliations, will have this year the following preachers: Ash Wednesday, the Rev. Percy G. Kammerer; February 14, 15, the Rev. Philemon F. Sturges; February 18 to 22, President Faunce of Brown University; February 25 to March 1, Bishop Brewster of Maine; March 4 to 8, the Rev. George Harris, D.D., of New York City; March 11 to 15, the Rev. Alexander McColl, D.D., of the Second Presbyterian church, Philadelphia; March 18 to 22, the Rev. Samuel McComb, D.D., of the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Baltimore; March 25 to 29, Bishop Perry of Rhode Island.

The Lenten preachers at St. Stephen's church, Providence, Rhode Island, on Wednesday evenings, are as follows: February 20, the Rev. John H. Robinette, Trinity church, Pawtucket; February 27, the Rev. Simon Blinn Blunt, D.D., All Saints' church, Boston; March 6, the Rev. Frank T. Hallett, Church of the Holy Nativity, Thornton; March 13, the Rev. Frederick W. Sandford, St. Andrew's church, Harris; March 20, the Rev. Roberts A. Seilhamer, St. Paul's church, Pawtucket; March 27, the Rev. William L. Phillips, St. John the Evangelist's church, Newport. The Three Hours Service on Good Friday will be taken by the Rev. Frank L. Vernon, D.D., dean of St. Luke's cathedral, Portland, Maine.

Committee on War Work—In order to provide for the spiritual care of the soldiers and sailors encamped in Rhode Island, especially in Newport and vicinity, Bishop Perry has appointed the following Diocesan Committee on War Work: The Rev. Philemon F. Sturges, the Rev. J. F. Scott, Mr. William A. Viall, Mr. Charles A. Tompkins, with Bishop Perry as chairman.

Personal—The Rev. John A. Gardner of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Tiverton, Rhode Island, has accepted the rectorship of St. James's church, Providence, Rhode Island, and will assume charge on Easter Sunday.

English Church News

The Archbishop's Reply to Dr. Gore—As I anticipated last week the consecration of Dr. Henson as bishop of Hereford is to proceed. The Archbishop of Canterbury has written a long letter in reply to the protest of the Bishop of Oxford, the chief points of which are as follows: (1) No constitutional rule can force him to consecrate against his conscience. He is prepared to stand by this claim, even if it meant resignation. (2) Dr. Henson was elected by the Chapter of Hereford by 15 out of the 19 members present. The Archbishop knows that some of them took care to satisfy themselves as to Dr. Henson's teaching. (3) Dr. Henson's writings extend over many years, and no charge of heresy has hitherto been brought. (4) He has been reading these writings very carefully lately, and finds (a) opinions with which he definitely disagrees, (b) want of balance, and a crudity of abrupt statement, which "might satisfy some temperaments, but must be painful or dangerous to others", (c) irreconcilable inconsistencies, (d) much that needs explanation, qualification, or restatement, but (d) nothing inconsistent with the belief which he asserts in the facts and doctrines of the Faith, as set forth in the creeds. (5) What appears to the critic to be the "logical conclusion" from certain premises may misrepresent the writer's real opinions. (6) Dr. Henson is "a brilliant and powerful teacher of the Christian Faith" who "accepts without qualification the divinity of our blessed Lord". He has preached the Gospel effectively. (7) Nothing in the "convocation resolution" leads the Archbishop to feel that he would be acting inconsistently by proceeding with the consecration.

Some Supplementary Points—This matter is so serious for the future of our Church that I have felt bound to enumerate the points of the Archbishop's letter in the above academic fashion. The concluding part of the letter need not be so rigidly analyzed. He is acting with a great sense of responsibility; he appreciates, and even sympathizes with the anxieties of Dr. Gore and others. He quotes the Hampden and the Temple cases, as showing that the later judgment of history shows the groundlessness of such fears, and he rather neatly reminds Dr. Gore of Liddon's distress about "Lux Mundi", though he very kindly omits the fact that it was Dr. Gore himself whom Liddon was distressed about, when the former had put forward his views on the self emptying of the Second Person of the Trinity.

The Archbishop also publishes a letter which he wrote to Dr. Henson. Perhaps the most interesting point about it is that it shows the personal relationship between the two men: it begins with "My dear Henson". It asks for a reassurance that, as people are so much disturbed about the matter, he repeats the Creed ex animo, without any desire to change the words. Dr. Henson replies in equally friendly fashion, though naturally in less familiar terms. He does not understand why anybody should require such an assurance, "but, of course, what you say is absolutely true". He is astonished that anyone who was acquainted with his ministry of thirty years or had read his books "could entertain a suggestion so dishonorable to me as a man and as a clergyman".

Action of the Other Bishops—One can understand that Dr. Henson could not have made this declaration sooner, but naturally it could not have been made to anyone other than the Archbishop, who may have had reasons for not intervening at an earlier stage. In all fairness, Dr. Henson's letter ought to dispose of the charge of conscious heresy. It also makes Dr. Sanday's defense look rather foolish; in a long letter he had claimed to interpret Dr. Henson's position as the same as his own. I surmised at the beginning that the charge of heresy could not be made out, and I note that the Church Times was also of that opinion. But some of the bishops are taking their stand by Dr. Gore, and one at least (Dr. Ridgeway, bishop of Salisbury) gives reasons similar to those of the Bishop of Oxford. Others, such as the Bishops of London and Worcester, have announced that they will take no part in the consecration. On the other hand, the Bishop of Peterboro' has written to the Archbishop in favor of the consecration. "I refuse it, in the absence of definite heretical teaching, would be hardly in accordance with the genius of the Church of England." He does not approve of Dr. Henson, he dislikes his Erastianism, his obstructive conservatism in the matter of Church reform, and his position in regard to the Virgin Birth and the Resurrection, but he cannot say that he ought to be excluded from the episcopate.

Letters to the Editor

Why We Must Fight

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Have we not had quite a surfeit of letters defending Bishop Jones and severely criticising the Commission of the House of Bishops whose painful duty led them to call for his resignation? If the Nation were engaged in a war for conquest, or to settle a boundary line dispute, or some point of international honor, there might be room for honest differences of opinion between loyal citizens as to the best course to pursue. But we are in this War through sheer necessity—driven to it as a last resort to defend our liberties and lives against a foe that has no mind to desist, and that began the War without a worthy cause.

Bishop Jones charges the Commission of Bishops with maintaining that war is not an un-Christian thing, insinuating that they believe in the principle of settling differences and disputes between nations by war rather than by peaceful means and methods. Bishop Jones knows that the Allies have been defending us, as well as themselves, against the Hun for the last three years and more, making the greatest sacrifice of men and means, and he ought to understand that every sense of decency and honor, as well as our own safety, made it morally necessary that we should share with them their sacrifices.

We must either help to fight to a finish this War or suffer ourselves and our Allies to be trampled under foot by the most unscrupulous and desperate foe the world has ever seen. It is a foe which shows no respect for rival or neutral powers, makes no difference between civilians, whether men, women or children, commits arson, murder, rape and robbery in city and village without reserve or limit, as Belgium, northern France, Poland and Serbia bear witness, and if not checked in its mad career there is no telling where its hellish work will end. This is the character of the mad beast we are up against and which Bishop Jones and his defenders would have us tolerate rather than resist with the only forces which can prove effective.

This is no time for neutrality or pacifism, "He that is not with me is against me". To oppose resistance to such a foe as Prussia today is to give aid and comfort to the enemy, and what short is that of treason?

A Suggestion

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Your editorial entitled "The Pews We Own" emboldens me to venture a remark which I have long had a desire to make. Churches with rented pews are not considered in the thought which has been in my mind. In these many of us have often stood and waited while we saw vacant pews all around. In these the stranger must expect to take what he can get.

But as to churches with free seats I beg to offer a suggestion, namely, that they abolish all the business of ushers, and let it be understood that the church is a house of God and the people, not a private corporation belonging to any little section of society. With the right idea of a church as a place for all, would it not be understood that a personal welcome is not only not necessary but is even officious? If anyone feels inclined to extend a friendly hand, either before or after the service of worship, that is another matter.

Mr. Odell's Article

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

The article, "Peter sat by the fire warming himself", in the Atlantic Monthly for February, reads like a strong indictment of the Church, but after careful analysis most of the points fall to the ground. Mr. Odell's principal complaint seems to be that no great spiritual leader arose to urge this nation into the World War. He points to Cardinal Mercier as the kind of leader we should produce. But conditions here are different. The great Cardinal is the leader of a compact people who belong to one Church. We are an immense scattered nation divided in race and religious belief. The Cardinal rallied a martyr nation to loyalty and endurance. We were asked to arouse a prosperous nation, which knew no suffering and was not yet sure of its duty. The difficulty of leadership is seen in the fact that in this article Mr. Odell himself gives little that is positive, but spends himself in negative criticism. It is true that there has been no outstanding figure among the clergy, but the level of leadership has been high. The clergy have been patriotic and effective and the Government makes constant use of their influence.

Though Mr. Odell is writing a criticism of the Church, his real attack is upon the clergy. He tells us that laymen have become the leaders, and gives a list of those who prove German atrocities and arouse the nation to righteous indignation. It is strange to hear a Congregational minister speaking as though the laity were not part of the Church. To every order in the Church its own task. This direct war work is legitimate work for our laymen, but one would hardly wish to see the clergy shouting for war and preaching a gospel of hate. Nor do we like his implication that our Lord in this generation would be a preacher of war.

Mr. Odell rebukes the German ministry because they did not restrain the kaiser from war, and then complains of the ministry of America because they did not push our people and Government into the conflict.

Mr. Odell does not seem to see that the preacher must be something more than a recruiting sergeant, and that the winning of the War, which is the essential task laid upon us today, is nevertheless only part of a greater cause. I hope the leadership of the Church may be something larger than Mr. Odell's conception of it. The Kingdom of God is many sided. The Christian leader must observe all sides, even though the man who sees nothing but the War call him pacifist. The clergy support the War and will not compromise. But war cannot do all. War may remove the obstacles to progress but it cannot rebuild, anymore than the surgeon's knife can rebuild the tissues of the body. The Church must do the work of spiritual preparedness so that the soul of man may be ready to rise and build the new world.

On Filling Vacant Cures

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I liked the suggestion in a letter you published last week to the effect that some more practicable way of filling vacant cures should be secured. We know too well the many undignified methods now in use, and we know also how frequently wrong elections and apportionments occur. In a Church of the importance and the size of ours it must be that there is work for all, and that there is work in sufficient variety to employ the special talents of all and call forth the best that is in them.

Is it too much to hope that some sort of central clearing house might be established where the needs of vacant parishes would be considered and also where the abilities of the clergy, based on what they have actually done, and not upon their possession of money or "influence" should be known? Perhaps in this way might be developed some adequate system of promotion.

Women's Vote

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

It may have been the expression of a pious hope when you said in a November issue of THE CHURCHMAN, "The women of America are willing to assume the burden" of making a perceptible dent on the great mass of male voters, but you stated it as a fact, and as a statement of fact it is false and misleading. The vote of New York is not the vote of America. The desire of the women of America to assume the burdens of government has never been put to the test of a vote of the women, and whenever the question has been left to the vote of the men of their families and acquaintance, and not merely members of the legislatures during the last four years, except in Nevada and Montana, the vote has been against it, and the majority against has been more than eight hundred thousand. In Maine this year the vote was two to one against, while in New York the vote in favor was only six to five and the majority was less than one-third of the socialist vote in New York City, and Mr. Hillquit claims the credit for the victory of the suffragist. And now in their celebration of their victory in New York the women who have gained the suffrage declare they will use it first of all to control the election of members of Congress throughout the country, so as to bring about a Federal amendment by a vote of Congress and the legislatures of the several states without a vote of the people. When the great body of women are really desirous of assuming the burdens of the suffrage the men of their own states will give it to them, but it ought not to be forced upon them by the vote of the pro-suffrage women of New York, and some other states, through their political control of Congressional and Presidential electors.

LE MORTE DARTHUR

LE MORTE DARTHUR OF SIR THOMAS MALORY AND ITS SOURCES. Vida D. SCUDDER: $3.50. (E. P. Dutton and Company.)

POSSIBLY at no time within a century has the story of Arthur and his Fellowship of the Round Table borne such significance for the English-speaking peoples as it does at the present moment.

This epic of a civilization, crude indeed and full of startling inconsistencies, but still an order founded on self-restraint and a code of laws, gradually coalescing into being round the splendid figure of the young King Arthur, flowering into a few years of high spiritual endeavor, and then after a period of disintegration due to its own inherent frailties crashing down into magnificent disaster, is a picture which may well claim the attention of the world today, when another civilization, founded theoretically on the same Christian virtues is fighting for its life against similar evils.

For the twentieth-century reader, accustomed in his contemporary reading matter to scrappiness, cheapness and obviousness, and unfamiliar with the Arthurian literature of which Malory's work is the glorious flower, the Morte Darthur certainly presents some difficulties; yet the lovely country covered by the wide sweeps and windings of Malory's narrative is worth a little trouble at the outset, for when once it has been entered and the way is known, its enchanted forest glades, its shining castles and its noble chivalry offer perpetual refreshment and release. As a guide to the beauties of this splendid heritage of ours Miss Vida Scudder's new book, The Morte Darthur of Sir Thomas Malory and Its Sources, will take high rank.

Based upon the author's lectures on the Morte through some fifteen years of classwork at Wellesley College, her book bears little trace of its scholastic origin, except possibly in the precision of its arrangement.

A lay author might have been tempted into displaying his most popular wares first and so have begun with an analysis of the Morte. Not so Professor Scudder. She makes her readers take things in their logical order and plant their feet firmly on the solid ground before breathing the magic air of Logres. But luckily Miss Scudder is one of the few who can write an historical introduction without pedantry or dulness, and the sketch of the origins and growth of Arthurian tradition which forms Part One of her book is an admirable piece of work.

By taking the Chronicles, the French Verse Romances, the French Prose Romances, the Merlin Romances, the Lancelot Romances and the English Romances separately she is able to show us how, like a rich mosaic, the Arthur story, as we have it in Malory, was built up piece by piece from fragments which often had quite a different origin. Lancelot, the real hero of the Morte, for instance, came into literature quite independently of Arthur, as did the Grail, and as did Tristan and Yseult. In fact, Miss Scudder demonstrates clearly how, in the days when stories were told instead of printed and when originality consisted in retelling an old tale with new detail, popular stories grew and evolved and attracted to themselves unblushingly material belonging elsewhere, just as any other living organism does. But, as Miss Scudder says, in order to do Malory justice one must forget about his sources and consider his book as an integral work of art.

The elaborate analysis of the Morte which forms Part Two of Miss Scudder's book enables the reader to get the thorough understanding of Malory's aims and the bird's-eye view of the entire action of the story which together are necessary if one is to see his work as a whole. It is this section of Miss Scudder's book which will prove especially useful and attractive to the ordinary reader, just as sections One and Three, containing respectively the historical and the critical matter, may be of more value to the erudite. No one can follow Miss Scudder carefully and sympathetically and ever be lost again in the winding paths and the vague shadows of Logres. She gives us a clue to the labyrinth and with this in hand we can watch in the first seven books of the Morte the formation of the Table Round and the apex of its glory. And then in turn unroll before us the pageants of the three great loyalties of the mediæval knight that to his lady (Tristram and Isoud, Books viii-x), that to his church (The Grail, Books xi-xvii), and that to his king (Gawain, Books xviii-xxi).

The critical exegesis demanded by a book which is to serve other purposes than that of a mere popular introduction is relegated to Part Three, in which Professor Scudder deals with the vexed question whether Malory did really have the French original from which he apparently quotes, or whether he himself did the weaving and interweaving from the old sources which went to produce his great masterpiece. She leans to the latter solution, in view of the difference which the Morte shows, not only in style but in plan, from all other fifteenth century transcripts. Miss Scudder sums up with the claim that Malory's Morte Darthur in its crystallization of the weight and force of a whole epoch is the most important single book produced in England during the Middle Ages.

This may be true—possibly it is—but for the ordinary reader the importance of the Morte as a valid social document will always be secondary to its charm as a deathless romance; and this charm is now the more easily accessible to all, thanks to this sympathetic and admirable volume which Miss Scudder has given us.

THE SHORT COURSE SERIES

THE SHORT COURSE SERIES. TWO VOLUMES: The Expository Values of the Revised Version. By George Milligan, D.D.; Belief and Life. By W. B. Selbie, D.D.; The Prophecy of Micah. By Arthur J. Tait, D.D. Charles Scribner's Sons. 75c each.

THESE scholarly little red bound books carry us back to the days when the Expositor's Bible series was given to us. Their general purpose is the same, to revive an interest in expository preaching. In these new volumes we are to have six or eight connected studies in each, on one definite theme. They are offered as aids to the clergy, Sunday school teachers and others who are looking for short courses on Biblical history and doctrinal subjects. Already several of the series have found acceptance.

In the Expository Value of the Revised Version, Dr. Milligan, who is Professor of Divinity and Biblical Criticism in the University of Glasgow, has not only sketched the history of the English Versions from the earliest days down to the present revision, but has devoted six studies to the practical use of the last Version with the doctrinal significance implied and demanded by the changes in the text. He claims that in removing difficulties, clearing up obscurities and correcting erroneous ideas, the Revised Version has added graphic touches to many narratives, and thrown light on Eastern manners and customs, besides illuminating the close connection between all parts of the Scriptures. The four studies on the relation of this Version to doctrinal interpretation are both interesting and helpful.

In Belief and Life we have several studies on subjects characteristic of the Fourth Gospel. Dr. Selbie, principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, accepts this Gospel as the witness of John, the son of Zebedee, to Jesus Christ as communicated to and set down by a disciple or disciples of His. That is, it is at least two removes from the actual life and teaching of our Lord. He aims to set forth the message of the beloved disciple in modern terms. His point of view is twofold, "Though the words of the Gospel are often those of the beloved disciple, or his reporter, the ideas are as often those of the Master". And again, "In its presentation of the work of Jesus Christ, and His relations both with God and men, the Gospel conveys a message that is as needed in these days as when it was fresh delivered".

The Principal of Ridley Hall (Cambridge) has added another scholarly volume in The Prophecy of Micah. The eight chapters, each a study by itself upon such subjects as "sin", "responsibility", "the faithfulness of God", give us a picture of the peasant preacher, Micah, in the twofold office of forth teller and fore teller with no little emphasis upon the teller. Dr. Tait thinks there is need to rescue the element of prediction in prophecy from which there has been a reaction of late years owing to the fanciful exegesis of an earlier period. There is a special fitness in the appearance of studies on any subject connected with the prophets in a time of national crisis.

R. P. K.

ISAIAH THE PROPHET AND THE BOOK. By the Rev. A. Nairne, D.D. (Longmans, Green Co.) Price 40 cents.

THESE lectures were delivered under the auspices of the Liverpool Diocesan Board of Divinity. They are written in an easy style well adapted to Sunday school use. Though not mentioned, we presume they were addressed to Sunday school teachers. We are glad to note the lecturer says that Isaiah is one of the books to read frequently rather than to be read about. It would pay to have such a volume at hand when using the prophet, whether for devotion or for study.

OUR WEEKLY NEWS LETTERS

LEXINGTON

Services at Cathedral—Two special services of interest have been held recently at the Cathedral in Lexington. The Feast of Lights, for the members of the Junior Auxiliary, was held in the parish house by the Cathedral Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, with appropriate exercises followed by games. The service was made deeply impressive by the interpretation of the Feast by Mrs. John Scott, with the aid of candles. One tall candle, representing Christ, was used to light twelve smaller candles, which represented the Apostles, illustrating the receiving of their "light" from Christ. Small candles, one to a child, numbering one hundred, were lighted from the twelve (Apostles) candles, impressing upon the children the thought of their "light" coming from the teaching of the Apostles.

The second service, held in the church, commemorated the capture of Jerusalem, the Rev. Dr. Richard Wilkinson preaching the sermon. At his request Bishop Burton set forth a special service for the occasion appropriate to the thankfulness that should fill our hearts because the City of the Great King is at last in Christian hands".

Church Services Affected—Cold weather, scarce coal and low pressure of gas have greatly affected church services in this diocese. Several of the Bishop's appointments for episcopal visitation have been postponed by request of the congregations, on account of traveling conditions and the difficulty of making church buildings comfortable. In several places services have been canceled or held in private houses, Sunday school being held in the rectories where this was possible.

Miscellaneous—The Daughters of the King celebrated their thirty-first anniversary at the home of Mrs. C. Ramager, Lexington, Kentucky. Reports from the president and treasurer showed their work to be in a flourishing condition, both as to growth and finance. The organization presented the church with a set of handsome chancel rail cushions.

At St. Andrew's Colored church, Lexington, Bishop Burton dedicated an American flag, the gift of Captain Fred Herschberger. Judge Lyman Chalkley of the law department, University of Kentucky, acting as reader at St. Andrew's, presented the flag. Miss Curry Breckinridge spoke on the work of the Red Cross, telling of her thrilling experience at the French front.

Interest in St. Andrew's church is spreading, through Judge Chalkley, to the members of his "University Bible Class" (mostly students in his university law department), which meets Sundays at the Cathedral parish house.

Death has entered the ranks of our diocesan communicants in recent weeks, removing from active work Miss R. Ford Heath, once a missionary to Japan, who died at Massie Hospital, Paris, Kentucky; Miss Annie Douglas Gray, a real saint, instrumental in founding the House of Mercy, Lexington, a strong, active believer in the second coming of Christ, whose correspondence on the subject brought her in touch with leading clergymen of the English Church and the late Bishop George Howard Wilkinson, of the Scottish Church, in whose memoirs reference is made to her letters; Mrs. Ella Adair Ardrey, who died at Paris, Kentucky; and Mrs. John T. Shelby, wife of the chancellor of the diocese, who died at Lexington. The wife of the Rev. J. H. Gibbons, rector of Trinity church, Covington, and Mrs. R. K. Massie, wife of Dean Massie of the Cathedral, have lost their mother recently.

SACRAMENTO

Pre-Lenten Conference—A Pre-Lenten conference was held at the See city on February 6, conducted by Bishop Moreland, at which fifteen of the clergy were present. After a celebration of the Eucharist by the bishop, he delivered several timely addresses. "How to Make the Church More Efficient in Its Service to the Nation During the War" brought out many rich suggestions, the emphasis being laid upon the use of spiritual weapons. As Bishop Moreland has a son, but twenty-one years of age, serving in the aviation section in France, his counsels come from the heart as he showed how our boys are to be protected. The bishop outlined in a masterly way the probability of attacks upon monogamy and marriage after the war, bringing a wide range of reading to show the ground of his belief and indicating the lines along which these attacks should be met. "Unfulfilled Ideals of our own Church" lifted the thought of the clergy to standards of worship, sacramental life and Christian education which the diocese should be seeking to attain. The conference lasted all day and proved very helpful and stimulating.

Bishop Visits Navy Yard—At the Mare Island Navy Yard several thousand marines and enlisted men are in camp. The Bishop visited the yard at the invitation of the commandant, addressing the men in chapel and at the cantonment. His addresses made a deep impression. The War Commission has been asked to provide a voluntary chaplain to be associated with the rector of Ascension parish, Vallijo, across the strait from the Navy Yard, so that this parish may be a strong center of spiritual influence and social uplift to Uncle Sam's boys.

MONTANA

Personals—Bishop Faber is filling some appointments in the diocese of Western New York, and in Detroit, Michigan, during the early part of February. He expects to be back in Montana for the last week of February.

The Rev. A. E. Knickerbocker of Red Wing, Minnesota, having been called to St. Peter's parish, Helena, spent two or three days in Helena meeting the people and looking over the situation previous to giving his decision.

S. D. HOOKER.

PITTSBURGH

Church Home—The Bishop of the Diocese made his annual visitation to the Home on the Feast of the Purification. In the morning there was a celebration of the Holy Communion, with an address by the Rev. E. J. Van Etten of Calvary church. In the afternoon there was Evening Prayer, with the confirmation of fifteen of the children. The offerings for the day were devoted to the support of one of the "fatherless children of France", to be known as "The Church Home Child". The Home is now taking care of about a dozen old ladies and eighty children, all of whom have continued in excellent health during the very severe Winter experience. The old ladies are engaged assiduously in knitting socks for the Red Cross, and all the older girls and some of the boys are knitting sweaters, helmets, scarfs and wristlets.

Noonday Services—The customary noonday services under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew are being held as usual in Trinity church, Pittsburgh. On Ash Wednesday the address was made by the rector of the parish, the Rev. E. S. Travers. Other speakers during February will be the Rev. George P. Atwater of Akron, Ohio; the Rev. Dr. Karl Reiland of St. George's, New York, and Bishop Howden of New Mexico. The attendance at the opening service was exceedingly good.

Personal—The Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, Jr., of Wilmington, Delaware, has accepted a call to the rectorship of All Saints' church, Pittsburgh, and will enter his new field of labor soon after Easter.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

FROM "SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE". "I read today a whole bunch of The Churchman. I could only pass my hand confusedly over my wrinkled brow vainly trying to realize that this pep actually was coming from that fine old, safe, 'sane', hromidic fence-climber The Churchman. Why, the paper has more of the juice and ginger that we all look for—mostly in vain—in papers than anything that comes this way, and I get them all, nearly!"

All in a Word. The sense was lost when the printer said on page 228 of the last issue of The Churchman, in the first of the series on "Church Usage", "We can 'talk' in the house of God as friends". It should have been "walk". We are allowed to walk, hut not to talk!

Lenten Reading. The editors have been fortunate in securing bibliographies of Lenten reading compiled hy those who are more or less specialists in the type of book recommended. Our first group of books has been selected hy Dr. Hodges, dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge. The Rev. Henry Bradford Washburn of the same school has selected some hooks for the clergy. The Rev. J. H. Melish has promised us a list of hooks on social questions. Elizabeth Cranstoun has compiled a list for devotional reading, and Adelaide Case a list of hooks for those working in religious education.

The Rev. John P. Peters, D.D., LL.D., Sc.D., contributes this week the second of his papers "On Training the Clergy." These papers, which will run through four weeks in our pages, were read at the December meeting of The Club, a New York clerical, discussion association, and will be printed later in pamphlet form by order of The Club.

The Rev. F. J. Foakes Jackson, D.D. The second part of "The Spirit of the Reformation" appears this week. This lecture on Luther and the Reformation was given in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, last Autumn. Dr. Foakes Jackson is a clergyman of the Church of England now teaching at Union Seminary.

The Honorable James M. Beck made an admirahle address at the service in St. Paul's chapel on December 14, when flags of historic interest were presented to the chapel by the Sons of the Revolution. The Churchman was fortunate in securing a copy of it which the editors have been keeping for the Washington birthday number. Mr. Beck is a well known New York lawyer, and has argued important cases in the Supreme Court. From the first he has been an advocate of preparedness and has made patriotic addresses on many notahel occasions during the years of the War.

Our Correspondents. The Churchman has in every diocese, and in nearly every large city, one or more correspondents whose letters are looked for with interest by our readers. Only

Obituary

SOPHIA S. KELLOGG

Entered into rest in the home of her niece, Mrs. Frank H. Allen, Rockwell City, Iowa, on the 8th of February, 1918, Miss Sophia S. Kellogg, after an illness of about two months, aged seventy-three years.

Miss Kellogg was identified with Bishopthorpe School, South Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, almost from its inception; having been the first preceptress of the school secured by Miss Walsh the principal, now more than forty years ago.

Indeed her long connection with the school gave her the satisfaction of training the daughters of former pupils, so that at least two generations of girls came under her marvelous influence.

MEMORIAL MINUTE
THE VENERABLE CHARLES JAMES SNIFFEN

The Bishop and Board of Missions of Western Massachusetts desire to record their gratitude to Almighty God for the life and work of the Venerable Charles James Sniffen, Archdeacon of the Diocese. Loyal and tender in friendship; rugged and original in character and thought; firm in conviction and fearless in maintaining it; entirely devoted to the Church of Christ, Archdeacon Sniffen performed a great and unique work in this Diocese. The congregations that he gathered and organized remain as his monument; and a rarer memorial exists in the heart of many a lonely and isolated member of the Church, whom he had found and brought into the fold of Christ. Never sparing himself in cold or heat, he was truly a Shepherd in the hills. He died, as he lived, engaged in his Master's work. Stricken and bereaved by his sudden death, we share in the mingled grief and gratitude that prevail throughout the Diocesan Church.

ARTHUR CHASE, Secretary.

MR. F. J. MAC MASTER

The Prayer Book Commission, meeting in New York in January, for the first time since the death of its treasurer, Mr. F. J. MacMaster, which occurred last fall, desires to put upon record a sense of loss. Mr. MacMaster has been the faithful and painstaking treasurer of the Commission from the beginning of its labors in 1913, and the Commission acknowledges with gratitude how much it has owed to him. A man of strong convictions regarding what he conceived to be fundamental positions as to Biblical authority, and to the Church and its Sacraments, Mr. MacMaster presented his views with unfailing courtesy and persistency throughout the deliberations of the Commission. His fellow-members held him in high esteem and will greatly miss him and his helpful activities. To those who were near to him they desire to express their sincere sympathy.

Our School Service Bureau

FOR YEARS we have maintained for the benefit of readers of The Churchman a School Service Bureau, which has aided parents materially in selecting the right school. Years of experience have given us a knowledge of good schools which school-seekers will find valuable, and it is entirely at the service of our readers.

In seeking advice about schools we ask our readers to give the following information:

The age and sex of the child.
The maximum amount you are able to pay.
The state or section of the country preferred.
If any special training is required.

With such information at hand, we shall be glad to suggest schools to meet the conditions.

There is no charge whatever either to the school or school-seeker for this service.

The Churchman's Supposed Hostility to Knitters inspired the following verses. We dedicate them to Secretary Daniels.

Knitting

I.

She is sitting, sitting knitting, and her deft
old fingers fly,
But her busy thoughts are flitting to a troubled time gone by,
When she knitted for her lover—
Ah, the sweet gray eyes grow dim—
She is knitting for his grandson, but her thoughts are all of him.
Of the lover of the sixties, who, with manly grace and pride,
When that cruel war was over, came to claim her for his bride.

II.

She is sitting at her knitting, but her unskilled fingers stay,
While her idle thoughts are flitting off to "someone" far away,
Yes, her thoughts are idly flitting to the
France which once was fair,
As she's sitting something knitting, meant for "someone" "over there".
In her fair and happy day-dream all this bitter strife is o'er,
And she's bidding "someone" welcome as she ne'er has done before.

III.

They are sitting, sitting knitting, in the shade and in the sun,
With an energy befitting the great struggle
just begun;
They are sitting at their knitting with the khaki wool or gray,
But their busy thoughts are flitting off to loved ones far away.

IV.

Ye fathers, sons and brothers, O, ye lovers tried and true,
Who fare forth this day to battle, or who sail the ocean blue,
Will it help to keep you fitting, keep you
steadfast, aye, and true,
Just to know there's someone, somewhere, knitting something meant for you?

V.

They are sitting, sitting knitting, young and old, and grave and gay,
With an energy befitting the stern problems of today.
Ye soldier boys in khaki, who land's unseen perils brave,
Ye bold and gallant sailor lads, who ride
the treacherous wave,
May it serve to keep you steadfast, keep you fearless, aye, and true,
Just to know that these brave women do their "utmost" just for you.

I. E. CRANEY.

Playing With Fire

MEN like Mr. Amos Pinchot and Professor Scott Nearing must, we suppose, take for granted that nobody responsible for his acts and convictions is ely to follow their teaching or they would not utter such ivel as is being reported of them in the daily papers. ıe other day two thousand pacifists met in New York :y and cheered to the echo the statement that America nted a Bolshevik peace. They sent greetings from ıerican Bolshevism to Bolsheviki brothers across the . The star performer, Dr. Magnes, declared in a fit of tasy, "I am a real Bolshevik". Professor Nearing, ving mobilized facts and fancy to the satisfaction of pacifist audience, made clear that Trotzky and Lenine re by the guileless weapons of pacifism causing the very ındations of autocracy to rock and the bigwigs of rman diplomacy to rub their brows in bewilderment. ee," they exclaim, "how you can confound the devil if ı just lay down your arms and invite him to do his rst".

Unfortunately for the pacifists' propagandum and their quetting with Russian Bolshevism, intelligent readers in ıerica can discern other objects on the Russian horizon n Bolshevist doves bringing down the German eagle. e read of pillage and plunder, starving millions of ısants, men and women stark mad from the nightmare anarchy wandering helplessly and wide-eyed with ror through the streets. Professors like Mr. Nearing l citizens like Mr. Pinchot are being run through or ıged. Nor is this the darkest side of the Bolshevist :rty to which our American pacifists are sending unc- us greetings. Russian civilization is breaking down. e land for which every peasant has for ages been ıgrily seeking is now his; he is wandering in hunger l terror over vast spaces of his new possession, but he t do nothing with it. He has entered the promised d of freedom, but anarchy has robbed it of its blessing. the plums are falling into the capacious maw of his ocratic neighbor.

The disease to which reformers like Professor Near- are most subject is the mental malady, well known to alienist, the delusion of persecution. It is not unlike delusion of grandeur in that the excited ego in both eases functions largely in limiting the horizon of ught. America to the eyes of Professor Nearing is : vast conspiracy, framed to denude the helpless of their ıts, to trample on the weak and to exploit the poor. th all her faults, gentlemen of the pacifist mould, is t really the America that gave you birth and education l a country? Is it the America that sometimes badly, ıetimes well, has been offering some sort of oppor- ity to the pitiful mass of foreigners that have come :ed, hungry and ignorant to our shores? Does Mr. chot expect the fathers and mothers of the boys who in France to believe that this War is being fought for benefit of banking interests? As the world watches h agonized dread what is going on in Europe this hour, are not in a mood to be told that this is a war of ıitalists, in which the plain man has no spiritual or terial interest.

Some of our amiable but neurotic professors and par- reformers are playing with fire.

What Do You Propose?

N an editorial recently published in THE CHURCHMAN occurred the sentence "Laymen and presbyters are thinking thoughts today that were not in their minds ee years ago." A correspondent writes: "Why so ptic? You say people are thinking thoughts. What : can people think but thoughts. Why don't you pro- e something definite?"

. Rather clever that, about "thinking thoughts"! And yet, upon reflection, thoughts are not always the necessary penalty of thinking. We rather sympathize with our correspondent's impatience with a good deal of vague criticism of the churches which of late has rent the air. For example, for that brainstorm of Mr. Odell's which broke over the pages of the current Atlantic, we feel a certain embarrassed pity. There is indeed too much wholesale condemnation, too much spacious prophesying of glorious things which are to be after the War. So we confess to be in sympathy with people who demand something concrete.

In looking over some back numbers of THE CHURCHMAN during the brief tenure of the present staff, it seems to us that in our editorials on "Remodeling the Parson", "St. Paul on An Efficient Ministry", "A College President on Pulpit Efficiency", we had shown, with what spirit we possessed, our impatience with indiscriminate knocking and dealing with illusory futures. But having done this we began, we thought modestly, to point out a primary principle of reform, a principle to which any organization of Christian antecedents is committed—unworldliness. One is certainly on pretty safe ground there, for St. John began that crusade in the wilderness and with the grace of unworldliness the Christ began and ended His ministry. In every large accession of life to the Church, unworldliness has appeared as both cause and effect. One can be very modest in one's claims on the prophetic gift, to make the assumption that only an unworldly Church can possess the singleness of heart and enlightened conscience necessary to Christian progress.

Then, too, we ventured to suggest that an unworldly church would not forever tolerate class distinctions in the churches, and we pointed out the present pew system as inevitably creating these distinctions. Is there anything cryptic about that? If our correspondent would permit us to use his protest as an excuse for venturing another step in reconstruction, we should suggest that something might profitably be done in the Episcopal Church towards devoting some of its congested wealth to such highly democratic uses as are being pleadingly urged by the Board of Missions and the General Board of Religious Education. Give the poor churches and missions on the frontier equal opportunity for training Christians to that which our prosperous city churches enjoy. Some of our city churches are spending a disproportionate amount of money on themselves. The organizations in the Church whose work seem most in line with Christian democracy are the Board of Missions and General Board of Religious Education. Why? Because they are both concerned with equalizing opportunity for a knowledge of Christ. They propose to give to the boy in the Western plains, in the Southern mountains and in the city slums the same access to Christ as is given in the lavishly equipped churches of the metropolis. But what are the facts? If our correspondent had not encouraged the furtherance of this discussion we might never have got to this point. Very few prosperous parishes are really interested in missions and general religious education as, for example, they are interested in their own parochial problems. If the clergy and laymen in the Episcopal Church have believed that the Church is unworldly, their heads must have been in the sand. Perhaps we have refused to believe it because our neighbors, not always charitably, have so long been telling us about it; but the representatives of the Board of Missions have sometimes reminded us of it as they have compared our luxurious expenditures upon architecture, music and our personal parochial adornments with what we spend on spreading the Gospel among the poor. What do the recent great offerings made for the Pension Fund and the War Commission Fund reveal in a city like New York, for example? Glaring inequalities of responsibility.

When Bishop Lawrence started out to raise his five hundred thousand dollars for war work, he asked one New York parish to give one-tenth of the whole sum. It gave what was asked of it. Does that parish possess one-tenth of the wealth of the Episcopal Church in this country? By no means. But experience in asking for the support of missions and other extra-parochial Christian activities has taught us which parishes are not self-centred.

One dare not be too concrete about the purposes of God and the future of His Church, but if God is love we shall learn more of His will in a selflessness that yields to His instruction.

Unworldliness is a good virtue to begin with in training for the new democracy. We shall not acquire a Christian conscience unless as a Church we are unworldly. Which is cause and which effect we cannot say, but they go together. That conviction kindled our enthusiasm over Bishop Johnson's definition of an American Episcopate, and caused us to deplore class churches.

Courtesy and Church Unity

IN our issue of February 16 we published the Call of the General War-time Commission of the Church to the Churches throughout the United States for the joint observance of the month of March for a time of special penitence and prayer of intercession. Among the signers of this appeal is Bishop Lawrence. Five suggestions were made for interdenominational and community acts of co-operation and unity:

1. "Wherever from any community a chaplain goes forth . . . we suggest that all the churches of the community join in a general consecration service, sending him forth, bearing the ordination of his own body but with the blessing of all and with the consecration of the community from which he goes to the ministry of the Nation." Is there any reason why the Christian heart of the Nation cannot express in some such corporate act as this its belief in the essential unity of the Churches of different names? We can see no obstacle to such an expression of Christian patriotism.

2. The second recommendation in the interest of fuel conservation will find little opposition in quarters where patriotism and commonsense unite for service.

3. The call suggests "an enlarged number of union services among the churches and a united community service of all Christian people in support of our present national duty." We beg our Episcopalian friends in the interest of courtesy and the larger good not to utter too audibly their groans if their rectors ask them occasionally to pray and sing and listen to the Word of God under the same roof with Christians of other names. The War will not go on forever and we can easily restore the fences which have been ruthlessly torn down in the interest of Christian fellowship and patriotism. So let us be as nice as we can, always remembering, when in despondent moments it seems that we are letting go of essentials, that one of our own bishops in good standing has made the request. That takes away some of the ill odor of interdenominationalism that always offends sensitive nostrils.

4. "Whenever it is found to be possible we suggest intercommunion celebrations of the Lord's Supper." Erasmus once said that he had no vocation for martyrdom. The rector of an Episcopal church who ventures upon intercommunion celebrations of the Lord's Supper as a War measure must have a vocation for martyrdom.

One is given to think nowadays that Church Unity is the dearest heart's desire of all Episcopalians. We have commissions to agitate it, prayers to prepare our hearts for it, conventions to discuss it. It is pure camouflage. Most Episcopalians do not care one rap about Church Unity. What we want is dominion. We want Congregationalists and Presbyterians to become Churchmen. By peaceful conquest and a better understanding (their understanding of us) we hope that the territory will ultimately be ours.

As convinced Churchmen we have no intention of being made over into Presbyterians or Baptists, but we ought also to remember that Baptists and Presbyterians are not willing for the sake of unity to be made into precisely the kind of Episcopalians that most of us are. "Becoming one" to, I fear, the majority of Churchmen means that we are to be the "one". Convinced Churchmen are sometimes too complacent.

We suffer from no illusions as to what a certain martyr-like endurance of union services can accomplish toward reuniting Christendom; but we venture to say that the first effective step toward unity will be an interdenominational courtesy based not upon mere sufferance and tolerance but upon humility—a humility that is eager to understand the rich spiritual gifts which Congregationalists, Presbyterians and Methodists can at their highest pitch of denominational conviction bring as their contribution to a reunited Church. We have shown in the past scant measure of this type of humility in dealing with our Protestant fellow-Christians. We have sometimes gone farther to propitiate the Greek Church, miles separated from us in race temperament and moral background, than we have been willing to go in establishing amity with cousins of our own spiritual blood, the Presbyterians.

Whittling down our definitions and "pooling our essentials" will never accomplish what we have in mind. Church unity to be a gain must not rob us of any blessing that we count real. It must enrich and deepen our convictions by new accessions of grace and insight. None of us, not even the convinced Episcopalian, if he remains just as he is today, will be fitted to enter upon the heritage of a reunited Christendom. Churchmen like others must be humbly willing to learn. A finer interdenominational courtesy and a larger hospitality of the spirit will help to prepare our souls for the community life of the united Church for which we yearn.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Community Services

THE request of the War-time Commission for a "united community service of all Christian people in support of our present national duty" points the way to an effective marshaling of all the spiritual forces of the community for our world task.

A score of reasons could be found for instituting at this time community services of worship. But one such reason stands forth above all the rest. When our communicants are standing shoulder to shoulder in the performance of common duty, the compelling impulse is to kneel together in spiritual fellowship. That instinct is unerring and true.

Let no time be lost in every American city and village. Committees from the churches should take the matter in hand at once. At least once in each week, perhaps on Sunday nights, let there be one great service that will belong to the whole community. Together let us sing our hymns and say our prayers and hear the Word of God. Every Sunday night there might be such a service in Madison Square Garden in New York. If the Lenten programs of the several churches prevent such a service, then let us select a week-day night for this act of community worship.

The Month of Prayer

THE call of the General War-time Commission of the Church that the month of March be set apart as a season of special prayer falls upon responsive hearts. We know of no time in all the history of the world to compare in intensity of emotion with the days that we are now passing through. With dramatic violence forces that have always been present in civilization are contending in the open for the mastery. The world holds its breath as it awaits the decision on the Western Front. No responsibility like it has ever been laid upon human shoulders; no day so pregnant with fateful consequence has been lived through at any other time in history. Men and women are everywhere asking: "Will God permit Prussia to win this war?" The faith of millions among the Allies hangs upon the answer to that question. A world in which Prussia is given the mastery is intolerable to Christian thought.

When we fall upon our knees, we do not ask God to do our work for us. We have no timid desire to lay upon Heaven the burden that our children's children are asking us to carry. But we must ask God to give us courage and steady hearts.

Preparation for victory is almost wholly a spiritual exercise. Men and women cannot face the sacrifice involved, unless their hearts ring true. Above comfort, above security, above life itself we must place the Christian good for which we fight. There must be no questioning, no weighing of the cost, no moral hesitancy.

We are not sure that America is yet united to feel as our President would have us feel about this War. He sees in it a Christian crusade. If we believe that, we must hold nothing back. Our consecration must involve every fiber of our being. But such high consecration is always religious. We must go to God for the strength to see the thing through. Thus Washington fought. Thus Lincoln brought into unity the soul of the North. Beside the present fateful crises that we are facing this hour, those were but minor events in the world's life.

It is now or never that the Prussian spirit can be crushed. Now or never the Junker definition of Nationalism must go down to defeat. Russia has fallen, Italy may fall. Perhaps poor France must suffer infinitely more than she has yet endured; but America and England must see the task through.

May the Churches of America bring to the Nation out of this month of prayer power to endure to the end.

Sabbatarian Agitation

WE are not in sympathy with the agitation that is going on to attempt to force a Puritan definition of Sunday upon our American communities. The opposition that developed to the proposed Sunday parade of the Three Hundred and Eighth Infantry seems to us little short of bigotry. Such an anaemic type of Christianity will never persuade the men whom it is trying to bring into the churches. It does not deserve to do so. In the first place, it is wholly a Jewish, not a Christian, definition of Sunday that these people try to enforce. They are bound to fail. They ought to fail. But when they attempt as they are now doing in their "drive of all the churches" to say what amusements shall be permitted to our soldiers in camp on Sunday, they are causing infinite embarrassment to organized religion. We hope that they will meet with total defeat.

Publicity for Lent

A NOTABLE advance in the interest which the modern newspaper is showing in religion has been achieved by the New York Times. On Sunday last there appeared on the editorial page of that journal a strong editorial on Lent—the first of a weekly series of six. If we are not mistaken this is the first occasion on which a leading newspaper has ventured on such an experiment. No doubt we express the sentiment of the thousands of Times readers throughout the United States in offering that newspaper our congratulations.

We Recant

IN our issue of February 23 in The Week item entitled "Church Finance" we committed the Board of Missions and the General Board of Religious Education to a policy for which they disclaim responsibility. By too hasty a reading in this office of a report coming from the Board of Missions we advertised in our news columns that the General Boards were to adopt a single budget system. We are authoritatively informed that there has been no proposal to adopt a single annual budget for the Boards of Missions, the General Board of Religious Education and the Commission on Social Service. All that has been suggested is that these three agencies, together with the American Church Institute for Negroes, and the domestic missionary bishops, might at this time pool their special needs and make a united appeal to the Church to meet these special needs while continuing all usual offerings to meet the regular obligations to the apportionment plan. Fairness as well as fact requires us to remove from the General Boards the odium of having adopted a single budget system.

Students and the Holy Communion

TWO conferences for women students at Columbia University have recently been held under the auspices of the diocesan Board of Religious Education. They were conducted by the Rev. Harvey Officer, O.H.C. The same small nucleus of students attended both conferences, and at the end of the second formed themselves into a committee to carry on the work. The first act of this committee was to send out a letter urging all women students who are members of the Episcopal Church to attend the early Celebration of the Holy Communion in the college chapel on Thursdays in Lent.

We hear a great deal about "our student problem". But services of the Holy Communion, arranged at a time when the students' daily schedule makes it possible for them to attend is one very definite thing which rectors of churches in college towns could do toward the solution of this problem. The students' lectures and the students' breakfast hour are things which have to be taken into account. In those college parishes where such a celebration of the Holy Communion has been arranged for, the students have shown their appreciation of the privilege by their attendance.

Electrocuting a Boy

WE have noticed in the secular and religious press a striking absence of protest against the probable electrocution of a boy just over sixteen years of age, Paul Chapman. This youth is a criminal of the most revolting type; but we wonder whether, if the Benet-Simon tests were applied to him, he would not be found to belong to that irresponsible class of mental defectives who are no more to be held accountable for their deeds than are the insane.

The Bishopric of Hereford

ECHOES of the fierce storm which has been raging over England because of the appointment of Dr. Henson to the bishopric of Hereford have been heard in this country. American Churchmen will be interested in the following letter written by Dr. Sanday:

"To the Editor of The Guardian:

"Sir: I am afraid I find it difficult to write about the Bishop of Oxford's intervention in the Hereford controversy with proper calmness. There once was a time when we looked up to Dr. Gore as a leader in the cause of living faith and practice. He had himself something living to say, and he said it bravely and frankly. But for some reason or other—I know not what—he came to an abrupt stop, took up a halfway position tenable by no one but himself, and has for some time put himself at the head of the party of reaction. What we see now—and conspicuously in his letter to the Archbishop—is a melancholy example of the blind leading the blind. In it he seems unable to get beyond or behind the surface language of the creeds. There is not a word on the relation of that language to the thought of our own day.

"And this bankruptcy of thinking is not only glorified as 'sincerity' and 'reality', but that seems to be the only association attached to those sacred names. Even the Bishops' Declaration is appealed to only just so far as suits the convenience of the writer. The second half, safeguarding the interests of research—which is the necessary correlative and complement of the first, so that they form together a single whole—is completely ignored. It is against such counselors as these that the Episcopal Bench needs men like Dr. Henson as a check and counterpoise.

"W. SANDAY.

"Christ church, Oxford."

It is fair to the Bishop of Oxford to add that, in view of Dr. Henson's assurance to the Archbishop of Canterbury that he says the Creed ex animo, without any desire to alter it, the Bishop has withdrawn the protest which he had formally made against the consecration of Dr. Henson.

The Measurement of Pain

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

DURING the latter half of the nineteenth century the attention of the modern world became concentrated upon the subject of pain to a degree previously unknown. This is perhaps a sweeping statement but on the whole it must be true. The later Victorian age produced a crowd of thinkers and writers who dwelt more or less continuously on the problem of the sufferings of the human race and of the lower creation as telling against belief in divine benevolence as the governing power in the universe; it was argued freely that righteous Omnipotence could have found some other way of ordering the world than by allowing it to become a scene of wretchedness and misery through untold generations, the strong preying upon the weak and every species taking toll of its fellow in blood and anguish. For fifty years this was the favorite indictment of Theism and perhaps still is; there has been a recrudescence of it through the horrors of the World War. There are many in every civilized community today who feel in spite of themselves that faith in the goodness of God is incompatible with our knowledge of the world's woe. Is there any answer to the baffling question thus uttered from a million hearts?

In the first place it is well to recognize its limits. It is not entirely new save in emphasis. That wonderful race, the Greeks of old, perceived the sadness of human lot as plainly as we but they never thought of relating it to their religion such as it was; they did not challenge their gods with it; it was all part of what they called ἀνάγκη, the necessity inherent in the nature of things. Their tragedies show how keenly they felt the pitifulness of human experience of life, little though they seem to have troubled about the sufferings of creatures lower than themselves in the scale of being. It was with Christianity that the new note of triumph by acceptance of pain, the triumph of the cross, came into the world. The new faith gave no more explanation of the world's sorrow than the old, but it brought God into it; henceforth suffering was sanctified to a glorious end for those who were ready to identify themselves with the passion of God for the salvation of men.

But pain as a problem whose very presence is a hindrance to faith, a stumbling-block in the way of a wholehearted trust in divine love and mercy, is comparatively recent; it is only of yesterday. Our forbears do not seem to have been conscious of it; at any rate it was not in the foreground of their thoughts. Neither Schoolmen nor Puritans deemed it important enough to discuss at length. Man's wickedness and the extent of his moral responsibility they were prepared to enlarge upon indefinitely, but so far as we can judge it never entered their heads to defend the righteousness of God against the charge of being indifferent to the ills of creation. They never envisaged the subject in any way; as a difficulty it did not exist to their minds. This is significant, and only shows that the modern emphasis upon this aspect of the relations of God and man is not necessarily a lasting one; it is not one that would be universally made. We of today are like sick children who lie in bed picking out grotesque faces upon the wall paper, some of them horrible and repellent but unescapable once they are perceived. Perhaps our concentration of thought upon the darker side of life has a pathological origin and no more essential justification than that of the invalid running his gaze over the wallpaper; the trouble is within ourselves, not with the patterns on the wall; our vision of the outer corresponds to the condition of the inner. We are more sensitive to pain as a fact and a problem than our fathers were, and that is about all. There are many reasons for this, but the chief of them undoubtedly is the rapidly increasing pressure of existence in the last two or three generations. We have been living on our nerves, and the result shows, for one thing, in the enormous increase of neurotic ailments peculiar to our time together with some other and more admirable developments. The civilized man cannot bear pain today as his ancestors could; for, when all is said and done, no one dreams of restoring the tortures of the middle ages; the people who inflicted those tortures or could tolerate them in their midst must have had nerves of iron. Sir James Paget, father of the present Bishop of Stepney, once pointed out the improbability that the average man in the days of persecution was able to feel pain as we feel it now; the average man of today, he said, could not endure the rack for five minutes, whereas gentle ladies endured it in the sixteenth century without wincing. One danger of the war is that we are reverting to type in this respect and becoming increasingly callous to the presence of suffering. God forbid that this should be a permanent effect of the present orgy of passion and slaughter.

But let us take comfort. When all is said and done we do not suffer in the mass but individually, and no one human being can ever bear or is called upon to bear more than a certain fixed amount of pain, bodily or mental. The present writer has more than once been criticized for laying stress upon this fact in the pulpit, but surely it is obvious. We suffer with one another, and individually suffer more because of the sufferings of those we love, but all the suffering in the world at this moment does not exceed that of the heart that is able to bear most. The problem is thus narrowed down to comparatively small limits; the question is not why God should permit whole nations to suffer as they are suffering today, but why one single human being should ever have had to suffer anywhere. And if we ask what being wearing human flesh has ever borne the most at any time the answer is equally clear. The most sensitive and highly organized nature in history is that of our Lord Jesus Christ, and therefore the problem of pain is simply and solely the problem of the Cross of Christ.

Here we must be content to leave it. There is something unfathomable in the mystery of sorrow it reveals as well as in that of the whole creation that groaneth and travailleth in pain together until now. But if even Deity has had to submit to this condition for the achieving of what could not be achieved without it, shall we shrink from paying the same price in our degree for the manifestation of an eternal good? One thing at least we may be sure about, and that is that the ripest fruits of character are somehow indissolubly associated with the cross; sacrifice is the gateway to fulness of power and joy. This is a law written in the very heart of things. Not even Omnipotence could dispense with it. Those Greeks of old dimly glimpsed a wondrous truth when they spoke of necessity, little though they saw of its sublime fruition in Him who said: "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into His Glory?"

An Adventure With God

By F. W. HARVEY

FAR worse than pain,
Unutterable weariness
Of blood and brain—
Intolerable dreariness
Of days God gave me.
And I bethought
The first fresh flood of youth that rose to leave me,
And how in those brave days—
Virgin of lust and spot—
I had forgot
To render any praise.
Then, as I thus looked upward through the net
Wherein both soul and flesh lay cunningly caught,
God ('twas like Springtime calling from the earth
The flowers to birth!)
Smiled down and did restore
All that I had before.

On Training the Clergy—III

By THE REV. JOHN P. PETERS, Ph.D., D.D., Sc.D.

DEAN BARTLETT of the Philadelphia Divinity School writes me as follows in answer to a letter which I addressed to him, as to other heads of institutions of learning, and wise men in the Church and outside of it, on behalf of the Social Service Commission of our Church, in an attempt to ascertain what is being done, or what can be done in the way of training lay workers:

"It seems to me that theological education is in no respect so inefficient and so antiquated as in its so-called practical departments. There are few seminaries where the whole method and temper of teaching have not changed during the last fifty years in the departments of biblical learning, dogmatics, history and even liturgics. But there has been no such general transformation of the department of pastoral care. If this department is to amount to anything it must be handled in the spirit of scientific efficiency, it must study actual practical methods with the severe thoroughness of the scientific investigator and with the quick sympathy of the lover of souls; it must represent applied theology, it must deal with religion in action. It ought to outweigh in time and interest, for almost all our students, all the other departments, indeed I had almost said all the others grouped together. It ought to deal with so varied and wide a series of topics as to require the services of two or three wide-awake specialists, and not a single 'professor of homiletics and pastoral care.' Now I see no way to accomplish this adequate training of our clergy for practical service, no way of enthusing them with the joy, the romance and the splendid possibilities of practical work, which would compare with the training that could be given them in a fourth year of work in a school of practical church work —a fourth year which would do for them what walking the hospitals does for the medical student. I do not think that our seminaries are capable of furnishing this training with their present teaching forces; new men are needed, and perhaps laymen, who have not been moulded by the old traditional ways. But it does seem to me that such a school (and you notice that I have carefully kept out of the title which I have been using for it, the word layman) independent yet closely affiliated with a theological seminary, would be able both to give and to receive benefits that could hardly come in any other way. And then, if experience so taught, it could later either become part of the seminary (which would then extend its training function to those who did not look forward to the ministry), or be set upon its own independent feet as a training school for laymen only; and there would be no losses, and no serious false steps to be retraced.

"There are at least four of our seminaries so located that a development of this sort would be possible; and they are each in a strategic centre of Church life: Cambridge, New York, Philadelphia and Chicago. Each is in a different province. Could these provinces be roused to try the experiment? I cannot but believe that great good would come. The start would be small, and it would be made without enormous expense, if the seminaries would co-operate. One first-rate man, giving his whole time to it, and aided by volunteers at first, could make the beginning, and test out the project."

I accepted the position of examining chaplain in the diocese of New York at Bishop Potter's desire, and served in that capacity for a few years, with a view to attempting to standardize, and, if need be, improve methods of examination, not only in the diocese of New York, but through that in the Church at large. My experience in this capacity made me feel that it was not only the seminaries which were failing to prepare men for the practical work of the ministry, but that there was a general failure to recognize the need of such practical training in less academic circles. Our board of chaplains established good standards of examination in the New and Old Testaments, in Church history, in the history of the Prayer Book and in theology; but we quite neglected preaching, conducting the services of the Church, familiarity with the rubrics, the administration of the sacraments and pastoral work of all sorts. They occupied a very subordinate place in our scheme, and we treated them in a very perfunctory manner. I got the general impression, I cannot quite say how, that the students who came before us had been taught to regard the training in preaching, reading, conducting the services and other church work as we seemed to do; perhaps also they expected, from what they had learned from those who had gone before them, that the examiners would lay no stress on these matters. In fact we examiners did concern ourselves practically only with the intellectual and book acquirements of the candidates whom we examined; and in that we were following the implication of the canons.

As I have studied the canons dealing with the requirements for ordination and the examinations of the candidates, for the priesthood particularly, specifying the number and order of examinations, contents of examinations, etc., I have been led to desire to simplify them and especially to eliminate most of the specific directions. Some years ago, when I was on the Sunday School Commission of this diocese, and we were seeking to rouse the Church to the need of better equipment of the clergy for religious training of the young, we introduced and passed in Convention resolutions calling upon seminaries to provide such training; and finally a requirement was introduced into the canons dealing with examination of candidates both for the diaconate and the priesthood prescribing an examination on "the principles and methods of religious education, especially as applied to the Sunday school". I feel with regard to such specific provisions by Convention for the education of the clergy or the examination of candidates as I do regarding legislation passed by the legislatures of some states ordering that certain subjects, such as temperance, should be taught in the school curriculum, viz., that it is absurd for legislatures to attempt to regulate such educational details. It seems to me that such specifications of our canon with regard to the examinations as, "the first examination shall be in the New Testament in Greek; the evidences of natural and revealed religion; dogmatic theology"; "the second examination shall be in the Old Testament in Hebrew; Christian ethics; ecclesiastical history from the third century: ecclesiastical polity; the history and contents of the Book of Common Prayer; the constitution and canons of this Church and those of the diocese to which the deacon belongs, and the principles and methods of religious education, especially as applied to the Sunday school", are vicious in principle. Exactly why these particular subjects should be massed together, by this way, I do not know, nor do I see why there should be always only two examinations. Or again, is not the object of these examinations to determine whether the candidate is properly equipped and, if so, why should it be provided that no evidence of such equipment in the form of diplomas from institutions of learning, or anything else whatsoever except examinations by the appointed examiners, shall be received as evidence of intellectual fitness?

It seems to me that the canon should state in general terms what sort of knowledge and how much is required of candidates for the diaconate and priesthood, and that all details should be left to the bishop and the examining chaplains. In stating what is required, moreover, some opportunity should be left for choice; that is to say special training in certain fields, or experience in certain work, should be permitted to take the place of some of the disciplines ordinarily required. It is eminently desirable to maintain a sufficiently high intellectual standard, but it must always be remembered that, after all, book knowledge and intellectuality are not the only or the main things. Spiritual power, experience and personality must be considered, and to provide for this there must be some degree of elasticity in the requirements for ordination, if we are not going to exclude from the ministry some most valuable men. Intellectual capacity, moreover, is comparatively easy to gauge; that is not true of spiritual capacity or of personal power. No examination will determine those things.

It is for this reason, I suppose, that the candidate is required to report in person to his bishop periodically through his whole term of preparation, and that under our canon, in addition to the examination by the examining chaplains, the bishop is also called upon to examine the candidate. To the bishop ultimately, supported and assisted by the examining chaplains, must be left a considerable degree of discretion, under certain minimum conditions, prescribed by a sufficiently elastic canon. The examining chaplains might be made elective officers of the diocese rather than appointees of the bishop, so as to give the clergy and laity a larger voice in determining the qualifications of candidates for ordination, but in any case, it seems to me, much discretion must be left to the bishop himself. Both the bishop and the examining chaplains, however, should have the assistance of educational experts, and such experts General Convention has now undertaken to provide in the form of a Board of Religious Education. Instead of undertaking to define by canon details of topics on which candidates are to be examined, I should suppose the natural course would be to call upon the Board of Religious Education to draw up for the guidance and advice of bishops and examining chaplains schemes and topics on which candidates should be properly informed, and of examinations to test their knowledge. Such schemes should be advisory rather than compulsory, leaving to the bishop and his examining chaplains, under the limitations of canon, the power to accept or reject them in detail. If such schemes were well thought out, so as to command general assent and approval, they would carry their own adoption without compulsory legislation.

Under our system divinity schools are an extra legal growth. They are not provided for in the canon, except in terms of negation; that is to say, the canon specifically directs that diplomas from divinity schools shall not be accepted by examining chaplains and bishops. Our divinity schools grew up in general much along the same lines as those in England, described in the article by Dr. Lake to which I have already referred, because we had no universities. Of our seminaries one is general, two or three are provincial, the joint enterprise of the bishops of several dioceses, and others are diocesan. Most, if not all of them, are partisan. The general policy pursued in all of these institutions has been to segregate theological students, to seclude them from secular influences.

It seems to me that the time has arrived, with the development in this country of real universities, to abolish all theological schools which have been set off in the wilderness by themselves, or rather to transport them to educational centres; and this applies even to schools which have done such good work as Middletown and Virginia. They should become halls or colleges in connection with some university, and in general an effort should be made to establish in all universities, especially state universities, a church hall or college, with a view to the training, not only of the clergy but of laymen in the Church. Were such halls or colleges established, the ultimate result would be that our universities would establish chairs covering the most important elements of the intellectual training of the clergy in the universities themselves. The halls or colleges would provide the religious element and such special and technical training as might be considered desirable for those preparing for the practical work of the ministry in the Church as clergymen, or as lay workers. The result of establishing such halls or colleges in connection with universities would be to give religion and religious training a more definite place in the university itself, to compel its recognition by university authorities, and to bring the student body into touch with a group of men specifically interested in religion and religious work.

One effect of this would be to introduce larger groups of students to themes of study which are now, unfortunately, relegated to divinity schools and divinity students. Is there any greater book in the world than the Bible? Are not the Hebrew prophecies, and the Hebrew psalms worth studying as literature? Are their contents not superior in wisdom to the philosophies of Plato and of Aristotle? Is there anything in the world's literature which surpasses the New Testament? Is there any book more worthy of study than that? By our method of theological education, the separation of the divinity schools from the universities and colleges, we have relegated the greatest book of the world to the study of divinity students only, and taken it away from the ordinary students of our universities and colleges.

When I was a tutor in Yale I made the experiment of offering voluntary readings in Homer to my students one night each week. My class room, which seated forty or fifty, was well filled. Then it occurred to me that it might be worth while to try offering readings in the New Testament to the college on Sunday mornings. My class room was not large enough to contain the crowd that came. I had to ask the president for his lecture hall, the largest assembly room on the campus. Unfortunately I did not make this experiment until toward the end of the last year of my tutorship, and could not, therefore, work it out to a satisfactory conclusion, but as far as it went the response seemed to give evidence of great interest, and I was led to believe that had the New Testament been offered as a college course, examinations in which would count on a degree, it would have been one of the popular courses.

The Psychology of a Missionary Meeting

By WILLIAM H. JEFFERYS, M.A., M.D.

TOWARDS the end of the Cambridge Conference some of us were sitting under the "big tree" warmly discussing sermons, preachers, their aims and results and particularly this question: At the close of a sermon what should it be the aim of the preacher to leave his listeners thinking about? On this point we at least agreed that, if the sermon left the congregation thinking about the preacher, his aims, his manner, his mind, his eloquence, his successes, his cleverness, even his goodness, that sermon might be set down as a dead failure. Such postprandial remarks therefore as "Isn't he wonderful?" or "My, what a gift of language!" or even the exclamation "Thrilling!" are, according to this judgment, "verdicts of failure" or at least of comparative failure. In other words the preacher's mission is not to reveal himself at all; but, in very simple terms, a Christian prophet's first and last and supreme function is not to make himself known but to make Christ known. He is the way to Christ as Christ is the way to the Father. The end of the sermon should find the listeners with their minds fixed on Jesus and the ascription should leave them standing in His living presence.

Now suppose that we were right in this conclusion (we were apparently in entire agreement), then doesn't it make a great deal of difference what happens between the end of the ascription and the time the church stands empty? For instance, does the announcement that the rector forgot to announce that the offering will be devoted to the parish debt or to choir expenses, tend to maintain the continuity of thought or does it tend to break the threads that were so preciously woven and leave the mind flapping in the air? For our part we find reason for marveling at the spiritual waste so often assured by the usual terminal procedures of the service, blasts of music and delayed notices, whereas we might just lay a prayer upon the altar and be blessed and go home with our hearts and minds full instead of empty or leaking badly.

Well, we just happened to be airing our views along these lines within earshot of THE CHURCHMAN and drifted naturally to the subject of the psychology of a missionary meeting, when to our astonishment we heard a voice whispering in our ear, "Please say that in the paper".

We have always taken missionary meetings with a large measure of seriousness, we used even to pray over them—before, during and after. We remember the faces of the earnest and intelligent folk sitting and patiently waiting for something. It always seemed to us something approaching a crime to take up the time, the carfare and the energy of from twenty to three or four hundred people for from half an hour to two hours, either by failure to prepare for the meeting for which the speaker is one-half responsible or by the impossible conditions of the meeting, to let those folks go away empty headed, uninterested, uninspired, critical or bored.

Pulling off a missionary meeting is a good deal like making a pudding. It is so easy to put in too much or too little of something and the result is such a mess. We remember an old cook who put fermented molasses in a rice pudding and explained it as follows:

Housekeeper: "Jane, what did you do to this rice pudding? It tastes as if it had something evil in it."

Cook: "Yes'm, there was a bit of molasses left and I hated to waste it."

My point of view is that of the humble speaker. I am fain to acknowledge that the usual "too much" lies at the speaker's door. Most missionary speakers talk at least twice too long. I have often done it, so I know. The last half is an entire waste—and worse, for it dilutes the first half. I have never heard a real message that couldn't be given in twenty minutes. I have heard lots of speakers fail to give a real message in forty minutes.

I remember a particular meeting at which I was to be the only speaker, my time allowance was to be twenty minutes. (By the way, a missionary ought to be told exactly what time he may count on and what time he must not exceed, and the conditions, barring earthquakes, pestilence and famine, ought to be observed strictly both on his part and on the part of the chairman.) During the preliminaries of the meeting a stray missionary asked for a chance to say a few words and was reluctantly given ten minutes, "to tell of his work". He spoke for fifty minutes by the clock, and after the bell had been struck three times he sat down. I then tried to beg off but it was "no go" and, much disturbed in spirit, I cut my talk enough to spoil it thoroughly. Then, as I closed, the other fellow jumped up and "just wanted to say one more word", and that word lasted for ten minutes. We were all nearly frantic by that time, had missed our trains, were late for lunch and yet that dear brother went off without dreaming that he had spoiled a perfectly good missionary meeting and one that belonged by every right to the other fellow's particular work. Generally speaking, it is a mistake to have a mixed program.

Bishops dropping in are an honor and a blessing, but I have had my just allowance of time more often taken up by accidental bishops than by any other one cause. No missionary should take the time of a group of earnest people unless he has a real message for them. Inexperience in speaking is not a sufficient excuse for not having a message, because the reality of a message does not depend on a speaker's practice in oratory. As one great Churchwoman said to me once, "No missionary speaker has any right to be self-conscious, because he has no business to be thinking of himself at all". If he is fulfilling his mission then, no matter how little he is in the kingdom, he may "go forth as the mighty".

Most often the introducer is the "thief of time". An introduction may send a thrill of welcome and help through the entire anatomy of the speaker, it may warm his heart and give him a splendid start, or it may confuse and embarrass him or use up his time and, on occasions, make him right mad. Let me illustrate. An attempt to define and outline the speaker's subject usually requires him to use from three to five minutes of his time in his effort to hurt no one's feelings and yet gracefully to unsay what has been said. I have been formally introduced at length as about to speak upon medical missions in China, whereas, as a matter of fact, I had been invited to and did speak on mission study and, since most groups would have preferred the former subject, I was at a considerable disadvantage at the start if not throughout. A warm welcome and a personal touch may be a help and are certainly well intended but generally speaking the expression of sincere interest and expectancy goes further.

Let me give actual illustrations of introductions which killed whole and perfectly promising meetings.

Is Mr. —— [pronounced wrongly] in the room? Oh, yes, come this way, won't you? This is the Rev. Mr. —— from, let me see, Where are you from? Oh, yes, he is from —— and he is doing well—he will probably tell you himself what he is doing." (He wasn't a Reverend at all but just a plain M.D.)

On another occasion the introducer spent seven minutes by the clock in telling a congregation in church that the speaker was himself and not somebody else. Meanwhile the speaker actually sweated the oil of embarrassment.

A friend, a woman of extreme dignity and refinement, speaking in the cause of missions but not herself a missionary, told me that she was introduced to an audience of about five hundred intelligent people by, first a rude play upon her name, followed by the remark, "She is not herself a missionary, as you can easily see by the kind of clothes she wears", an introduction which might have been considered poor taste on a vaudeville stage.

After the address it sounds pretty good to the speaker to hear a resolution being passed appropriating $50,000 to the Church's particular work which he represents; but if money is to be appropriated for some other cause, then, in mercy, let it be done before the address and not right after, and don't imagine it soothes the speaker's feelings to apologize and explain why he is not given anything. It doesn't.

When a speaker has done well and made his preparations, nothing is gained by an attempt to make an extemporaneous digest of his remarks or run the risk of making a summary of what he has not said, to put in platitudes what he has spent hours and even, at times, real brains in preparing. "We are glad to have heard the speaker's interesting remarks and we should like to help him in some way if we could. Unfortunately, our collection today is to be devoted to a new carpet for the Sunday school library. We should like to go ourselves to China some day and see for ourselves what the Church is doing for that people".

"They say money talks." I once asked a particular congregation for a particular $30,000, and afterwards a woman in sables told me that she had seen a vision; and a man in a silk hat asked me to go to lunch, but subsequently withdrew the invitation. One poor parishioner did give me a welcome and valued "quarter".

What is said to the speaker by the individual counts for a great deal by way of cheer and encouragement. For instance, after a certain evening meeting, an old lady stopped me in the vestibule and said, "I want to shake hands with you, Doctor, and to ask you to write me a letter telling me what you said tonight, I was tired and slept through your entire address." (N. B. I did write to her and sent her a copy of the address.)

Most missionaries object to the expression, "That was a nice talk you give us", but if the handshake is sincere I am satisfied with that particular phrase, so long as the grammar is *in*correct.

If there is, and there often is such, a small group of the select and elect who feel superior in knowledge and experience to the reception of the speaker's message, let it hold its formal committee meetings and discussions somewhere else than at the rear of the audience. The speaker can see them even if the audience can only hear them. As a matter of fact the sympathy and interest or lack thereof of that same small group of "knowits" can do a whole lot to either help or crush.

A missionary meeting is either very worth while indeed or not worth while at all. Once I was asked to "please not drag in any religion", that, "that wasn't what they came for". On another occasion exactly the reverse was asked. But whether the meeting be held for the purpose of gaining some fresh insight in the Life of God in His world or for the purpose of being amused by tales of comedy and adventure, the social or spiritual forces can be dissipated or conserved by observing the plain rules of mental and spiritual action and reaction.

For a text-book on this subject, it has always seemed to me that the Gospels afford the best guide and that much is implied in the brevity of comment, often in the silence which follows the recorded utterances. Perhaps, even more may be gained from watching our Lord Himself, as when having fed the multitude. "When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a king, he departed again into a mountain himself alone."

Fermented molasses is not wasted by being left out of the pudding, and to know the living Christ and to make Him known are the only necessary ingredients in the make-up of a perfect missionary meeting.

Church Usage

By PASTOR IN URBE

III—At the Holy Communion

AN irreverent habit has been formed of calling the Holy Communion "The Celebration". It may not seem an important matter, but the word "celebration" has too many meanings, some quite unworthy, to allow its careless use for the chief Service of the Christian Church. I remember with what earnestness the late Dr. Samuel Hart, of blessed memory, pleaded against this flimsy terminology: it was not only his keen liturgical sense which was offended; it grated upon his ears. "The Holy Communion", or "the Lord's Supper", the two names designated in the Prayer Book, are unmistakable in their meaning, and we surely can take time to use one or the other of them when we speak of the great Feast.

Inasmuch as the Holy Communion is apt to be a Service quite by itself, and inasmuch as every parish will be likely to wish special prayers, it is not only in conformity with ancient custom but most seemly that the special prayers should be said immediately after the processional hymn. The whole Service then seems to reflect these special petitions which are in the hearts of some of the congregation, and which, in a generous congregation, become the prayers of all. The hymn which follows may be in harmony with one or more of these special prayers: for instance, a hymn for the nation, Oliver Wendell Holmes's Army and Navy Hymn, the hymn for "those in peril on the sea", or a hymn of thanksgiving for saintly lives which have just finished their earthly course.

The people should always sit during the reading of the Epistle. There is no possible authority for continuing to kneel at the Epistle. We stand to hear the Gospel out of respect for the Master's words; if we kneel to hear the words of an apostle or prophet we show more respect to St. Paul or some other than to the Lord Himself. If we wish merely to save ourselves trouble, we put a low estimate on the dignity which belongs to so solemn an hour.

When the alms are "presented and placed upon the Holy Table" the people should continue standing until the Bread and the Wine are also placed upon it; and the wardens and vestrymen who have collected the alms should also remain standing in the place where they have delivered the plates. For these "offerings and oblations" are presented in behalf of all the people. In one parish which I served the senior warden always brought the Bread for the service and reverently placed it upon the Credence. There was a special meaning in his standing in his representative capacity while I completed, as for him, his act of dutiful service: both of us were representing the whole congregation.

After the Prayer for the Church Militant the most convenient and reverent way to allow any, who will, to depart is to sing a few verses of a suitable hymn. Since all will then be standing, there will be the least possible break in the Service. To try to force people to stay is to detract from the serene and loving attitude which should precede the invitation. The provision for such a hymn will perhaps definitely be made in the new Prayer Book. Its use in every parish I have served has proved to me its value. I suspect a hymn carefully chosen here has persuaded many a man that he will accept the invitation to "draw near with faith".

One will naturally remove both gloves upon going forward to receive the Sacrament. Kneeling at the rail, one should keep one's head erect and hold one's hands sufficiently high that the administration of the Bread and the Wine may be made without difficulty. The Bread should be received in the palm of one hand (which is folded over the other hand), and then carried to the lips, the person receiving it not taking the Bread between the fingers. The Cup should be received firmly in both hands; for the priest is instructed to deliver it into the hands of the communicant; that is, unless the communicant is ill or otherwise incapable, the priest should remove his own hands when he thus delivers the Cup.

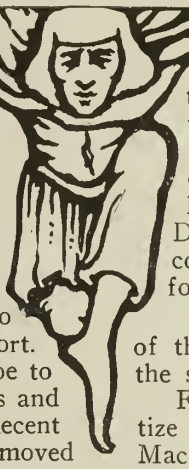
The intervals before and after receiving the Holy Communion, while others are receiving it, should be used first of all for prayer upon one's knees. If there are few communicants, all the time may thus be spent. If there are many communicants, it is probably wiser for most persons, after earnest prayer, to sit down, open the Prayer Book or Hymnal, and read familiar psalms (such as 15, 23, 27, 42, 121, 130), or hymns (such as 101, 335, 336, 345, 658), a list of which shall have been made beforehand. Theoretically, it might seem fitting to remain kneeling all through this long period, but we know that we worship more sincerely if we vary the form of our devotion, and to be kneeling when one is obviously unable to pray longer and is staring about wide-eyed and vacant, is disconcerting to those who are going and coming. It is much better to see that those who are kneeling are praying and that those who are sitting quietly with eyes upon the Prayer Book are meditating upon God's marvellous gift of Himself. As soon as the last communicants begin to return to their seats all in the church should fall upon their knees, so that when the Lord's Prayer begins there should be no movement of the congregation.

What should the private prayers in Communion time be about? They should be personal prayers in one's own words: prayers for loved people and great causes in Church and Nation, especially for one's own parish and those who minister in it; prayers for one's self—forgiveness asked for special sins; power to conquer temptation; courage to do the hard right; inspiration to see the plan for life which God desires of one; the will to fulfil it. And, of course, there should be thanksgiving, personal and definite—the mentioning of the lovingkindnesses of the Lord. It is a safe rule when on one's knees to keep the eyes shut. It is hard to keep wandering eyes from bringing wandering thoughts.

"Gloria in Excelsis", or a hymn in place of it, having been sung, it is good (after a moment's silence) to hear only the benediction. If the special prayers have been said at the beginning there is no reason for special prayers here. And it is inapt to have a recessional hymn after the Benediction. The best close for the Service of Holy Communion as provided in the Prayer Book is either a silent recessional, or the very slow singing of "Nunc Dimittis" as the choristers and clergy withdraw from the church.

Lenten Reading

By Elizabeth Cranstoun



A FRENCH writer celebrated for his epigrams said in speaking of indecision, Il n'y a pas de bon vent pour le marin qui ne sait à quel port il vent aborder, and there is no doubt that in selecting our devotional reading for Lent those of us who have definitely resolved upon the port we want our ships to make have an advantage over those who weigh anchor on Ash Wednesday with mind uncertain and purpose vague. So we will consider first the traveler who knows his port.

For very many of us the work of Lent will be to revise and enrich our private prayers. New needs and interests must find their place in our devotions. Recent experience has shown us heights and depths we are moved to try and penetrate. We feel that we wish to pray better. Well, the Church has great treasures to give us, things new and old, devotions grown in the rich soil of the hearts of her saints. Before the Throne by William Bellars is a very simple manual of devotion for young Christians, for people of average education and for those who through sickness or any other cause feel weak and weary. The Litanies to our Saviour and to the Holy Ghost are very beautiful. Sursum Corda (Mowbray) is a handbook of intercessions and thanksgiving. It was written by Father Frere and his friend, Mrs. Illingworth, the wife of the great English Churchman. Its plan is most suggestive and it abounds in beautiful prayers. It is unnecessary to speak of The Treasury of Devotion, for nearly everyone has used it and goes back to it for wings when the spirit droops. There are many rich collections of prayers in which we can often find just the wording of an inspiration or a petition that we have been groping after. A Chain of Prayer Across the Ages (Dutton) is one of the best. Devotions from Ancient and Mediæval Sources, translated by Plummer (Blackwell, Oxford), and Dr. Bright's Ancient Collects are mines of wealth for those who love the thoughts of the saints of long ago.

The troubled days through which we are passing have brought home to us with a poignancy we have never felt before the duty of intercession and our own grievous shortcomings in this respect. For those whose Lent is to be a time of learning to pray and to give thanks for others there will be found marvelous help in A Study of Intercession by David Jenks (Longmans). The author is a great teacher, and a humble and earnest study of his book may well prove a real step forward in the spiritual progress of every one of us.

As a help in training ourselves in the devotional life there could hardly be found anything as good as Dr. McNeile's two little books Self-Training in Prayer and Self-Training in Meditation (Longmans, 50 cents each). But note that these are only recommended to people who are in dead earnest about learning to pray better. The writer is almost austere and will not let us off with anything less than our best effort and most earnest perseverance, but if we come to him in the right spirit he will make plain to us things we have never understood before. We all know how difficult it is to find any language that will describe prayer of thought or prayer of union. They must be learned by experience, but Dr. McNeile is another born teacher and he puts the ideas within our reach and gives us a start in the right direction.

For very many of us again, the work of Lent centres about the Holy Communion. If our special need is to learn to make better preparation Ideals of Holiness by F. W. Drake (Longmans) will be found very helpful. Its method might be called a constructive preparation as distinguished from a purely penitential preparation which is renunciative. In other words, Ideals of Holiness calls us, having died unto sin, now to put our emphasis on living unto God. Those who know what a wonderful guide and pastor Mr. Drake has proved to his own people will eagerly come and sit at his feet to learn how to prepare for their communions.

To those whose need is to add to their knowledge of these holy mysteries The Wondrous Passion, by the same author, is suggestive and stimulating.

For those temperaments that instinctively dramatize their religion there is a little book by Flora A. Macleod that will have a strong appeal. The Riches of the House of God (Longmans) is almost childlike in its perfect simplicity, but its charm lies in this, that it shows us how to set free the eternal child within us and to enjoy our religion as we have the right to do. One of the simplest of the great mystical books is Revelations of Divine Love (Methuen) by that sweet and tender recluse, Julian of Norwich. Could we not spend a happy Lent in learning from her to "choose Jesus for our heaven"?

And now to go back to the epigram of the French writer. There may be ships in the roadstead prepared to sail into Lent which while not headed for any given port know, though perhaps a little vaguely, that the land of their hearts' desire is the land of reality and eternity. For these too there are fair winds to start them in the right direction. For those who desire to spend a good Lent but who do not know just where to begin, the need is a book to inspire, to create a hunger and thirst for righteousness. Nothing is better for this purpose than the record of a life lived near to God. The life of the saintly Bishop of Lincoln, The Memoirs of Edward King, is beautifully written and as illuminating as it is interesting. The Memoirs of George Howard Wilkinson by Canon Mason (Longmans) is a book that can be read many times with both profit and pleasure. The account of his voyage to South Africa and his arduous work there while he was suffering from acute depression resulting from a nervous breakdown is as inspiring an example of ghostly strength as I know. The life of St. Paul is always a good point of departure for a fresh start in the Christian life; for a vivid understanding of the man himself and of the glow and throb of his intensive response to our Lord's commission it would be hard to surpass The Story of St. Paul's Life and Letters by J. Paterson Smyth (James Pott & Company). You can fairly see Timothy flying around the corner to buy the papyrus sheets for that first letter to the Thessalonians!

A different but a very valuable kind of book for the people we are now considering is one which deals with the foundations of the Christian life—"The Way" as the first disciples called it—a review of the path which begins in penitence and ends in union with Christ. A most excellent book of this kind is Spiritual Progress: A Word of Good Cheer by A. W. Robinson (Longmans), one of the series of the Bishop of London's Lenten books. It is now six years since it made its appearance but it is still as vital as ever and is one of those cherished volumes that stand on our shelf of favorites and grow shabbier every year. Another book of this type is The Life in Grace by W. J. Carey, and still another of great value is Bishop Gore's exposition of the Sermon on the Mount. This last sets forth the characteristics of the Kingdom of God. The book which the Bishop of London recommends for this Lent has a special interest for Americans—The Mount of Vision by Bishop Brent (Longmans, $1).

Women of a Former Time—I

By JULIA C. EMERY

NOTE—THE CHURCHMAN will publish during the coming months a series of biographical sketches of some interesting Churchwomen of a former time who were leaders of their generation.—THE EDITORS.

Mary A. E. Twing

THERE is lying before me a tiny paper-covered book, entitled The Life of Faith. It is composed of meditations translated from an unknown French writer, introduced by some words of Dr. Dix, written in the Lent of 1863. This little book bears the inscription of Mrs. Twing's maiden name—Mary Abbot Emery—with the date Advent, 1870, and in the same even, legible hand, so indicative of herself, various annotations. Among these is the following: "It is an old thought of Christian theology that there are two great centres of the life of souls in this world. The one is self, the other is God. To be conscious of self intensely is the part of a sinner; to be conscious of God intensely is the perfection of a saint; to be passing from the one consciousness to the other is to be advancing in the Christian life."

It was in such an attitude of heart and mind that Mrs. Twing had begun to live, long before she ever saw New York or dreamed of the future that awaited her there. It was this ever-growing spirit of self-forgetfulness that made her never hurried, never too busy to lay aside her own things for the things of others. In a quiet New England home, blessed with a rector trained in the school of Sadler and Goulburn, with Keble's "Christian Year", and Miss Yonge's and Miss Sewell's books for close companions, and already venturing farther afield till Moberly and Pusey and Monsell, and Carter and Hutchings were numbered among her counselors and guides, she came to her work as the first secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions with a mind trained to a strong realization of the corporate nature of Christ's Body, the Church, and that work such as had been entrusted to her care must be built up along the lines of the Church, not of the individual. Therefore, the four years of her office as secretary saw a welding together of separate and independent organizations into a whole, wherein diocese after diocese framed its own distinct part of the common company under its own ecclesiastical authority, while all were united by the firm and quiet influence of the central force which turned back for its authority and guidance to the Board of Missions which had established its Woman's Auxiliary to help itself. This attitude of reliance, combined with the wonderful liberty to which the Board confidently left its Auxiliary, gave to the Auxiliary and its secretary a place of happy ease in working and of honor in the eyes of the Church unprecedented at the time. There are many Auxiliaries of many societies today, and women do much organizing and traveling and public speaking, but how else can we explain, but that the Church had adopted her woman's work as a living part of her whole existence, that our Auxiliary had such freedom as it had? At a time when one of the foremost advocates of the rights of women to a place in the affairs of the world, coming East from Oberlin, slipped out from a Sunday school which she chanced to visit, and fled, because the superintendent had announced she would say a few words and the law had gone forth at Oberlin that no woman should speak in public when a man was present, Mrs. Twing, in perfect simplicity and in the quiet confidence born of readiness to obey and to help, was speaking before bishops and parish priests, as they asked her to tell their people of woman's work in and for the Church.

Woman's work. To those of our Church people who still remember Mrs. Twing, the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions and its first secretary are indissolubly bound; but to some among them she was not only a founder and an organizer, a clear exponent of missionary methods, a thoughtful and intelligent portrayer of missionary fields and facts, a wise and ever-ready friend, a leader in all Auxiliary ways. These few found in her the prophetic vision and gained a glimpse of that seer's forecast which would see in the complex activities of this present the advance which the succeeding years have made towards that future which was ever in her mind.

For on a blank page of the same little book to which we have already referred, dated Advent 1884, we find these added words: "The vision is yet for an appointed time . . . though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." . . . "They remembered who had appointed the time, and were not impatient."

To such a one as Mrs. Twing there could not fail to come that larger understanding that no one association, however wide its scope, however lofty its motive power, can be equal to the Church herself, the Body of the Lord, filled with the never-failing, life-giving Spirit, serving with every fibre of her being, looking to no other end than the fulfilment upon earth of the perfect will of God.

This vision dwelt with her continuously to the end, evidenced in her every service, during the brief six years of her married life and the eighteen as honorary secretary of the Woman's Auxliary. Looking back from the upheaving mass of the Christian and Church movements of today, there seem to be none upon which Mrs. Twing's calm, wise forethought did not dwell.

In 1879 she devised what she called a society, and yet it was no society. Seven years had passed since she first came to the Woman's Auxiliary. In that time she had watched the growing activities of the women of the Church developing on every hand. There was not one of them for which she did not care, to many she gave her personal co-operation; but, seeing "with some anxiety the dangers which accompany such activity", she "with a few friends" added one to the societies already formed, "the Society of the Royal Law" praying the Holy Spirit so "to be with it and to guide its work" that among these others it might be "as the savour of the salt, purifying and quickening them, and making them ever more and more acceptable in the sight of God". It was to be composed of all women communicants of the Church personally engaged in active work for Christ, or who aided such work; its object was the special cultivation of the grace of charity, its work daily supplication for the increasing holiness of all its members and frequent and particular intercession for individuals whose person or work was near the heart of any member. There is much correspondence about this society, so quiet in its operations the story of its life cannot be known.. Only, in every effort now being made towards a loving harmony among our fellows, and in every call to united prayer, we seem to hear some echo of this past, in every present problem of conflicting claims, every difficulty or organization and reorganization, some assurance from that past that the urgency of those prayers shall still prevail.

Thorough care in detail and open vision are evident in all work to which Mrs. Twing set her hand, and the latter developed increasingly that trait in her, which was doubtless an answer to her unceasing prayer for the charity which is such an enlargement of the heart as fills it with the love of God. No one good thing could hold her in entirety. What is known as the "religious life" made to her its strong appeal, but she dared to venture into untried paths, and threw herself into the work for the revival of the deaconess order, even advocating warmly that step by which the Sisters of the Good Shepherd became deaconesses, prefacing perhaps a time when orders under a bishop combined with the secure and sheltered life of a community may work a solution of one of the problems of our day. And though bred a Churchwoman in that school which now reads as ancient history, she went out eagerly to meet the efforts of her Christian fellows and for years gave her time and knowledge and experience as a member of the Committee on the United

Study of Missions, and the year before her death she served as one of the organizers of the anniversary meetings which brought together missionary workers of varied names and societies from widely scattered portions of the globe. Twice she herself had circled it, in addition to the journeys made throughout the United States, during many years. "That disciplined self-control which knows how to create its own solitude and think its own thoughts" gave little evidence of the spirit of adventure within her quiet and most unobtrusive person. In any company she might pass absolutely unnoticed, but, unobserved, she was one who could always see. And so, finally, when she came to make the great adventure, she passed as to a place well known and to a service for which life's service here had been but preparation, and to a Master familiar through the "intense consciousness" of years.

Heart of the Jungle Tales—IV

By ADA M. SKINNER

A Land of Drums

THE Land of Drums! Small wonder that some travelers have given Africa that name, for drums are found in every village and town and their thump, thump, thump is heard all day long and all night long on every occasion. Drums beat out the time for the dancing; drums call the children to school and the people to church. Every grown person in the village has his drum name by which he may be signalled from a distance, and drum beats carry messages to the people of the neighboring village as well as to many that are miles away. Plainly the drum is the most useful as well as the favorite instrument in Africa.

Of the many different kinds in use, three seem to be of the greatest importance in the life of these people. These are the dance drum, the carrier's drum, and the war or call drum.

The dance drum brings good luck and blessings of various kinds to the villagers. Often it is heard all through the night as the people dance to the beating of the African drummer who keeps perfect time upon this crude instrument.

The carrier's drum resembles a horseshoe in shape. It is made of two horn-shaped metal cylinders fastened together at the top by a crosspiece to which a handle is joined. When struck properly it gives out a clear sound that can be heard from a distance of a mile or two. It is carried by the chief or headsman of a group of carriers, hence the name. In Africa all loads are borne on the backs of men, women, or children. "When going from one village to another a group of these carriers form themselves into a caravan and travel together for comfort as well as safety. They are led by a chief or headsman, who carries the drum. Sometimes the chief finds himself far in advance of the last carrier and, by striking on his drum the number of beats corresponding to a carrier's drum name, the chief can summon even the most distant member of the caravan to his side."

There are two kinds of call or war drums, both made from the trunk of a hollowed-out tree and about four feet in length. One of these stands upright and the open end is covered with deerskin. It is beaten with the palm of the hand, and the men learn to play remarkably well upon this instrument. The other drum, which is larger, lies on its side and has closed ends. A long, narrow slit cut in the top is left uncovered and a tongue of wood extends part way across the opening from either side. It is beaten by two heavy sticks. The wood of this drum is very resonant and when struck the drum gives out a hollow gong-like sound that can be heard at a distance of one, two, ten and even twenty miles. It is used as a kind of telegraph between villages and, by means of a secret code of taps which the people understand, the headsman sends messages easily in all directions and over great distances.

Sometimes a large war or call drum is placed upon a high scaffolding that the sound may carry far into the forest. The chief or headsman drums out messages ahead of a caravan, or perhaps he calls for help from his neighbors both far and near. Far away in the forest those messages are heard by the headsmen of other tribes sitting by their own fires. "That is a call from the village of ———," they say. If it is for help, the men of the villages which neighbor, rise to answer the call.

The African women understand a few of the calls, but the white men have never been allowed to learn the code. The Rev. A. W. Halsey tells of some amusing and interesting things the African can do with these crude but skilfully made instruments.

Early one Sunday morning while he was in Elat, the most interior of the mission stations of West Africa, a man began to beat the drum with sticks. In a little while people came from miles and miles around to attend church. The man had said with his sticks, "Everybody come to church," and sixteen hundred people came.

A missionary one day stopped at the palaver house at Efulen. It was raining and he had no umbrella. The man in the palaver house struck the drum with the wooden sticks and presently a boy came running with an umbrella. That time the sticks had said, "Missionary in the palaver house, caught in rain, wants an umbrella."

In some strange way the strokes on a drum carry many items of news. When Stanley was on the Congo he learned that the natives whom he had visited had told the people in all the other islands of his coming and how many were in his caravan. All they did was to strike the drum a certain number of times and in a certain way, and it was known at once that a great strange white man with a large company had come from a far country.

Things that are new and strange to the African fill him with wonder and excitement. It takes him a long while to get used to the white man.

Bishop Hannington, the beloved English missionary, tells of his experience while he was passing through a village where a white man had never before been seen. Upon his appearance the village people gathered around him in dozens and gazed upon him with the utmost astonishment. The one thing that seemed to puzzle them most was whether his whole body was white or only his hands and feet.

"Are those your feet, white man," they asked the Bishop.

"No, gentlemen, they are not. They are my sandals."

"But do they grow to your feet?"

"No, gentlemen, they do not. I will show you."

With that he proceeded to unlace his boot. A roar of astonishment followed when they beheld his blue sock, as they generally surmised that his feet were blue and toeless. Great astonishment followed when he took off his sock and showed them a white-toed foot.

An amusing story is told by Dr. Corey of Bonjolongo who had been one of the fiercest of the natives. After he was converted he wished to carry the gospel to the very people whom he had injured.

So, clothed in the garb of a Christian, he made the journey of six days into the jungle, unarmed and alone.

Upon entering the village he was immediately recognized and the war drum began to sound. In a moment he was surrounded by warriors armed with spears and knives. There was no time to explain his change of heart and his desire to do them good. But Bonjolongo was a resourceful African. The missionary had given him for the journey an aluminum canteen for drinking water. Knowing that the natives had never seen such an object, he took it from his shoulder quickly, pointed the cork at them, and called out, "If you come a step closer I will pull this cork out." He advanced a step and they fled into the forest. An hour later when the warriors came slinking back they found Bonjolongo preaching Christ to the villagers.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

NEW YORK MULTITUDES SEE THEIR BOYS ON PARADE

Draft Army Final Argument for Universal Service

New York will long remember the parade of 10,000 of its boys of the Draft Army on Washington's Birthday. Among those 500,000 or more people who thronged the avenue, muscles tense that they might catch even a glimpse of the marching men, were hundreds of children—little tots held aloft by fathers and mothers who would tell them, some day in the years to come, when the agony of war is a thing long past, of that day of whirling snow and sturdy purpose, when their young eyes saw the glory of America's manhood as it set out on its high quest.

From the seventh floor of a building on Fifth Avenue I watched, through the eddying snow that settled on trench cap and pack, the swinging platoons march down the hill from Forty-second Street. It was a strange and beautiful sight to American eyes unused to scenes like this. There was a mark of perfection in the alignment and the rhythm with which the boys marched that played havoc with the muscles of those thousands of throats along the curb. There was a strange mingling of solemnity and joy about the occasion. No one could for a moment forget that these boys, our very own, were having their last parade before going over there to face the Hun, and, God willing, to make Hunship forever more a nightmare of history.

Nor could one keep from his mind the vision of that time in the future when another parade would march up the avenue, and many a boy in the ranks on this day would be there no longer, having made the supreme sacrifice.

But how persistently many of us recalled that September day when these same youths set off for camp. What a miracle of change! Then faces were pale and backs were bent; then lines were serpentine and feet dragged wearily, some reluctantly; then straw hats and felt hats and coats were carried under a late Summer sun. It was a soft day and the boys were soft.

But now the rigorous Winter weather of this Washington's Birthday was symbolical of that transformation which five months had wrought. The bronzed faces, the straightened backs the alert step, the conscious joy that comes when men from all ranks of life work together in unison, dominated by an ideal—all this told its story of those weeks of discipline and intensive training out-of-doors. Here was the answer to that disturbed fear of the soft citizen who so plaintively lifts his voice against every preachment for universal military service. Thousands of us saw these boys on that September day and we saw them again—and we know.

Professor Ralph Barton Perry, writing recently on the teacher's view of military science as it is taught at Harvard, said:

"I have not undertaken to formulate any theory of education. But if learning to stand straight, to lead men, to apply principles to action, to live out-of-doors, to cope with natural obstacles and forces, to endure with fortitude, to co-operate with one's fellows, to submit to leadership without resentment, to think often and loyally of one's country's need—if these things are not education, then it is because they are something better."

Those who saw the parade think these things are something better.

MODERN LENTEN PUBLICITY

New York Newspapers Carrying New Kind of Advertising

NEW YORK CITY.—Two New York newspapers, the Times and the Evening Post, are carrying on Saturdays during Lent a series of advertisements which mark a new departure in Lenten advertising. The copy for this display advertising, following the style of a half-page advertisement in the Times the day before Christmas last, is not an appeal to go to church. It is rather an educational series on the meaning and value of Lent to the individual.

The experiment is the result of the appointment of a special publicity committee by the New York Churchmen's Association created for this purpose. The Association is acting on the principle that church publicity should be supplemented by publicity for Christianty.

In connection with this new effort it is interesting to note that both the Times and the Post are carrying Lenten editorials, in itself a radical departure for the modern newspaper.

Following is the copy appearing in the display advertising pages of the Post on Saturday last:

MISSING THE MARK

The imperious call of Lent is to forsake sin and turn unto God. What is Sin? It is missing the mark.

"Life's but means to an end,
That end-beginning, mean and end of all things—GOD."

Sin is missing that mark. And the man who misses the mark wrongs himself as well as grieves God. His life never reaches its possibilities. He does not get the most out of it. He does not make the most of it. Lent voices the one clear call of God to forsake sin. Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thought. Let him turn unto God and confess his sins. Forgiveness awaits him. If with all your hearts ye truly seek me, ye shall surely find me, saith the Lord. (Issued by the New York Churchman's Association.)

Every Name Campaign

NEW YORK CITY.—An "Every Name Campaign" was conducted at the Chapel of the Intercession last Sunday afternoon. This is the largest effort of the sort, so far as is known, ever attempted; 6,118 people were called on between the hours of 2 and 6, and 323 visitors, all of whom have been carefully trained for a month past, made the canvass. The results of the campaign will be announced next week.

ARCHBISHOP'S ARRIVAL RETARDED BY WAR DELAYS

Will Be Met by Revenue Cutter, Then Goes to Washington

NEW YORK CITY.—Those inevitable delays which everyone now expects in traveling have retarded the arrival of the Archbishop of York. He was expected last Saturday or Sunday, but a cable saying "Delayed" is all that is known in regard to his arrival as THE CHURCHMAN goes to press. The committee confidently expects however that he will reach here in time to carry out his program.

Through the courtesy of the Treasury Department it has been arranged that His Grace should be landed in the revenue cutter which will meet his boat in the harbor. Dr. Slattery and Mr. Monell Sayre representing the War Commission, and Dean Robbins, Dr. Manning, General Dyer and Colonel Burleigh representing the Bishop of New York, will meet His Grace aboard the revenue cutter. One of the vestrymen of Trinity parish, Mr. Stuyvesant Fish, has turned over his residence to the Archbishop of York, and this will be His Grace's headquarters during his stay in this country.

Immediately on his arrival His Grace goes to Washington, where through Lord Reading an interview with the President has been arranged by Bishop Harding. His Grace will spend a night with Bishop Harding, returning to New York in time for his first public appearance as the preacher at the morning service at the cathedral on March 3. A special committee, of which Dean Robbins is chairman, has charge of His Grace's program in New York during that week.

BRITISH SCHOLAR TO SPEAK

Ambassador Cables That Sir George Adam Smith Is Coming

NEW YORK CITY.—A cablegram last week from Ambassador Page in London notified the National Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War that Sir George Adam Smith, one of the foremost clergymen in Great Britain, had accepted the committee's invitation, sent through Mr. Page, to make a speaking tour of the United States.

The Rev. George Adam Smith is known throughout the world as an authority on Biblical criticism and Church history. He has lectured in this country at the Universities of Yale, Johns Hopkins, California and Chicago. He holds the position of principal and vice-chancellor of Aberdeen University, Scotland, and is chairman of the Scottish Council of Women's Trades.

The committee also announced that it has arranged for a series of meetings during March in New Jersey, Maryland and Delaware.

Holy Cross Fathers Sail

NEW YORK CITY.—Fathers Anderson and Whitall, of the Order of the Holy Cross, with a limited number of other priests will sail for France in a few days as a Red Cross unit.

CHURCHES GAIN IN MONEY, MEMBERS INCREASE SLOWLY

Dr. Carroll's Tables Show Larger Bodies Make Gains

The Churches of the United States, under the extraordinary war conditions of 1917, were prosperous to an unusual degree in their finances; but less so than usual in additions to their membership. The accompanying annual tables of church statistics, which have been prepared by Dr. H. K. Carroll for The Christian Herald of New York, show that the net increase of church members was only 573,295, which is less than in 1916 by 183,329 and less than the average of the past five years. A few denominations may have prospered more than usual under the prevalent war conditions; but churches with a large element of foreign-speaking population have had a lean year. The Hungarian Reformed Church reports the loss of one-fourth of its entire membership, and the Roman Catholic Church, embracing large bodies of European population, has had an increase, according to the estimate of the editor of the Official Catholic Directory, of only about 175,000 population, equivalent to about 148,750 communicants, as against 390,000 increase in 1916, a falling off of about 241,000. It is the larger bodies, however, that make the gains as in former years.

The aggregate of church members for the 167 denominations is 40,515,126. This huge total is made up chiefly of the great denominational groups, as, Baptists (15 bodies), 6,442,393; Catholics (3 bodies), 14,663,342; Lutherans (18 bodies), 2,460,937; Methodists (16 bodies), 7,782,018; Presbyterians (11 bodies), 2,225,879; Disciples of Christ (2 bodies), 1,396,466; Protestant Episcopal (2 bodies), 1,083,366; Reformed (4 bodies), 514,061; Eastern Orthodox (7 bodies), 490,500; Mennonites (12 bodies), 66,542; Friends (4 bodies), 119,263; Dunkards (4 bodies), 128,363; United Brethren (2 bodies), 367,959; Adventists (6 bodies), 117,569; Evangelical Association (2 bodies), 209,483; Scandinavian Evangelical (3 bodies), 62,900; Latter-Day Saints (2 bodies), 420,000.

There are 181,808 ministers, an increase of 1,244, and 226,609 churches, an increase of 1,006.

PENSION SYSTEMS GROW

Annual Meeting Shows Many Churches Making Progress

The annual meeting of the Protestant Council of Interdenominational Secretaries of Ministerial Relief and Pensions was held at the Manhattan Hotel, New York, February 20.

"The Protestant Churches have in their treasuries $33,000,000 for preachers' pensions and are actively engaged in campaigns which will bring this amount to at least $65,000,000," declared Dr. Joseph B. Hingeley of Chicago. Dr. Hingeley continued: "The Protestant Episcopal Church was the first to complete its campaign, which was for $5,000,000, and Bishop Lawrence and his workers secured $8,750.000. The Methodist Episcopal Church has $12,000,000 in its general annual treasuries; $1,265,000 has been actually paid to the retired ministers, their widows and orphans in 1917. The Presbyterian Church has resources amounting to $6,559,933. Its goal is $10,000,000. The Northern Baptist has no fixed goal, but has at present $2,000,000 in funds and is seeking an additional million. The Congregational Church has $1,900,000 in hand for the welfare of its aged ministers. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has a fund of $1,200,000 and is seeking $5,000,000. The General Synod of the Lutheran Church reports a fund of $150,000, and is in a campaign for $1,000,000 for endowment. The Church of Christ has a permanent fund of $116,000, with $200,000 coming from the "Men and Million" movement. This Church will undertake an endowment campaign for at least $1,000,000.

FORUM MOVEMENT SPREADS

The Rev. Percy S. Grant Heads New International Association

New York City.—The latest development in the Open Forum movement is the organization of the International Forum Association, Inc., which states as its object "to give publicity and service to the forums and to promote the movement throughout the world". The Association already has correspondents in Canada, England, Spain, Australia, Hawaii, the Philippines and the Canal Zone. The officers are the Rev. Dr. Percy Stickney Grant, president; Edward Jewet Wheeler, vice-president; A. Llye DeJarnette, general director, and Harold Arthur Lynch, secretary and treasurer. The announcement further says "the time is past when men shall think in terms narrow and confined. There is no survival in this age for men and institutions that fail to take into account the democratic forces of world change. America has been thrust into a new world of internationalism, and the Open Forum as an American institution is already becoming international in character."

LAST MISSIONARY DIES

Bishop Tuttle Pays Tribute to Rocky Mountain Associate

St. Louis, Missouri.—Bishop Tuttle pays the following tribute to the Rev. Henry L. Foote, who died at Marblehead, Massachusetts, on January 31, in his seventy-third year:

"Of the eight or ten missionaries who served with me in the Rocky Mountains he had lived the longest. His brother, the Rev. G. W. Foote, began our work in Salt Lake City. Henry came to me there in 1868. He was the younger brother of my dear wife. In 1869 he went to Idaho, and I ordered him priest there in 1869. Subsequently he served in Nevada and California and West Missouri and Massachusetts.

"Cheery, hopeful, kindly, unselfish, sympathizing, and devoted to pastoral and priestly duty, he was wise in winning souls.

"I want to put on record my little tribute of profound appreciation and grateful memories of the good done by him in the fifty years of his earthly ministry.

"During the few years last past he was unable to conduct public ministrations. These years he gave up to diligent and kindly and sympathizing visits among the sick and afflicted all round about his home.

"Their blessings went with the angels in conducting him home. Good-bye, my brother, till the shadows lift and the morning breaks."

Y. W. C. A. SECRETARIES IN REVOLUTIONARY RUSSIA

Committee Meeting Held While Peter and Paul Guns Pound

New York City.—One of the Y. W. C. A. secretaries in Petrograd has written recently a letter to headquarters describing her experiences during the revolution.

"It is hard to describe what has been going on in Petrograd," she says. "Aside from the Winter Palace and the Telegraph, I presume the corner at the association and the corner where we live have been as hot spots and have seen as much fighting as any places in the city.

"We did have classes, but of course three-fourths of the attendance dropped off and later we gave up the evening classes. It will be hard to get all our girls back because they are afraid to go out.

"We had one of our best committee meetings late one afternoon when the guns from Peter and Paul were pounding into the Winter Palace three or four blocks away. Mme. Orkesky, Baroness Meyendorff and another woman came out in spite of the fact that our street was crowded with soldiers who had thrown up a barricade and were waiting for the troops from the Provisional Government. They have great spirit."

MIDWINTER ARCHDEACONRY MEETING OF AUXILIARY

Reading W. A. Discuss St. Agnes' School Needs

EASTON, PENNSYLVANIA.—The needs of St. Agnes' School, Kyoto, were presented, and an appeal made for further generosity in this direction, at the midwinter meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Archdeaconry of Reading, held in Trinity church, here, in January.

The president spoke of the "Aftermath of the Pilgrimage of Prayer" and also reported the meeting of the Provincial Synod in Philadelphia last November, at which twelve members of the Woman's Auxiliary from our diocese were present.

Recommendation number six, which proposes that eight women be elected to serve on the Board of Missions, was discussed at length, and brought out a diversity of opinions. Mrs. Pomeroy, the chairman of the committee, appointed to make a card catalogue of the members of the Auxiliary in the Reading Archdeaconry, reported 942 members on the list. Only three parishes failed to reply to her request for the information.

After luncheon the questions of increasing the contributions to the current expense fund of the Auxiliary, and definite representation at the annual meeting were discussed. The educational secretary, Miss Boyer, gave a full explanation of the educational work as planned for this year, and then closed the meeting with a very helpful demonstration of a mission study class.

THE REV. C. T. WARD DIES

Wrote N. T. Treatise, Set Type, Printed and Bound It

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—The Rev. Caleb Theophilus Ward, 75 years old, a retired Episcopal clergyman, died last week.

Mr. Ward was born in New York City, and was a graduate of Columbia University and of the Union Theological Seminary. Retiring from the ministry fifteen years ago, Mr. Ward began the work of compiling a treatise on the New Testament. He wrote all the treatise, edited it, bought type and presses, set the type with his own hands, did all the press work, and bound the volumes himself—a remarkable achievement for a man of his years, involving as it did a thorough knowledge of both the printing and bookbinding trades in addition to the extensive knowledge required for authorship of such a work.

FOOD SHORTAGE IS SERIOUS

Church Work in Cuba Hampered by Living Problems

CUBA.—Owing to the fact that Cuba is practically a producer of sugar and tobacco only, to the exclusion of almost all the vegetal productions, and for this reason is almost entirely dependent upon the United States for all its groceries and provisions, and owing to the great scarcity of such things in the North and the congested condition of traffic, very serious conditions are prevailing in Cuba at the present writing. For a number of weeks there has been no wheat bread; for a time there was neither alcohol nor charcoal, the two chief fuels of Cuba; and everything else has quadrupled in price, and many of the things usually considered necessities of life are not to be had at any price. The Cuban Government has undertaken to regulate the price and the consumption of food stuffs, with a certain degree of success, but the profiteerers have means of evasion, and the people suffer as a result. These conditions do not facilitate church work, nor make it easy to bring more laborers into this harvest.

AVIATOR'S FATHER THANKS BROTHERHOOD SECRETARY

Young Man Gets Quick Attention After Fall in Flying

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—A young man in the Aviation Corps at Camp Everman, Texas, met with a serious accident. While flying he fell 200 feet with his machine, breaking a leg and sustaining internal injuries. The boy's family in New York were greatly concerned for his welfare, and a Brotherhood member, who was acquainted with the family, wired to the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Benjamin F. Finney, Chief Secretary of Field Work, lost no time in putting his machinery to work. He wired to Walter Macpherson, Camp Secretary at Waco, Texas, requesting him to go to Camp Everman and look after the aviator.

"Spare no expense", were Mr. Finney's instructions. "Be sure the broken limb is properly taken care of. Take him to the best hospital in Forth Worth, if necessary."

Macpherson went to Forth Worth, saw the young soldier, and learned that he was being well cared for. He offered to have him moved to a hospital, and wanted to summon one of the best surgeons in the city, but the injured man decided this would not be necessary. He said he preferred to remain in the camp hospital.

As a result, the aviator is rapidly recovering, and his grateful family in New York are praising the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. His father wrote to Frederick S. Titsworth, executive secretary of the Army and Navy Department, and to Mr. Macpherson expressing his appreciation of the Brotherhood's service.

"Few persons realize what a noble work the Brotherhood is engaged in", wrote the father.

BISHOP ISRAEL THINKS Y. M. C. A. IS INVALUABLE

But Finds Friction Between That Organization and Chaplains

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Rev. Robert P. Kreitler has received from Bishop Israel a letter, dated from Paris, in which the writer says:

"I am more and more convinced that the Y. M. C. A., with its many fine and devoted secretaries, is simply invaluable to the Army. Could we only eliminate the friction between the association and the chaplains, the result of their work would be as nearly perfect as human frailty permits. The chaplain in our camps has a most difficult position to fill. Without organization; often unrecognized by the authorities as a spiritual force; alone and unsupported, his work has been difficult before, and now, in many instances, where he is overborne by the superior ability of many of the secretaries, he is relegated to a secondary position.

"As long as such articles as that appearing in the Philadelphia Ledger for November 28, headed with the statement:

"'While the Church, Socialism, Cosmopolitanism have all failed, this Association of Young Men may enter into their Heritage', there must be misunderstanding and friction.

"The Y. M. C. A. can never be such a spiritual force as that provided by Christ through the authorized Church. No one seems to realize this more than the heads of the association, but unfortunately this idea persists, and the chaplains, the authorized and commissioned agents of the Government for the spiritual care of the soldiers, must and should resist the attempt. Use all your influence to have the chaplains of the Army and Navy placed upon the same footing as the medical corps. Only in this way can they come into their own, and be the spiritual influence which they should be in our Army.

"I am still moving in and out among the camps and hospitals, addressing the men daily in crowded huts, and administering the Holy Communion wherever I go, with the most cordial approval and aid of the Y. M. C. A. The association has been kindness itself to me, as have its secretaries; and their co-operation invaluable.

"The response of the men has been happy, leading up to hundreds of personal conversations on moral and religious subjects, which repays me a hundredfold for the deprivations necessarily accompanying the work. You ask if there is anything my friends can do. Let me state that I can distribute directly to individuals sweaters, mittens, helmets, and in fact any articles such as these, and as so far none of the Red Cross knitting in America has been distributed here, these things will be especially helpful. American tobacco and cigars are always most acceptable. Such packages should be addressed to me as chaplain of Red Cross Hospital, Unit No. 20, and sent Care the Rev. Dr. Watson, Holy Trinity Parish House, 23, Avenue de l'Alma, Paris, France.

A GREEK MINER'S FUNERAL

Unique Service is Held in New Mexico Town

GALLUP, NEW MEXICO.—There occurred here recently at the Church of the Holy Spirit a unique burial service. It was that of a Greek, who was accidentally killed in one of the coal mines. About sixty of his countrymen were in attendance.

The burial service as provided in the Prayer Book was used. In addition, the Lord's prayer and the Nicene creed were said in Modern Greek. As one of their number read the lesson (1 Cor. 15, 20-58), in Greek, the people arose and remained standing reverently.

At the close of the service in the Church the coffin was removed to the vestibule and there, as each Greek passed out, he made the sign of the cross, then kissed on the forehead the body of the deceased.

At the grave portions of the burial service were also said in Greek. At the words of committal, instead of one person alone, as is the custom, about a dozen persons each took a handful of earth and cast it upon the coffin.

Our missionary, the Rev. D. A. Sanford, visits these Greeks, scattered at various coal mining camps, doing what is possible to minister to them religiously. Most of them are either single men or else, as in this case, have families in Greece.

SEES PERILS TO CHILD IN BILLS AT ALBANY

Owen Lovejoy Says Results of Years of Work Are Menaced

NEW YORK CITY.—Owen R. Lovejoy, secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, speaking recently at the home of Adolph Lewisohn, protested against the bills now before the New York Legislature, which, he said, if they became a law, would completely suspend the present child labor restrictions.

The bill provides that the Industrial Commission have discretionary authority to suspend any or all provisions of labor law in connection with the manufacture of any article used directly or indirectly in carrying on the War. This bill was vetoed last year by Governor Whitman.

"We are facing the grave danger of having our efforts of years completely erased by the new laws now under consideration in our State", said Mr. Lovejoy. "In this great rush to prepare our Nation for war the future of the child seems to have been lost sight of and, therefore, some drastic measures must be taken to safeguard our childhood during this crisis. Those of us who have dedicated ourselves to the protection of these defenseless ones must keep our heads clear and our motives unmixed, determining that whatever happens all other forms of treasure, all other forms of wealth, all other methods of defense shall be sacrificed before we compel the children of America to pass through the fire."

VIRGINIA HOSPITALITY FOR OUR MEN IN SERVICE

Brotherhood in Richmond Has Fine Old Residence

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.—The Episcopalians of Richmond, working through the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, were enabled through gifts of a few of our people to rent a spacious and handsome residence on Grace Street, and to organize the first concrete body in the United States to grasp this opportunity of contributing to the comfort and enjoyment of our soldiers, sailors and marines.

A club was formed, and Colonel Henry Lee Valentine was made president and Mr. R. E. Anderson treasurer, with a strong support of influential Churchmen as a board of officers and directors.

This fine old residence of by-gone days is steam heated, hot and cold water and bath tubs on all three floors, and it is proposed to have shower baths in basement for the approaching Summer. The three large parlors on the first floor have been fitted up for writing, reading, music and smoking rooms.

During Christmas holidays an open house for ten days was maintained and nearly 2,000 meals were served gratis. The rooms, all handsomely decorated and genuine example of old Virginia hospitality, made many hearts from distant sections of the country happy.

Report From Bishop Lloyd

NEW YORK CITY.—A cable was received here on the 13th from Bishop Lloyd, sent via Dakar Tabou, in which he reported that all was going well.

G. F. S. AND C. M. H. MAKE JOINT DRIVE FOR $30,000

Campaign Begins with Meeting when Archbishop of York Speaks

NEW YORK CITY.—Beginning with a great meeting in Synod House on Wednesday, March 6, at 2.30 p.m., the Girls' Friendly Society diocesan branch and the Church Mission of Help will conduct a joint campaign for $30,000. The total of undesignated sums will be divided equally between the two societies and will be applied to the strengthening of their existing work and to special war work. A committee representing both societies has been formed, Mr. Harry P. Robbins of 52 Vanderbilt Avenue as chairman, and Miss Mabel Courtney as secretary. Mrs. Haley Fiske represents the C. M. H. and Miss Edith Hadley the G. F. S. on this committee.

This drive will be opened by the meeting at Synod House. His Grace the Archbishop of York, who is one of the Patrons of the English G. F. S., has consented to be the chief speaker. Bishop Perry will represent the War Commission; Miss Katharine Potter will speak for the G. F. S. and Mrs. L. Frederic Pease will speak for the C. M. H. Bishop Greer will preside. On Sunday, March 10, the offerings in a number of churches will be devoted to war work among girls; literature will be distributed in the churches, and in some cases the clergy have consented to bring the matter to the special attention of their parishioners. That evening a special service will be held.

The Church Mission of Help is the organized effort of the Church in this diocese for the rescue and rehabilitation of wayward girls. In the seven years of its existence it has befriended upward of 1,600 girls. It is working in co-operation with Bedford Reformatory, the House of Mercy, Inwood House, the Queens County Jail, etc. It receives girls from the courts and helps them in the task of restoring them to society. The C. M. H. maintains a visitor in the Women's Night Court and another in the Court of Special Sessions.

In the last year 101 unmarried mothers have been under the care of the C. M. H. St. Faith's House, Tarrytown, has given over to the society the after-care of its young mothers.

The C. M. H. desires to increase its work by the addition of a chaplain to its force, and by providing the salary for a colored worker. Colored girls are the least well cared for. At present there is a volunteer with forty-six girls under her care. Salaries are needed for trained workers in the camps, and for corrective and protective work arising out of war conditions in the cities.

Trained workers have already been offered to the War Commission and 50 per cent. of the salary of three such workers has been guaranteed by the Commission. One visitor is already at work in the neighborhood of Camp Dix.

The G. F. S. represents the other side of the picture. In this city through the Federal Commission 25,000 girls are seeking opportunities for patriotic service. The G. F. S. offers Red Cross work and classes in First Aid, French, Surgical Dressings, etc. The girls doing this work are all the time under the wise care of the society. The G. F. S. is co-operating with the War Camp Community Service. The G. F. S. maintains its lodge, more important than ever before, and its vacation house at Huntington. These need support.

The total war budget of the G. F. S. is $15,000. The C. M. H. also wishes $15,000. From present indications this minimum budget of $30,000 ought to be reached and passed.

BISHOP JONES TO HELP BOARD OF MISSIONS

Will Work at Church Missions House Until April 10

The Rt. Rev. Paul Jones, having offered to do any work at the Church Missions House or in the field that the Board of Missions might desire, the Board at its last meeting authorized the officers to make such arrangements as might be practicable to secure Bishop Jones' assistance for work at the Church Missions House until April 10, when it is expected that the House of Bishops will meet to consider his resignation as Bishop of Utah.

KENYON PRESIDENT HAS SAILED FOR FRANCE

Made Representative to Gather Information for Red Cross

GAMBIER, OHIO.—President William F. Peirce has been appointed official representative to gather information at first hand about war conditions in Europe by the American Red Cross. As public speaker for the Lake Division of this organization he will spend two or three months at the front studying war problems, opportunities and methods of work in order to be able to present their needs with the effectiveness that grows out of actual experience. Throughout the past year President Peirce has made frequent addresses in behalf of the work of the Red Cross and after his return from France he expects to devote a large part of his time during the Summer and Autumn to speaking in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, the three states which form the Lake Division.

Summoned at a few days' notice to sail for France, President Peirce instantly responded to the call for patriotic duty and amidst the songs and cheers of the Kenyon College Battalion left Gambier on a recent date to return early in May.

Rector Uses Motor Sled

CHESTER, VERMONT.—The Rev. F. C. Williams of this town has been experimenting with a motorcycle on runners and is said to have evolved a machine that gives satisfaction on Winter roads. People who saw the various trials of the device predicted that it would not go, but trips which the rector took prove the machine a perfect success. A three-speed motorcycle is used as the basis. The front tire is taken off and a runner clamped onto the wheel. A side runner is attached by a frame to the right side of the cycle, having the same tread as the regulation sleighs. The motorcycle thus runs on the left track.

For Country

A SERVICE FLAG with eighteen stars was dedicated at St. John's church, Waverly, Baltimore, on Sunday, February 10. The flag was given by the Men's Club of the parish. It was carried in procession by Lieut. T. Kenneth Harrison, U. S. A. The service of dedication was most impressive and inspiring. During the past Liberty Loan Campaign he addressed many meetings in Northern Ohio and also spoke to 10,000 soldiers at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio. St. Paul's church has postponed the building of its new $100,000 parish house until the conclusion of the War. Twenty thousand dollars of the parish house fund have been invested in Liberty Bonds.

ON SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1918, Mr. Anthony Roberts Parshley was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. Charles M. Beckwith, bishop of Alabama, acting for the Bishop of East Carolina. The ordination service was held in the Army Y. M. C. A. Building, No. 113, of which Mr. Parshley is Associate Religious Work secretary, at Camp McClellan, Anniston, Alabama. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Carlton Barnwell. Chaplain C. B. Dubell of the 110th Field Artillery preached the sermon and the Rev. J. R. McAllister read the epistle. A SERVICE FLAG containing forty stars has been dedicated at a special patriotic service in Grace church, Brooklyn, of which the Rev. C. F. J. Wrigley, D.D., is rector. On February 3 an offering was taken up for the "War Commission of the Church", which amounted to $2,800. Grace church has also joined with five other churches on the Heights in raising a fund for the entertainment of the sailors at the Navy Yard.

A SON and a daughter of Bishop Mixe of Michigan City have just been called into the service.

MISS KATHERINE WHITE, Red Cross nurse, assigned to duty, Walter Reid General Hospital, Tacoma Park, Washington, District of Columbia.

THE REV. HORACE RUSSELL WHITE, vicar of St. James', South Bend, Indiana, appointed chaplain in the National Army with rank of first lieutenant, and assigned to duty at Camp Grant, Rocford, Illinois.

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR SIR CECIL SPRING-RICE

Late Ambassador a Frequent Worshiper at Washington Cathedral

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—In response to the request of the British ambassador, Earl Reading, the bishop, dean and Chapter of Washington cathedral arranged a special memorial service in the Bethlehem chapel of the Holy Nativity at 3 o'clock on Saturday, February 16, being at the same hour as the funeral of the late British ambassador, Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, at Ottawa, in Canada.

The service was the burial office omitting the committal, and adding the Apostles' Creed and suitable prayers, including a thanksgiving for his good example, a prayer for the President and King of Great Britain and Ireland, and a brief collect for the victory of the United States and her Allies in this War.

Tertius Noble's great anthem, "Souls of the Righteous in the Hand of God", was sung after the lesson. "Abide With Me" was sung kneeling before the benediction, and the recessional was "The Strife is O'er, the Battle Done". As a portion of the service the cathedral organist, Mr. Edgar Priest, on the wonderfully fine instrument in the Bethlehem chapel played Chopin's funeral march as an opening voluntary, Handel's dead march in "Saul" in the midst of the service, and Beethoven's funeral march as a closing voluntary. The burial psalm, the burial anthem and other portions of the music of the service were rendered by the full cathedral choir of men and boys in vestments.

Among those present were the President and Mrs. Wilson, the British Ambassador and the Countess of Reading, and the entire embassy staff, and the allied and neutral embassies and legations, the Chief Justice of the United States, the Secretary of State, Vice-Admiral Benson, and many others representing all aspects of official life in Washington. The Bishop was assisted in the service by the Dean, Canon McKim, Canon R. C. Smith, the Rev. J. Townsend Russell and Canon De Vries.

Sir Cecil Spring-Rice and Lady Spring-Rice were frequent worshipers at the cathedral and often expressed their appreciation of the help of the cathedral services in the tensions of war time. Sir Cecil Spring-Rice had undertaken to address the Washington Committee of the National Cathedral Association on St. Paul's Day, but his departure from Washington prevented this. The day before he left he wrote Bishop Harding a letter with his own hand thanking him and telling him what the cathedral worship had done for him during his sojourn in Washington, expressing deep interest in the project and the hope that he and his wife would some day return to see the cathedral finished or far on the way towards that desired end. The last words of the letter were these: "For thy brethren and companion's sake, we wish thee prosperity, yea, because of the House of the Lord our God, we seek to do thee good".

JUNK COMMITTEE SUPPORTS STUDENT AT ST. HILDA'S

Bryn Mawr Students Receive Letter from Christina Li

BRYN MAWR, PENNSYLVANIA.—With twenty dollars raised by the "Junk Committee" of the Christian Association, the Bryn Mawr College students are paying for the tuition of Christina Li at St. Hilda's School, Wuchang, China. The principal of St. Hilda's, Deaconess Katharine E. Scott, is a Bryn Mawr graduate of the class of 1904. The students have just received the following letter from Christina:

"I am a Chinese girl and you are an American," she writes. "I am going to tell you about my school and myself. My school nearly has two hundred pupils . . . seven classes and four years of high school. At morning we get up at 6 o'clock. Then I wash my face and comb my hair. . . . This year I am in the seventh class. . . . When Sunday and Saturday, we dress up in uniform. The color is white and green. . . ."

JOB IN DRAMATIC FORM TO BE PRESENTED IN LENT

NEW YORK CITY.—"The Book of Job" is announced as a dramatic production by Stuart Walker (whose Portmanteau Theatre production of the Dunsany and other plays at the Princess Theatre are well remembered) for two special Lenten matinees to be given on two Thursdays, March 7 and March 14, at the Booth Theatre. The Bible story is mostly in the form of dialogue—it is in reality a dramatic poem, considered by many critics to be the greatest in all literature. The divine contest with Satan—Job's suffering and final triumph through faith, form a stirring story of poetic beauty and power.

David Bispham has been especially engaged to represent the Voice Out of the Whirlwind, and Walter Hampden will represent the Young Man, Elihu. George Gaul will be Job, and Margaret Mower and Judith Lowry will be the Two Narrators.

RUSSIAN CHURCH ISSUES CALL TO KEEP HOLY DAYS

PETROGRAD.—The Most Rev. Dr. Tikhon, patriarch of all Russia and former representative of the Russian Church in the United States, has issued a proclamation urging faithful Russians to observe the old calendar and Church holidays which have been abolished by the Bolshevist Government. The patriarch is coming to Petrograd from Moscow and the churches here are arranging a procession in his honor.

200 ARMY NURSES SING IN OLD ST. PAUL'S CHAPEL

Count Lafayette and W. L. Washington in Washington's Pew

NEW YORK CITY.—The processional was sung twice at the noonday service at St. Paul's chapel Washington's Birthday, so that time should be given for the choir of army nurses to file into their seats. There were nearly 200 of them, and they came in single file, dressed in their dark blue street costumes, just back of the British and American flags carried by soldiers of both armies. These are the nurses who have studied French under Jacques Barrs of Paris, in the classes conducted by St. Paul's chapel, and who have been formed into a choir by Dr. E. W. Reed. They are from the various mobilization and training stations in and near New York.

A special stanza for the army nurse which has been incorporated into the flexible Our Fathers' God, to Thee, was sung. Kipling's Recessional was sung by the church choir, and the first stanza of La Marseillaise, Rule, Britannia, and the Star Spangled Banner by the whole congregation.

The Rev. Dr. William Montague Geer, vicar of the chapel, gave something of its historical connection with Washington, in whose diary every Sunday durng his New York residence was written, "Went to St. Paul's chapel in the forenoon".

Among the congregation were Lord Aberdeen, Count Lafayette and William Lanier Washington, a collateral descendent of George Washington, all of whom sat in Washington's pew.

ORDINATIONS

PERU, INDIANA.—February 20, in Trinity church, the Bishop of Michigan City ordained to the diaconate George Harry Richardson, D.D. The candidate was presented and the sermon preached by the Rev. Edward Averill, rector of Trinity church, Fort Wayne, and formerly rector of Trinity church, Peru. The litany was said by the Rev. Charles F. Westman, rector of Trinity church, Logansport. Dr. Richardson was formerly a Congregationalist minister and is quite an eminent Biblical scholar. He will remain in charge of Trinity church, Peru, until his advancement to the priesthood.

On the first Sunday in Lent at St. Paul's church, Paterson, New Jersey, after the confirmation of sixty-five persons, presented by the rector, the Rev. D. Stuart Hamilton, Bishop Lines ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Charles Steele Armstrong, curate of the parish, with charge also of the Glen Rock Mission. He was presented for ordination by his father, the Rev. George P. Armstrong, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Professor Francis B. Blodgett of the General Seminary. Mr. Armstrong made a notable record for scholarship at St. Stephen's and at the General Seminary. He will continue in his present work. In the afternoon the Bishop addressed the Sunday school, there being present more than seven hundred scholars. The St. Paul's service flag has one hundred and ten stars now.

Our Weekly News Letters

NEW YORK

The War Commission Offering—St. Bartholomew's has announced a gift of $21,489.19 for the War Commission; St. James', $6,082.98; Calvary, nearly $4,000; Holy Trinity, between $2,600 and $2,700; Zion and St. Timothy's, over $2,000; St. George's, $1,502; and the Heavenly Rest, $500.

Church Club for Women—The women of the diocese are very eager to co-ordinate their activities, if one can judge from the two club movements that are at present receiving considerable attention. Two weeks ago THE CHURCHMAN printed an account of the first luncheon of The Churchwomen's Club, a federation of active working committees, at present without a clubhouse, but with a membership of something over one hundred and fifty. Last week the Church Club for Women (an organization formed a year or more ago under the leadership of the women working in the Altar Guild of the City Mission Society) met in the rooms of the Men's Church Club to consider the question of securing clubrooms.

About fifty women attended the meeting and voted enthusiastically to find suitable rooms at once. The original plan had been to have an apartment house with club rooms, and apartments available for members of the club. This plan seems too elaborate for immediate execution, so instead the club is looking for clubrooms similar to the men's rooms, only larger. There are already 300 members; the committee feels that there must be at least 600 before any active work can be financed. Mrs. Richard Irvin and Mrs. H. F. Hadden, together with a representative committee, have the matter in hand. The main purpose of this club is to provide a meeting place for the various women's organizations in the diocese, a bureau of information and central headquarters.

Various Meetings—An interesting missionary muster of the Auxiliary was held on the evening of February 19 at St. Michael and All Angels' parish house. Bishop Touret, Mrs. George Zabriskie and Mrs. Thomas Wetmore of Christ School, Arden, North Carolina, were the speakers. An Auxiliary meeting emphasizing the foreign missionary work of the Church was held on the 26th at the residence of Mrs. Jennings, at which addresses in regard to the urgent needs of the Church General Hospital, Wuchang, by Dr. Taylor and Dr. Tsen of China, and Dr. Wood of the Board of Missions. Bishop Beecher was the speaker at the meeting of the Church Periodical Club on February 28. The Church Periodical Club is now established in its new offices at 2 West Forty-seventh Street, room 1104, telephone Bryant 4253.

The Woman's Auxiliary—On February 21 an evening meeting was held at the Church of Zion and St. Timothy. The speakers were the officers of the Branch. The last issue of the Bulletin states the encouraging fact that all but $293 has been received for the military chapel at San Antonio, which is being built by the women of New York. Among other pledges undertaken by the Branch is one for All Saints' Hospital, McAlister, Oklahoma, each for the residences of the missionaries at Onigum, Minnesota, and at Porto Alegre, Brazil.

Eleven training institutes for parish officers, one at least in each district so that no parish was unrepresented on account of distance, and in Westchester and New York three and four, respectively, have been held here by the Woman's Auxiliary. The same program was followed in all. Classes for presidents, secretaries and treasurers were held simultaneously during the first hour and a half. At noon all assembled for noon-day prayers and remained together afterward for a class with Miss Delafield, the diocesan president, as leader, when the duties common to all officers together with their responsibilities were discussed. The policy of the Branch, membership campaigns, the importance of deeper spirituality, the frequent and united prayers of the officers were all suggested and mission study and the educational aspect of missions in parish life emphasized. The lunch hour usually followed this class, affording opportunity for informal discussion. After lunch the three classes re-assembled and the last hour was devoted to demonstrations and practice.

The committee which planned these institutes chose three groups of leaders, each with its own dean. Their duty was to plan the syllabus and arrange to be in attendance and to teach at each of the institutes. More than 500 received this instruction, a special effort being made to have prospective and substitute officers included.

The excellent outlines prepared for these meetings are to be published shortly and will then be obtainable from the Woman's Auxiliary office at the Church Missions House.

Lenten Services—There are on the whole fewer services than usual this Lent, but the attendance at the services provided is satisfactory. St. Bartholomew's and the Incarnation has no noonday services this year. Trinity, however, was packed at noonday last week for the addresses by the Archbishop of Nova Scotia, the Most Rev. Clarendon Lamb Worrall, D.D., of Halifax, on the subject of "Responsibility". On Monday it was "In General"; on Tuesday, "In the State"; Wednesday, "In the Church"; Thursday, "In the Ideal"; Friday, "In the Motive". At the Transfiguration Father Hughson of the Order of the Holy Cross was the preacher at noon all week. On Washington's Birthday Dr. Barry conducted a Quiet Day for men at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, and the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton, a Quiet Day for men and women at Trinity chapel.

Mission Conference at St. Faith's—"The New World and the New Need" is the subject of a conference to be held at St. Faith's House, the New York Training School for Deaconesses over the week-end of March 1.

BOSTON

Death of Charles G. Saunders, Esq.—The whole diocese has been shocked to learn of the amazingly sudden death of Charles G. Saunders, Massachusetts' veteran Deputy to General Convention, long-time member of her Standing Committee and Chancellor of her Cathedral.

Up to almost the moment of his death Mr. Saunders was apparently in his usual good health and was going about his active business and personal affairs. The afternoon before his death Mr. Saunders met the writer on the street in Boston and talked in his usual cordial and happy fashion. Later in the evening he addressed the Ecclesiological Society of the Church of the Advent.

Mr. Saunders was unmarried. He left three sisters and several cousins surviving him. He was in his seventy-first year. He was buried from Grace church, Lawrence, where he was senior warden, on Feb. 22.

The American Church at large will perhaps remember Mr. Saunders chiefly as the prime mover in the adoption of the Provincial system which he had advocated for many years and in working out of the details of which he was the leader in General Convention. He was also an influential member of the commission for the revising and enrichment of the Book of Common Prayer. He was one of the Church's few eminent authorities on Canon Law. As chancellor of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, he was the trusted counselor of all our diocesan authorities.

Throughout his life Mr. Saunders was deeply interested in music. He was president of the Harvard Musical Association which led the way, years ago, to the establishment of orchestral concerts that were the forerunners of Major Henry L. Higginson's foundation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music.

He was graduated from Harvard in the class of 1867 and in 1870 received from that university the degrees of LL.B., and A.M. He had been president of the New England Federation of Harvard Clubs and was a director of the Harvard Alumni Association.

Another Chaplain From Massachusetts—The Rev. Norman B. Nash, formerly an instructor in the Cambridge Theological School, who recently went to France in Y. M. C. A. work, has been commissioned the chaplain of an Indiana regiment now in France. This news comes from the Rev. Murray W. Dewart, chaplain of the 101st Field Artillery, who is the rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Winchester, and who has been in France with his regiment since last Summer. In a most interesting letter to his Winchester parishioners Mr. Dewart says:

"When we first arrived French troops were here—several thousand of them—and about the same number of German prisoners. The French gradually have been replaced by incoming American troops and now the French have gone entirely.

"The officers are all housed in French portable houses. The colonel has been good enough to leave me in my fine southeast corner room alone, not just for my comfort, but because the room is also my office, and my being in a room alone encourages the privates to come and see me. They are now building terra cotta barracks for troops yet to come—as if they expected the war to last for fifty or sixty years more. I can't tell you how many troops there are here in camp—but there are a good many.

"Sunday services have been particularly well and earnestly attended steadily since coming to France. About a dozen men have handed in their names for Confirmation as a result of my announcing once that possibly I could persuade a bishop to come out here before we went to the front.

"No such immorality prevails among these men as I hear of constantly at the front. It may be too early to be elated, but I'll bank on these men going through to the end a pretty clean, game, fine lot."

Conference of College Churchmen—The Fourth Annual Conference of New England College Churchmen met at Trinity church, Boston, on the first Sunday in Lent. There was a Corporate Communion at 8 o'clock and in the afternoon and evening there were conferences in Trinity House led by Dean Hodges and Deaconess Goodwin.

Social Service Conferences—The Girls' Friendly Society Social Service Committee of the diocese has been holding a series of most interesting and practical conferences on Saturday afternoons in the Cathedral Rooms.

The Rev. Howard K. Bartow led the first conference on February 16 on the subject "Cantonments and Their Environments". On February 28, "American Syndicalism; the I. W. W.", a book by John Graham Brooks, was the subject of a conference led by the Rev. William L. Clark, rector of St. Paul's church, Brookline.

On March 2 Miss Mary C. Wiggin, executive secretary of the Consumers' League, will speak on "War-Time Conditions of Industry for Women and Children".

On March 16 Miss Millicent Hosmer of the Boston Y. W. C. A. will speak on "Munition Workers".

On March 28 the final conference will be led by the Rev. Frederic C. Lauderburn, vicar of St. Stephen's church, Boston, taking as its basis a book by Mrs. Mary K. Simkhovitch of Greenwich House, New York City,—"The City Workers' World".

All these conferences are open to the public and begin at 3 o'clock.

Middleborough Legacy—Mrs. Maria L. M. Peirce of the Church of Our Saviour, Middleborough, recently deceased, has directed in her will the payment to the parish of $40,000 for the construction of a rectory, $8,000 for memorial windows and $19,000 for general parish expenses and has made the parish her residuary legatee. The Middleborough church, which is widely known as one of the most beautiful in the diocese, was built by Mrs. Peirce's husband, and this generous provision in her will assures its more nearly adequate upkeep and support.

An uniquely intimate and loving bequest was Mrs. Peirce's provision that all her rings and jewels be melted and made into a golden chalice, to be studded with the diamonds from her rings and brooches.

Mrs. Peirce's largest bequest was $100,000 for the construction and maintenance of a hospital in the town of Middleborough, to be known as St. Luke's Hospital.

The Rev. Ransom M. Church is rector of the Middleborough parish.

PHILADELPHIA

Noonday Services—Large congregations have gathered every noon at the Garrick Theatre and at St. Stephen's church for the noonday services since Lent began. These services are under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew each year. At Christ church there are many more every day. The services planned at Old St. Paul's had to be abandoned for lack of coal, St. Peter's has had to give up services of all sorts, the congregation is worshiping with the people of the Ascension on Broad Street. This is the first time that services at St. Peter s have been abandoned since 1759.

Bishop Williams at St. Stephen's—Bishop Charles D. Williams of Marquette has been the preacher at the noon services at St. Stephen s church on Tenth Street. He has been welcomed by unusual congregations, who gladly hear him tell of the spiritual meaning and message of the War. He says, "We are witnessing an advent of Christ, and a day of judgment. It is no wonder that, in this world situation, a premillennium and second-adventist madness should seize the minds who are saturated with a crude and literal interpretation of scripture prophecy. This madness has run like a pestilence through the popular religion of the day. This paralyzes all effort and endeavor to make the world better. Yet the voice of the day, and the voice of God cries out to the Church and to the world 'Why stand ye gazing into heaven? Look to the earth and do what you can to lay amid the wreck the true foundation of the kingdom of our God' ".

Again at another noon service, he said, "There have been profiteers, meat packers in Chicago, workmen in the shipyards, all culpable; all willing to hold back the country while they satisfy their private greed. The Romans used to nail such fellows by the ears; we cannot go so far; but they will reap their reward. For three years Europe has suffered and sacrificed; now America is being touched and tested.

Other Speakers at St. Stephen's—Bishop Thurston of Eastern Oklahoma, and the Rev. Mr. Van Etten of Pittsburgh are among the out-of-town Churchmen to speak during Lent at St. Stephen's. The Rev. Dr. Ross of Union Seminary, New York, is to be the one man other than a clergyman of the Church to speak.

Bible Lectures for the Church Club—Dean Bartlett of the Philadelphia Seminary is to give three lectures on "The English Bible" under the auspices of the Church Club. The final lectures will be given at the Church House on March 5 and March 19.

Day of Intercession—At St. Mark's Church, Locust Street, a Day of Intercession for the Church, for the Nation, for the Allies and for the Cause was held on Wednesday, February 20. The addresses were made by Bishop Matthews of New Jersey.

Churchmen's Conference at Old Christ Church—On Washington's Birthday a conference of Churchmen was held at Old Christ church. The general theme of the meeting was "The Challenge of the Present Crisis".

The meeting was opened by Bishop Garland, as chairman. The Rev. Carl Bloch, chaplain at Camp Dix, spoke on "The Church's Responsibility to the Men in the Military Service". Mr. Frederick Titsworth, secretary of the Army and Navy department of the Brotherhood, spoke on the "Brotherhood's Response".

After supper, which was served in the Neighborhood House of the Church, Mr. Charles E. Beury, who has just returned from Russia, spoke on the "Problems of Russia and the Far East". Dr. Washburn, the rector of Christ church, closed the conference with a stimulating appeal, "Men and Brethren, What Shall We Do?"

Clerical Brotherhood—The Clerical Brotherhood of Philadelphia will meet at the church house, Twelfth and Walnut Streets, on Monday, March 4. The subject, "The Diocese—Its Power of Local Government". The speaker will be the Rev. H. M. G. Huff.

PITTSBURGH

Memorial—A handsome window in three panels, the central one containing a very beautiful Madonna and Child, and the side ones made up of small ecclesiastical designs, was dedicated on the first Sunday in Lent, by the Rt. Rev. the Bishop of the Diocese, at the Saint Mary Memorial, Pittsburgh. At the base it bore the inscription, "In Memoriam, Edith Elisabeth Collins, Jun 7, 1914".

Clerical Union—The February meetin of the Pittsburgh Clerical Union took pla on Monday, the eighteenth, at the Church o the Ascension, opening with a celebration o the Holy Communion, followed by a bus ness meeting and luncheon, with a discus sion later, on "Vital Issues of Diocesa Convention", led by the Rev. Dr. Wyt Brown, rector of the church. The atten ance was remarkably good.

RHODE ISLAND

Notes—The Rev. William Hall William is officiating at St. George's church, Centr Falls, Rhode Island, in the vacancy of th rectorship.

By the will of the late Mr. James She ley the St. Elizabeth Home, Providenc Rhode Island, receives the income of the residue of his estate, after a bequest of $5,000 has been paid to a fraternal order.

Memorial Service—A memorial service for the Rev. Robert Murray, who recently died at his home in Waltham, Massachusetts, was held at St. John's church, Ashton, Rhode Island, on Sunday morning, February 10. Mr. Murray's last parish was at Ashton, where he was rector from 1874 to 1893. The sermon was preached by his successor and the present rector, the Rev. William Pressey. There was a large congregation present, and the sermon was a worthy tribute to one whose gentle qualities and fine characteristics will keep him long in memory.

MINNESOTA

Clergy Help Volunteers of America—Among the list of speakers at the mission hall of the Volunteers of America are the Rev. Charles C. Rollit, D.D., and the Rev. Hanford L. Russell of All Saints' church. In this connection it is interesting to note that a number of the clergy of Minneapolis are taking a very active part in this kind of work. Mr. Russell preaches regularly once a month at the Union Gospel Mission. Dr. Rollit and others have offered their services to the Volunteers and the Douglas Mission, and the Rev. E. R. Todd is doing a splendid work at the Wells Memorial chapel. This mission is under the direction of St. Mark's church, the Rev. James E.

Freeman, D.D., rector. Under the supervision of Mr. I. R. D. Hallowell there is a Sunday school with an enrolment of 150 children, the young people have clubs, a Christian Endeavor society, and in connection with the chapel there is a chapter of the Daughters of the King.

Lincoln's Birthday—Successful "Fathers' and Sons' Dinners" were held in a large number of the Twin City churches on Lincoln's Birthday.

Lent Means More This Year—Lenten observances, always solemn, have taken a deeper meaning this year than ever before to worshipers in Minneapolis churches. The spirit of national sacrifice, which has taken thousands of sons from local congregations, is adding intensity to the sacrifices which are part of the Lenten period. Self-sacrifices which heretofore have been purely religious in their import this year are helping also to win the War.

FREDERICK D. TYNER.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

nited Services—The United Lenten rvices of the churches of the city of rand Rapids are being held at Grace Epis- opal church this year. They started off ith a great deal of enthusiasm, and the hurch was crowded on the night of the rst service. Captain C. A. Mackintosh, an d Oxford man, now the rector of St. mes' church, Guelph, Ontario, and for ten onths in the front line trenches doing ed Cross duty, was the speaker. He has ad a great deal of experience as a chaplain the Army, having served in that capacity uring the Boer War. He was invalided ome as a result of wounds suffered in inistering to wounded soldiers out in e open.

Capt. Mackintosh stated that—from a oral point of view—conditions in the rmy were superior to those in ordinary homes. This has been proven by the recent investigation conducted by the Canadian Government which showed but 2 per cent. of the soldiers afflicted with disease, while of those arriving from farm and city over 13 per cent. were afflicted with various forms of disease.

Bishop Perry's Visit—The Secretary of the War Commission of the Episcopal Church, the Rt. Rev. James De Wolf Perry, came to Battle Creek to inspect the cantonment at Camp Custer, and see how the boys were getting on. He reported that he was much pleased by conditions there.

COLORADO

Joins the Army—The Rev. Francis E. Anthony, vicar of Trinity Memorial church, Denver, has gained the reluctant consent of Bishop Johnson to join the Army as a private and has been sent to Camp Greene, Charlotte, North Carolina. A farewell reception was offered him by the clergy with a small presentation which was presided over by the Bishop, whose secretary Mr. Anthony was, but the Bishop considers there are other branches of the service more suitable for ordained men than wielding the bayonet.

Parishes Not to Merge—The local press reported the amalgamation of St. John's cathedral with Ascension church. But this was premature and the union has been found impracticable. So a strong committee has been formed under Mr. John M. Kennedy, Jr., to restore the latter church, recently burnt, and enlarge the edifice, at a cost of $20,000. A similar amalgamation of All Saints' and St. Paul's has also been found unadvisable.

Notes—Plans are under way by the Rev. R. B. H. Bell to build a new Church of St. Thomas, Park Hill, Denver, and already $8,000 is in hand towards that purpose.

At a recent memorial service for the late Dr. John H. Houghton held in his beloved Church of St. Mark, Denver, $1,200 was subscribed to commence a fund for a fitting monument to him which will be continued for some years through an annual offering to be taken for that purpose.

The recently organized Men's Club of St. John's cathedral, Denver, met on February 8 under the leadership of Mr. J. H. Pershing, over sixty in number, and listened to an admirable address on the causes of the great War by Professor Duncan of Denver University.

As a result of the visit of Miss Withers and Miss Matthews just past, a weekly study class of missions is held every Thursday in Lent amongst the ladies of the cathedral under the direction of Mrs. W. B. Harrison.

Mr. Wm. Yardley, the greatly respected sexton of St. John's cathedral, who would have completed twenty-nine years of service on February 9, his eighty-fourth birthday, was buried on Thursday February 7, the service being taken by Bishop Johnson and Dean Hart, assisted by the cathedral staff.

EASTON

Personals—The Rev. T. Manley Sharpe, Ph.D., rector of Church Hill parish for five years past, has resigned to accept work in another diocese. The resignation takes effect Easter day. Dr. Sharpe for the past two years has been dean of the Middle Convocation of the diocese.

The Rev. Edwin S. Jinks, for the past three years rector at Cambridge, has resigned to accept a call to the parish at Elk Ridge, diocese of Maryland.

Notes—In keeping with the policy of many of the rural parishes of the diocese Christ church parish, Kent Island, has purchased an automobile for the use of the rector, the Rev. Hunter Davidson.

The Junior Auxiliary of the diocese is making special plans for a Junior Day to be observed early this Summer at one of the historic churches of the diocese. It is planned to have a series of short tableaux illustrative of the history of the Church in the diocese. The Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese now has a larger number of study classes for Lent than any previous year.

EASTERN OKLAHOMA

A Generous Gift—In the Church paper of his district Bishop Thurston writes: "The gracious and generous gift through the District of Oklahoma to the District of Eastern Oklahoma of an endowment for the Bishop Brooke room in All Saints' Hospital will eventually be $6,000. The exact amount given is $5,555.

"We were assembled in Oklahoma City partly for the purpose of celebrating Bishop Brooke's twenty-fifth anniversary in the Episcopate; and lo, they turn around and give Eastern Oklahoma nearly $6,000! It was a well-nigh overwhelming surprise to all of us; but we ought not to be surprised when we recall that Bishop Brooke's whole career has been one of constant unselfishness. Perhaps we ought not to say it, but it must be said that Mrs. Brooke secured this money during the last eighteen months, and that it came as a great surprise to Bishop Brooke himself; all of which only emphasizes the unselfishness of the family.

"We of Eastern Oklahoma receive the gift in trust and rejoice in the noble life for which it is a thank-offering!"

ALLEN JACOBS.

SOUTH CAROLINA

The Rev. W. S. Poyner, rector of St. Andrew's church, Birmingham, Alabama, has accepted the rectorship of St. John's church, Florence, South Carolina.

The Rev. A. S. Thomas will remain as rector of St. David's church, Choraw, until April 1, after which he will become rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, South Carolina.

The Rev. C. W. Frazer of Cuba has been called to the rectorship of St. Helena's church, Beaufort, South Carolina.

The Rev. W. S. Guoin, until recently, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Atlanta, Georgia, has entered upon his duties as rector of St. Jude's church, Walterboro, South Carolina.

The Rev. Oliver Hart, assistant at St. Michael's church, Charleston, South Carolina, has successfully passed the examination for a chaplain in the United States Army and is awaiting orders.

CHICAGO

Dean Bell at "Great Lakes"—Dean Bernard I. Bell of the cathedral at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, has finished the first half of his six months' work at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. The dean represents the War Commission at this, the largest Naval training station in the world, 28,000 men being in residence.

The dean has been honored by the Commandant with the appointment as Acting Chaplain, with instructions to assist the staff of regular Navy chaplains as one of them, thus helping them handle efficiently a situation vastly greater than their numbers would enable them to do. He has under his immediate care a section of the camp containing 3,000 men, to whom he ministers as chaplain, and in this capacity preaches each Sunday to a congregation of from 1,500 to 2,000 men.

The dean has baptized twelve men who registered as Episcopal by preference. Fifty-one men have been presented to the bishops for confirmation, in four classes. Four hundred and sixty-two Churchmen have been seen individually and 402 pastors of parishes have been furnished with addresses of their boys and urged to write to them on spiritual matters.

The Lenten Noonday Services — The Church Club of Chicago began the third season of noonday Lenten services held under its auspices at the Inter-Ocean building on Ash Wednesday, the speaker being the Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnston, D.D. A new feature this year is the inclusion of a layman, Mr. E. C. Mercer, in the list of speakers. Other speakers will be Dr. James E. Freeman, Bishop Fiske, Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins, Dean Bell, and Bishop Anderson.

Father and Son Week at Oak Park—The opening of "Father and Son Week" was fittingly observed at Grace church, Oak Park. On Sunday morning the rector, the Rev. Francis R. Godolphin, conducted special services. On Sunday afternoon a conference of fathers and sons was held at the parish house, when the subjects following were discussed: "Religion in Our Home", "Why Father and Son Should Both Work in Church", "Ways of Having Interesting Times as Pals for Father and Son", "The Joy of Being Chums".

A parish orchestra is being formed, thirty-five members having enroled to date. The orchestra played for the first time at the meeting of the Men's Club, and led in the singing of community songs. Later it furnished the music for the choir opera "Patience".

Word has been received finally that Knowlton Fisk, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur N. Fisk, who was a member of the Princess Patricia Regiment and reported missing since October 31, was killed in action. He is the second of the parishioners who have made the supreme sacrifice. The parish honor roll now contains eighty names.

Public Library Station at Cathedral—The latest feature of the Social Service work at the cathedral is the establishment of a station of the Chicago Public Library at the Mission House adjoining the cathedral. A librarian is on duty in the mornings and evenings. Thus the Sisters of the Community of St. Mary's resident at the Mission House have added what is destined to be one of the greatest aids in solving the "off the streets" problem in the congested district surrounding the Cathedral church.

HARRISBURG

Personals—The Rev. Lewis H. Huber, rector of St. James' church, Bedford, has accepted a call to St. Paul's church, Monongahela, in the diocese of Pittsburgh, and will enter upon his work there the middle of March.

The Rev. George T. Lascelle, assistant at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Matthew's, Sunbury, and begins his work there March 1.

The Rev. Harry D. Viets, assistant at St. Peter's, Philadelphia, has been called to the rectorship of St. John's, Carlisle.

VIRGINIA

Dr. Bell Ill—The Rev. W. Cosby Bell, D.D., of the Virginia Theological Seminary, has been obliged to return from France, where he served as chaplain of the 117th Regiment of Engineers, on account of an acute digestive trouble which would not yield to treatment in France on account of conditions of life and work at the front. His illness is not of a serious or permanent nature and his friends will be glad to learn that after a short period of rest his health will be entirely restored. Dr. Bell expects to resume his regular work at the Seminary at the beginning of the Spring term.

Transferred to Camp Johnson—The Rev. William H. Cumpston, who recently resigned Trinity church, Fredericksburg, Virginia, to become religious secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Camp Sevier, South Carolina, has been transferred to Camp Jackson, Columbia, South Carolina, and began his new duties on February 1.

Lenten Preachers—The preachers for the Midday Lenten Services, to be held as usual this year in St. Paul's church, Richmond, under the auspices of the Richmond Clericus and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, are: The Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D.D., bishop of East Carolina; the Rev. Daniel G. MacKinnon, D.D., rector of Christ church, Newbern, North Carolina; the Rev. S. Roger Tyler, rector Trinity church, Huntington, West Virginia; the Rev. H. H. Covington, rector of St. Paul's church, Norfolk, Virginia; the Rev. A. B. Kinsolving, D.D., rector of St. Paul's church, Baltimore, Maryland.

WYOMING

Cathedral Home Removed—The removal of the Cathedral Home for Children from its present quarters in the Bishop's House in Laramie to its new location will soon be an accomplished fact. This is a bit of news over whch the Church in Wyoming is rejoicing.

Last year Bishop Thomas purchased from the ecclesiastical authority of the Roman Catholic Church the building and grounds of the old St. Joseph's Hospital, Laramie, a splendid piece of property closely adjacent to the University of Wyoming. Mr. John W. Hay of Rock Springs has now promised that by April 1 he will have raised the remainder necessary for the completion of the new Home. The present quarters of the Cathedral Home are overflowing, and many applications have had to be rejected for this reason.

Debts Paid—This seems to be a year of debt-paying in Wyoming. Christ church, Cody, announces that it has completely paid the indebtedness of over $700 which has been over it. The Rev. Alan R. Chalmers is in charge of the work at Cody.

Green River has added a noble accomplishment to the list of achievements for the year. It is now completing the payments upon the rectory purchased in that city. The money has been raised in an incredibly short time, and it will not be long before the rectory is entirely the property of the Church, to be enjoyed by the Rev. W. Hewton Ward and his family.

Clerical Workers—Two new clerical workers have recently come to the District, both of them being assigned work in the Deanery of the Platte. The Rev. Oliver Kingman, recently of Colorado, has taken up the work at All Saints' church, Wheatland, with duty in Chugwater, Glendo and adjacent points.

Mr. Howard R. Brinker, who has been given the work at Christ church, Douglas, with additional duty at St. George's, Lusk, can hardly be called a new worker here. During his course at the Philadelphia Divinity School from which he has just graduated, he has spent his Summers working in the field. He had charge of the work at Meeteetse during the Summer of 1916, and during the vacation period of 1917 Mr. Brinker served the church at Glenrock. He is a candidate for Holy Orders in this District.

New Junior Chapter—The Junior Auxiliary is proud to announce the organization of a new chapter, at Jackson, under the direction of Mrs. M. Belknap Nash, wife of the clergyman in charge of St. John's. This new branch, composed of fifteen members, is now working in the interests of the Cathedral Home for Children, Laramie.

WEST MISSOURI

Church Consecration—One of the most notable services ever held in Joplin was the consecration of St. Philip's church recently. The church was built by the Rev. C. A. Weed, now of Kansas City, and was opened in 1911. The Rev. Henry N. Hyde, the present rector, has been able to clear off all of the debt left by Mr. Weed, thus making the consecration possible. Among the guests from out of the diocese were the Rt. Rev. Daniel S. Tuttle, D.D., who, as one time Bishop of all Missouri, had Joplin under his care, and the Rt. Rev. James R. Winchester, D.D., bishop of Arkansas, who was the former diocesan of the present rector of the parish. The consecration itself was very impressive, the Bishop of the diocese being consecrator. The sermon was preached by the Presiding Bishop. After the service the members of the parish and their guests repaired to the Connor Hotel, where dinner was served. After which, Bishop Partridge acting as toastmaster, addresses were made by the visiting Bishops, the Rev. C. A. Weed and the rector.

Noonday Services—The noonday services in Kansas City during the present Lenten season are being held in Grace-Holy Trinity church. The clergy of the city are the noonday speakers.

CUBA

Losses—By the deaths of the Rev. Messrs. Snavely and Moreno, the removal and subsequent death of the Rev. Mr. Sharpe, and the retirement of the Ven. Archdeacon Sturges, the Church in Cuba has suffered severe losses lately, which are to be increased by the transfer of the Rev. C. W. Fraser of Ensenada de Moro to the rectorship of St. Mary parish, Jacksonville. Consequently the extension of the work has halted completely during the last six months. With the reduced force of men on the field it has been impossible to provide for the needs of all the mission stations, some of which have been closed for the time being. For much of the work a knowledge of the Spanish language is necessary, and for all the work self-denial and privation of many of the luxuries of life, consequently it is difficult to find the right men for the places.

Three ex-Roman Catholic priests are working among us: the Rev. Pablo Muñoz, the Rev. Juan Tomàs, and the Rev. Angel Ferro, a very eloquent preacher, who is licensed as a lay reader and to deliver ser-missions, and is preaching missions in various parts of the field.

Rapid Fire Services—At Cienfuegos there is a mission and a parochial school, the Rev. R. C. Moreno being in immediate charge, and going twice a month to Constancia, a large sugar plantation a few miles away. The work at the latter place is rather unique. The workmen and their families live in small villages from six to ten miles apart, connected by railway lines. Mr. R. E. Porter, formerly a Methodist minister, is the general director of a large number of schools in these villages, and in many of them services are held at least once a month. The missionary visits them either on a railway motor car, or when that is out of commission, on horseback. It has to be a rapid fire and very informal work; there is little time for vesting, and no place for it. Sometimes as many as ten or twelve places will be visited in one day.

Damage Repaired—Practically all the injury done by the cyclone last Fall on the Isle of Pines has been repaired. The Church buildings at Santa Fé, Columbia, Santa Barbara and McKinley have been restored, together with the rectory at Santa Fé.

Gifts and Improvements—At Sueño, a Santiago suburb, a new parish house has been completed, dedicated and occupied. It is the most complete structure of the sort we have in Cuba. It combines a chapel with various rooms for the work of the parish.

Owing to the lack of material and the disturbed conditions incident to the last attempted revolution the work upon the church at Cèspedes near Camaguay was suspended for some time. It has been recommended and the building will soon be completed and occupied by the congregation of that place.

The three white marble steps for the altar of the cathedral in Havana have been laid, and the face and two ends of the altar have been finished in marble. A new pulpit, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Brownson of the cathedral parish, has been in place for some time, and on Septuagesima Sunday Bishop Hulse dedicated a new choir parapet and lectern, which have been placed at the entrance to the choir. WESTERN NEBRASKA

Military Wedding—A military Church wedding of more than local interest was solemnized in St. Mark's pro-cathedral, Hastings, Tuesday morning, February 12, when Ruth Allen, the beautiful and accomplished daughter of the Rt. Rev. and Mrs. George A. Beecher, was married to Lieutenant Adrian Brian of the Fortieth U. S. Infantry. At 7.30 a. m. there was a service of confirmation in which the groom was presented by the Dean of the cathedral, the Rev. J. S. Budlong, Bishop Beecher administering the laying on of hand. This service was followed by the nuptial Eucharist, the Bishop being celebrant, with the Dean assisting. During a fifteen-minute intermission the cathedral was filled with friends and Church folk, and promptly at 8.30 the marriage ceremony was begun. Mr. Dorsey Baird, at the organ, played the Star Spangled Banner and the Marseillaise followed by the Mendelssohn Wedding March. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Elizabeth Beecher.

English Church News

Dr. Gore Withdraws His Protest—The situation as regards Dr. Hensley Henson is distinctly easier. I said last week that it was a pity that Dr. Henson's disclaimer of heretical views, which he made in his letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, could not have been uttered sooner. It has made all the difference to the attitude of the Bishop of Oxford, who has now written to the Archbishop withdrawing his protest. "I joyfully accept his present assurance," says Dr. Gore.

The confirmation of the election at Bow church did not, however, pass without challenge. But the objections were heard by the vicar-general, Lord Parmoor, "in chambers," as the lawyers would say, i. e., sitting in the vestry before the public ceremony. There were two protests from Hereford diocese, based on Dr. Henson's published views. Lord Parmoor could not do otherwise than reply that he had no jurisdiction to decide such questions. The Church ceremony then took place. The usual legal formalities were gone through: Dr. Henson took the oath of allegiance on his knees, and at the end of the proceedings he gave the blessing.

It is too early to say whether the new situation created by Dr. Henson's profession of faith will modify the attitude of the bishops. It will be interesting to see what verdict history will pronounce on an appointment disapproved by so many bishops. It must cause even Dr. Henson himself some misgiving to find that the Bishops of London, Winchester, Oxford, Salisbury, Exeter, Worcester and Ely have all refused to take part in his consecration. No doubt a sufficient number of bishops will be found. The Bishop of Birmingham, Dr. Russell Wakefield, has refused the request of his clergy that he should not take part.

What the Bishops of London and Winchester Say—Most of the bishops enumerated have expressed themselves very copiously, and I have no space even to summarize their utterances. Two quotations will be enough. The Bishop of London, after giving his reasons for refusal, adds, "I shall always hope that he will, if he becomes a bishop, lay aside the controversial pen and develop that pastoral side of his character that we who knew him and loved him in Bethnal Green and Barking knew to be so strong in him". (The reference is to Dr. Henson's early work in East London, when he was a strong High Churchman.) The Bishop of Winchester, Dr. Talbot, who hopes that Dr. Henson may be led to a sense of the wholeness and beauty of the Catholic Faith, desires that "out of this matter may come some changes which will give the Church some effective share and voice in the appointment of bishops. Autocracy is out of fashion; and the uncontrolled autocracy of the Prime Minister of the day is, in such a matter, hardly tolerable".

I hope this is the last note I shall have to write on this sore subject. Dr. Henson will be duly consecrated in a few days, and probably his friends are wondering why, as the matter is one for the uncontrolled judgment of the Prime Minister, this brilliant clergyman has had to wait so long for his elevation. What was Mr. Asquith thinking about?

"The Gospel of Giving"—The published experiences of our chaplains at the front, now contained in quite a long list of books, have had at least one immediate result. London diocese is initiating a movement which may grow into a big thing. A small circle of earnest clergy and laity is convinced that the Church has never yet responded to the call to sacrifice. The War has taught us the possibilities of human nature—it will give itself unreservedly, when inspired to do so. The emphasis of the Church's teaching has in the past been on receiving rather than giving: personal salvation, and spiritual privileges. The true "good tidings" on the contrary is that men are privileged to offer "themselves, their souls and bodies". The business of the Church is to give time, money, thought, heart and work to Christ. The detail of money is not avoided, but it is not put in the front rank. It is considered merely as a test of sincerity, not an end in itself. The movement will not be exploited in the interest of any fund, not even diocesan or missionary. The Bishop of London is asking his clergy to concentrate on the "Gospel of Giving" this Lent. Literature written by competent clergy has been sent round to all the incumbents. The movement is under the immediate direction of the Bishop of Kensington, Dr. Maude, who heads a committee of forty members nominated by the Bishop of London. It is a little too late for other dioceses to fall into line this Lent. But the London propaganda will be carefully watched. If it could be made a national movement, the Church might acquire that new morale which, according to our chaplains, is our greatest need.

The Bishop of Tokyo's Renunciation—Bishop Montgomery of the S. P. G. has announced the resignation of the Bishop of South Tokyo, Dr. Boutflower, who has come to the conclusion that the time has arrived for the consecration of a native Japanese bishop for that diocese. The Synod which meets in March will accordingly proceed to the election of a Japanese diocesan. This eventuality has always been more or less foreseen: Japan is a nation of first importance nowadays, and its Church must in time be staffed by itself. There would be nothing extraordinary in the news that Dr. Boutflower had decided to return to England—there would be a fine opening for him at home—more especially as he confesses that after eight years he has not succeeded in mastering the Japanese language. But it takes a man of his caliber to strike out a new line. He is not coming home; he is going to stay in Japan to act as suffragan bishop under the new Japanese diocesan. His work will in future lie chiefly among the Europeans in the diocese. The Archbishop of Canterbury and the Presiding Bishop of the United States have given their approval, as has also the General Synod of the "Nippon Sei Kokwai". Dr. Boutflower's renunciation has evidently impressed the Japanese Christians; and it is a precedent which will not be forgotten in our own Church.

Miss Scudder Protests

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Dear Sir: Your editorial note on my letter, in your issue of February 2, really forces me to bother you again. It seems a pity to quote a sentence without the context. I wrote the sentence you quote: "We know how much reason Germany has for despising our claim to a kinder and more just civilization than her own;" but I continued at once: "The writer does not concede this claim." In view of this sequel it is curious for you to proceed on the assumption that I personally think the civilization of Germany just and kind. I do not think it; but I am sure the plain German folk at home consider it so, and I think they have a case, though not a case that can convince an American.

I have never lived in Germany since I was a little girl, because I have always felt a distaste for that country. My European leisure has been spent in my beloved Latin countries—France and Italy—and in the motherland dearest of all to New England hearts. But from many Americans who have loved Germany and lived there in the past I have heard of the affectionate domestic life, the love for children, the devotion to music and the arts, the general kindliness, and the paternal care for the welfare of simple people.

I do not want or approve paternal care. I think the War has discredited the basic assumptions of German life. But to say, as you do, that German civilization is "diabolically cruel and unchristian", is to my mind a fearsome and—shall I speak out frankly?—an unchristian statement. It frightens me for the future. With a deluded Germany I can live, when her eyes shall be opened. A devilish Germany I am not called on to live with, because fortunately I cannot conceive it. You will note that I carefully guarded my statement in my letter to apply to the internal policy of the country, not to its methods of waging war.

So far as our own civilization goes, I supposed that all thoughtful persons acknowledged in deep penitence the bitter cruelty of certain of its phases. We Americans are not fighting in self-righteousness because we think ourselves better than other people. We dare to fight because at least we confess our sins to Him who is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and because we mean, God helping us, to free not only Germany but the whole world, including our part of it, from cruelty. Not the virtuous fighting the wicked, but the penitent fighting the impenitent should be our formula for this War. We can only open the eyes of other nations to their sins in proportion as we cast out the evil in our own. Is not that good Lenten and Evangelical doctrine? One acknowledges sadly that there are few symptoms of penitence as yet in Germany. One does see many in England, and they are not lacking here. "More and more", says an article in the current New Republic, "the price of destroying the impossible military autocracy of Germany is coming to be destruction of the similarly impossible industrial autocracy in the United States and throughout the British Commonwealth".

To deepen penitence at home and to hold the Nation and her Allies by that means true to their best ideals would seem the distinctive function of the Christian Church in war time.

Sincerely yours,

VIDA D. SCUDDER.

Wellesley, Massachusetts, Shrove Tuesday.

NOTE—If Miss Scudder will refer to her manuscript of the article published in our Christmas number she will see that the words "The writer does not concede this claim" do not occur. Miss Scudder's recantation was made in her letter published two weeks later in THE CHURCHMAN, in which she courteously calls the Editor to account for censoring the paragraph "All the time we fight Germany we know if we are honest how much reason Germany has for despising our claim to a kinder and more just civilization than her own".

We have rubbed our eyes several times in reading that sentence to see if by any warrantable use of English it could be made to mean other than that all honest men must acknowledge that Germany has reason for despising our claim to a kinder and more just civilization than her own. But to say that Germany has reason for her claim and then to add "I do not concede that claim", is to confess that you do not concede what is reasonable. However, the disclaimer not being present in the original document submitted to THE CHURCHMAN, the Editor was not confronted with the task of censoring both the logic and ethics of Miss Scudder's position.

Miss Scudder finds our statement "The German civilization, as now dominated by Berlin, is diabolically cruel and unchristian" to be an unchristian statement. But if it happens to be true, is it still an unchristian statement? Dr. Reginald J. Campbell in his last article in THE CHURCHMAN calls the "German mentality a truly diabolical thing, dark, sinister and dreadful, that has thrown its hellish spell over a great and virile race. It is the complete expression of everything on this planet that is opposed to the reign of Christ in the hearts of men".

The Bishop of Oxford, who has been teaching England to pray for her enemies, writes: "Germany has one ideal of human relations, and God revealed in Christ has another. One is of hell and the other of heaven".

Unless Christianity is mere sentimentalism we can conceive it to be not unchristian to say, with the records of the present War before our eyes, that the German civilization as now dominated by Berlin is diabolically cruel and unchristian.—EDITOR.

National Prohibition

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

During the past twelve months almost every diocese in the United States has gone on record in favor of national prohibition in some form. A recent canvass of the clergy of our American Church by the Church Temperance Society showed that of the replies received 98 per cent. are in favor

Ask children what cereal food they like best, and they usually say Puffed Grains.

Ask which Puffed Grain, and those who know them will usually say Corn Puffs.

Hominy Bubbles

Corn Puffs are drop-size bubbles, toasted, thin and flimsy. They are pellets of hominy, steam exploded into crisp, airy globules.

The flavor is like toasted corn flakes. But the bubble form and filmy texture add wondrous fascinations.

They seem like confections. Yet they are corn hearts made easy to digest. Every food cell is exploded.

In these days every home should know how good corn foods can be. And these are the supreme corn dainties. Try them.

New Thought Christianized. By James M. Campbell, D.D. New York: Crowell Company. $1.00.

Dr. Campbell does not attempt a philosophical conciliation, nor a theological harmonizing. The book does not discuss fundamentals; consequently it is rather unconvincing material to offer for the conversion of a new-thoughter to Christianity or vice versa. Its aim is to express Christian principles of faith and ethics in the terms commonly used by new-thought cults. "The Law of Suggestion," "Introspection," "The Upward Look," "Repose" and "The Highest Selfhood" are among the best of the twenty chapters. Each chapter is followed by a list of affirmations. The subject is timely, and the book is no doubt intended for the general reader who is inclined to view his religion through the crystal light and mists of "new thought."

This is a little linen-covered book containing a part of the services of the English Prayer Book, arranged for popular use in mission churches or where the liturgy of the Anglican Church is not very well known. Undoubtedly it will have a place and be found useful by those for whom it was prepared.

of outlawing the liquor traffic. Of the bishops who have replied to our questionnaire all have favored prohibition—not one has declared himself against that policy. The Church Temperance Society might, therefore, be considered as fairly representing the mind of the Church, when at its last annual meeting it passed a unanimous resolution for National Prohibition.

In THE CHURCHMAN for February 2 the Rev. T. L. Cole of Hudson deprecates this action of the Church Temperance Society, but will Mr. Cole consider the following facts:

First. The Brewers' Journal for the current month shows that the United States last year brewed more than sixty million barrels of beer, while Germany brewed only seven million, and at the present time Germany has closed its breweries and is almost under total prohibition in the interests of efficiency.

But German brewers in this country are doing more to win the War for Germany by their coal-consuming, efficiency-destroying breweries and saloons than they are accomplishing by their submarines, to the delight of their master, the Kaiser, who at the outbreak of hostilities said that the nation that used the least alcohol would win the War.

Need any loyal American apologize for advocating the prohibition of any luxury that puts the safety of our country in danger?

Secondly. Forty years ago, when the constitution of the Church Temperance Society was written, it was supposed that alcohol in moderation was harmless and even beneficial. Science now declares alcohol to be a protoplasmic poison, and a narcotic habit-forming drug. We have a Federal law prohibiting the sale of narcotic, habit-forming drugs. Why should the narcotic, habit-forming drug that does more to destroy American efficiency than all others combined be made an exception?

The Psalms in March

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

The Sundays in March will fall on identical dates with those in February. Why then will not the reverend clergy use on March 10, 17 and 24, not the psalter for those days read in February, but three of those portions appointed for the mornings of the first seven days of the month, which nowadays are so seldom used as to be unheard by many of the present generation of churchgoers? This suggestion ought to appeal with special force to those rectors who delight in using the psalter according to their own whim instead of as appointed in the Prayer Book. Indeed, the rubrics might be in a part of the Blook closed, if not sealed, so far as too many of our clergy evince any knowledge of them.

It is incomprehensible that the Litany is not more used, and especially now that we are at war. In fifteen years' attendance at a great metropolitan church the writer did not hear the Litany said there fifteen times. And there are Canticles and parts of the Communion Office to say nothing of other offices, that are unknown to many communicants, and apparently to our "spiritual teachers (and) pastors".

What the people in the pews want is not tinkering with the Book of Common Prayer but to have it used as it is, reverently, advisedly, understandingly, and "in a tongue understanded of the people"; let us have less genuflection and more inflection.

It is told of Forrest, the great tragedian, that upon a secular occasion, in a mixed company, and at request, he went upon his knees and said the Lord's Prayer so as to bring tears to the eyes of every auditor. But too many of those who minister in our churches seem to emulate one another in efforts to bring tears to the eyes of a graven image.

CHARLES LAMSON GRIFFIN.

Dr. Smyth on Unity

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

The Presiding Bishop, Bishop Tuttle, has authorized me to make public his intention to lay before the House of Bishops at their coming meeting in New York, April 10, the Appeal for some act of Unity, which has received some hundred signatures. With it will be sent a communication, which I am now preparing, with a full statement of what we would urge as now most desirable. The announcement of this kind offer of Bishop Tuttle to lay the matter before the bishops for, as he says, "possible fruitful" consideration is gladly welcomed by us. Doubtless it will be of interest to your readers to learn of it. Any suggestions from any quarter I shall be pleased to receive. An open mind and a good will for unity the times require of us all around, do they not? Sincerely yours,

NORMAN SMYTH.

Obituary

SARAH G. HAYDOCK

A noble character whose training as a nurse developed innate qualities of heart and mind, making her a tower of strength to all with whom she came in contact. After twenty-six years of intimate friendship, and after watching her face the inevitable outcome of her last illness, I recognize how wonderfully her Christian faith supported her in that trial, likewise those suffering with her, and understand how her unselfish thought for others, of whatever race or creed, was characteristic of her whole life. May she rest in peace and reap a rich reward!

PROHIBITION OF SUNDAY SPORTS IS UNDEMOCRATIC

Says Brooklyn Rector, Opposing Views of N. Y. Sabbath Committee

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—The Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, rector of St. Ann's church, has addressed to the New York Sabbath Committee a letter on "Sabbath Observance" in reply to a request from that organization urging him to protest against two bills before the New York State Legislature which would allow baseball games and certain other sports on Sunday. He said in part:

"I regret to say that not only do I fail to experience any enthusiasm for your point of view, but, on the contrary, find myself much out of sympathy with it, and that for several reasons.

"The prohibition of such games and exercises is utterly undemocratic, inasmuch as it affects only the poor and middle classes, for whether the law permits it or not, the man of means now enjoys his Sunday golf, tennis, boating and fishing at will and I see no reason why the poor man, who is in much greater need of recreation, should be deprived of similar privileges. I cannot see that baseball and fishing for the poor man are any worse than golf and tennis for the rich.

"Even though we admit for the moment the desirability of the Sabbatarian ideal for which you stand, we must face the fact that the ideal is not realizable at present. Possibly our young men ought to spend all day Sunday in church or reading their Bibles, but as a matter of fact, they do not. It is not a matter of attaining the ideal, but of choosing, if you please, the lesser of two evils, and for my part I feel that our young men are much better off participating in sane and healthful outdoor exercise than loafing around street corners or playing cards or pool in dingy back rooms, whence evil is sure to ensue.

"I am thoroughly opposed to the whole tendency to Sabbatarianize the Lord's Day. The evil that has been done throughout the ages by this process is incalculable. The ancient Jewish Sabbath had become a 'burden heavy to be borne' in our Lord's day and He did not hesitate to transgress some of its petty restrictions, and in reply to His legislatic critics He laid down the principle which we lose sight of at our peril, 'The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath'."

Chinese Church Consecrated

YUNGMENG, CHINA.—On December 4 the Church of the Ascension, Yungmeng, was consecrated. It meets a pressing need, in furnishing a central church for a widely scattered work. The building, which cost only $2,440 Mexican, is commodious and substantial and not too elaborate for a country station

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Consecration of St. Ambrose, Groton—Two years ago the Rev. F. W. Dickinson, then a deacon, went to minister to a faithful group of people who were worshiping in a hall in Groton, New York. His faithful services in that community have been rewarded by the building of a beautiful Gothic church which was consecrated on Quinquagesima Sunday by Bishop Fiske.

The architect was Mr. W. H. Miller, who donated his services. The furnishings of the church were largely memorials and were given as follows: The altar, given by Mr. Frederick T. Johnson, was in memory of his mother, Mary Caroline Treman Johnson. The font was the gift of Grace church, Elmira, which also gave the pews and the cushions. The office and Eucharistic lights were given by Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Yates. The altar cross was the gift of Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Potter. The processional cross was presented by Mr. and Mrs. H. McD. Brown.—WALTER E. JONES.

LONG ISLAND

Hoover Dinner—The fifteenth anniversary of the Rev. T. J. Lacey, Ph.D., rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, was celebrated by a supper in the parish hall, in strict accord with Mr. Hoover's requirements.

The speakers were the Rev. George H. Hooper, Mr. L. K. Mangum, and Mrs. Deforrest, president of the Daughters of the King, who presented the rector with a desk and chair.

The coal situation here has necessitated curtailment of parish work and services, and, unable to secure it, they have united with the Church of the Messiah, and on Ash Wednesday night a procession of about fifty people marched with their rector to the Church of the Messiah, adding to its numbers all the way.

Just as they were on the verge of suspending services for a couple of Sundays owing to these same fuel conditions, help came through a man who is not a member nor even an attendant of the church. Learning of their plight he sent a wagon-load of coal from his own cellar to tide them over the difficulty. MARY E. SMYTH.

Our Contributors

Miss Julia C. Emery was omitted from "Our Contributors" last week. It wasn't that we failed to send over the copy. The paragraph about Miss Emery had been set up for two weeks. But our printer (who, by the way, is also the printer for The Spirit of Missions) evidently though it quite superfluous to introduce Miss Emery to the readers of The Churchman. We are very grateful to Miss Emery for giving us the interesting sketch of Mrs. Twing, the first secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, which appeared last week. Ever since Mrs. Twing laid down that secretaryship in 1876, Miss Julia Emery has been the beloved leader of American Churchwomen in their missionary work. To her is largely due the strong organization of the Woman's Auxiliary today. It was only last January, on the completion of the Pilgrimage of Prayer, that Miss Emery finished her work at the Church Missions House. One may still find her, however, in a little office on the sixth floor, devoting the time that relief from the duties of the secretaryship has given her, to writing for the Church papers on the subjects that she knows so well. This biographical sketch of a "Woman of a Former Time" will be followed by similar sketches by various authors.

The Rev. Edward Clowes Chorley, D.D., the rector of St. Philip's Church-in-the-Highlands, Garrison-on-Hudson, New York, has been a frequent contributor to The Churchman for many years. Our readers will remember with pleasure the historical series he prepared in connection with the meeting of General Convention in St. Louis. Dr. Chorley was born in England, but educated in this country. As chairman of the Press and Publicity Committee of General Convention, Dr. Chorley has done exceptional work. Everyone admitted that the unusually accurate and well-written newspaper reports of the St. Louis Convention, especially those of the Associated Press, were entirely due to Dr. Chorley's journalistic insight and careful handling of the situation. Dr. Chorley has a great many excellent ideas in regard to possible activities of his committee between meetings of Convention, but the limited funds at the disposal of the committee curtails its activity. Dr. Chorley is histographer of the diocese of New York.

The Last Article on Training the Clergy appears this week. The four articles, which origially made up a single paper read by Dr. Peters before The Club, are to be issued in pamphlet form.

The Rev. William Levering DeVries, Ph.D., who has sent us a very timely account of the work that the Episcopal Church at the capital is doing in the Army and Navy, is resident canon of the Cathedral in Washington and Washington correspondent of The Churchman. This work is especially interesting just now in view of the local fuel administrator's recent order to close two-thirds of the churches in the city. Canon DeVries' article emphasizes the importance of religious work in Washington. It is surely a time when we can ill afford to see the doors of the churches barred to the crowd of soldiers, sailors and war workers that throng the streets of the capital.

The Rev. Henry Bradford Washburn, B.D., contributes our article on "Lenten Reading" this week. Mr. Washburn has the clergy specially in mind, but his suggestive list will undoubtedly prove useful to the thoughtful layman as well. Mr. Washburn is professor of Ecclesiastical History at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge.

The Rev. James Cairns, our English correspondent, sends us the following note with his letter appearing this week: "I hope the censor will allow me to say that if one of my letters has failed to arrive—that posted on January 20—it is probably due to the loss of mails by enemy action, which the post office has announced."

V. N. B. GROTON TELLS OF LIFE IN CAMP AND TOWN

rk of Soldier Pastor at Camp Hancock, Georgia

TLANTA, GEORGIA.—The Rev. N. B. Grorector of St. Thomas's church, Whitesh, is working at Camp Hancock as one he special camp pastors appointed by the Commission. He describes his work er two heads, in camp and in town. ike to think," he says, "of our Church s in camp—possibly there are 2000 of n—as if they were some great parish. n among them ever so much as a rector nong his parishioners in any one of our copal churches throughout the United es. I am trying to meet and know them onally, and be a real 'pastor.'

With this ideal to live up to, you would me from day to day talking with the of a company at 'mess,' or mingling a group of them in a company street een long rows of tents, or speaking le one of the tents to a few of the men sitting close to the tent stove so we d keep warm; or perhaps you would me traveling about from tent to tent liscover some one man in particular se rector or Sunday school teacher had ed his name to me. We 'talk of many gs'—the weather (it has been really cold in this Sunny South), the welcome n us all by people of Augusta, the intenand sometimes most interesting trainon the drill field or in the trenches; talk of home and of the only slight ibility of getting a furlough at Christtime. Sometimes we speak about how h God has to do with the war, and now then somebody mentions the soldier's ion of today.

ut it is almost never that the men talk t the war itself; nor is there any ght in the average soldier's mind here mp that somehow or other he should an opportunity, at least once in a while ng these days, to be made more ready eet whatever may happen to him 'over e' in France. It is not often though nd our talk till these boys have underd that my being here stands for at least things: a reminder that our Church has forgotten them and also a reminder they must not forget they owe a loyalty down here in Augusta to their Church to God.

ut usually something else has been done re we end our talk. It is this: all or some of the Church boys, in that particular company where I had been visiting, have formed themselves into a group whose duties are like those of a chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew—to get into touch with other Episcopalians they may find in their company of 250 or 260 boys, to bring me into touch with them personally, and most of all to be a leavening influence for good throughout the whole company. The little groups of men formed in this way will be a power not only here in Hancock but also abroad when their regiments are in France: and individually the men will return home finer, stronger, more useful.

"In this way I spend a whole week in one regiment of ten or twelve companies—each company averaging 250 men. Then the following Sunday morning at 8 o'clock, in one of the five Y. M. C. A. buildings, I meet with our Church boys of the regiment and with all other Christian boys who care to come with them. We kneel round the Lord's table and celebrate the Holy Communion.

IN TOWN.

"To the soldiers the camp stands for work. Augusta itself—its streets, movies, theatres, cafes—stands for just the opposite. The soldiers come to town for a 'change' from camp life. Here again their Church meets them and tries to add to their 'good times' in town.

"Here in this big house, at 638 Greene street, is my room. It is very large, like all rooms in old southern houses. But it is not merely to this one room that groups of boys are made welcome, but to this whole house. For Dr. and Mrs. Oertel, who live here, seem to want their home to be 'open house' for any and all our boys. Indeed, it is from this home that I have learned the full meaning of southern hospitality.

"In G troop of the old First Pennsylvania Cavalry, for instance, I found an earnest group of Churchmen—seven of them—who had helped especially in finding others and bringing them to the Holy Communion three weeks ago when I had the service with the cavalry regiment. These men made up the first group that came down here from camp for the evening. They reached here about half-past eight; at ten o'clock we all adjourned to the dining-room for a miniature 'banquet' and plenty of good—really good—coffee, each man taking 'seconds' and some taking 'thirds' before the feast ended!

"In the 109th Infantry regiment I found two boys from Calvary church, Conshohocken, whose names had been sent by their rector. Scattered all over the camp were four other boys from the same parish. These boys all came down together for an evening—and they too learned how much their Church cares for their 'good times' while they are in camp. Besides this they found a real home, and, for an evening at least, they breathed the atmosphere that belongs in such a home. As one of the boys said: it was so good to sit at a table where he saw a white tablecloth and napkins!

"This coming week the schedule runs so: Monday night, boys of Holy Trinity church, West Chester; Tuesday night, boys from D company of the 112th Infantry regiment; Thursday night, boys from St. Paul's church, Doylestown. Once in a while I find it a good plan to go to bed early—and get a real night's sleep myself!"

The Churchman

SATURDAY - MARCH 9 - 1918

Greetings

A VISIT to the United States from His Grace, the Archbishop of York, would at any time be an event of striking interest to American Churchmen. He would be warmly welcomed as a representative of the other Church and he would be warmly welcomed for himself. The career of Archbishop Lang has been sympathetically followed by Churchmen in America since the days he began his work at Portsea. But for nearly a year we have been proud to count ourselves an ally of the other country; England and America are closer together at this hour than they have been at any other time since we became a nation. It warms our hearts to believe this and it kindles high hopes as we contemplate what such unity may mean for the future. Churchmen alone, therefore, do not claim His Grace as exclusively their guest. We shall think of him as an ambassador from Christian England to Christian America. As such, he does not come to speed up our war production, our shipbuilding and enlistments. He comes to speak to our hearts of the thoughts that lie deep in the heart of Christian England. The spirit of his visit was betokened in that solemn prayer of dedication with which he closed his first noonday service in old Trinity, when preacher and congregation, upon their knees, repeated: "We here offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto Thee." THE CHURCHMAN adds its most cordial greetings to those which our countrymen will be saying this week to England's unofficial ambassador to America.

Our Teacup Philosophers

A GOOD deal may be said for the unphilosophical mind that sees things singly and with passion. From perusing the columns of some of the weeklies now springing up among us over night, devoted to the leisurely and dispassionate discussion of the War and the world that is to be after the War, we turn with refreshment to some of our more prejudiced journals which see in the Prussian menace about as many evils as America can safely handle at one time.

There are times when it is dangerous to the morale of a people to be open-minded to too many sides of too many questions all at the same moment. This pale cast of thought is a luxury in which only a small minority of people can now afford to indulge. It sets up too many inhibitions to decisive action. When armies begin to march across frontiers somebody has got to make up his mind. We would not make light of the people who are gathering over their teacups discussing Bolshevism and reconstruction after the War. They have their spiritual and political uses. But we confess to having larger sympathy with the lowbrow order of Americans who have inherited some of the quick-reaction temperament of our ancestors who threw the tax-ridden tea straight into Boston harbor.

There is something to be said for the moral indignation to which one side of a question appears enough right and another side enough wrong to leave no doubt where we should employ its energy. The decision having been made, it puts its shoulder to the plow or its hand to the sword and keeps at the job until something is accomplished. Some of our editorial staffs are to be congratulated that America is far enough from the Prussian frontier to give their able thinkers leisure to mull over all the industrial and political sins that America has ever committed. But after reading a certain number of such morally detached editorials, there is danger of carrying away an impression similar to that which we are told Dr. Speer left the other day in his Columbia College address, that perhaps we have so much exposed glass in our houses that it may be wrong to throw any stones. One also carries away an impression, which is a grave menace to morale, that there are so many things to do before we can set the world right that one doesn't quite know when and where to begin.

"After the War"—how easily those words slide off the lips! But we haven't come to "after the War" yet. Several million men, who are also interested in the future of the race, are at this moment knee-deep in the mud and stench of the trenches. After all, they are doing their bit for the cause of the brotherhood of man. If there is to be any "after the War" worth talking about, the soldier will have to see his job through. It is possible that unless we dispose of one evil at a time, and just now the biggest evil of all, Prussianism, we may not have any country left for our philosophers to reconstruct.

There are too many people in America today trying to handle too many evils at once. They are trying to fight Prussia and all the social and industrial evils at home at one and the same time. Is it wise? Does anyone with eyes in his head doubt for a moment that after this War, if we win it, the "people" are everywhere going to have their innings? Whether our philosophers decide the question or not, labor is likely to get its share of the spoils. There will be no need, we suspect, of speeding up that kind of reconstruction. It has already gained pretty good momentum.

All the grit, moral energy and enthusiasm which we can muster are just now required of America for the pursuit of the War. What Dr. Speer said at Columbia may be true, what some of our teacup philosophers are saying may have an important bearing, but the emphasis is wrong, and a wrong emphasis can be as vicious as falsehood. All who have the blood of freemen warm in their veins, all who want to rid the world of the curse of war have, as it seems to us, one sacred task to perform for the benefit of that world which is to come after the War.

The biggest social evil on the planet today is militarism. Can't we be patient and let some of the other evils wait a few months? With all its shortcomings we have not been living in the worst possible country. The men who are facing German shells just now are the most effective agents for a reconstructed social order. We "lovers of humanity" who are writing editorials can afford to be modest.

German Horrors

WE publish in our editorial columns the following appeal sent out by the National Allied Relief Committee for two reasons: first, the awful distress through which these people have fallen through no fault of their own goes straight to the heart of every man and woman in America. We must find a way to alleviate their sufferings. But there is another reason for presenting this appeal to our readers. In the war which we are waging with Prussia to destroy the creed of militarism, we must keep steadily before our minds how diabolical is the curse that would fall upon the world were Prussia to win this war. Let any who are faint-hearted and who in moments of war-weariness are eager for any kind of peace that would temporarily ease the misery of Europe realize that without a crushed or converted Prussia life would hold little happiness for freedom-loving people.

> There is a pitiful, desperate call to America from thousands of Belgian prisoners held in the death traps and dens of horror known as German concentration camps. These are the soldiers and civilians taken captives in the first stages of the war and during the subsequent months and years of terror and indescribable suffering.
> Their condition today is more terrible than at any previous time. Until recently France and Great Britain have given generously from their own limited stores to keep the Belgians alive. Now the responsibility has been put squarely up to the United States to supply the greater amount of food her Allies must have if they are to preserve the life and strength necessary to win the War. The plight of those free from German domination and persecution is bad enough, but they at least have their freedom. These Belgian prisoners are worse than slaves under the most merciless regime the world has ever known, a regime that makes them victims of hunger, disease and torture. America is absolutely their only hope, and they make their piteous appeal to America, their great Ally, for just enough to keep soul and body together and for a message of comfort and sympathy.

Here are some of the facts: read them, then let conscience dictate what you shall do.

There are between 40,000 and 50,000 Belgian prisoners, soldiers and civilians, held in German concentration camps under the most brutal and revolting conditions. They are penniless, helpless and without sufficient food and clothing to keep life in their bodies.

Their food is: for breakfast, a cup of liquid called coffee and made of acorns; for luncheon, a bowl of soup and a scant supply of turnips or carrots; for dinner, soup or a tiny piece of cheese or sausage.

Some camps are made on moist and uncultivated ground where the prisoners have to work with their feet always in water. In other camps the prisoners are crowded thickly into box stalls or lofts, the outside walls of which are only four feet high.

There is an utter disregard for sanitation or health. Forced to live in filth and amid vermin, disease is widespread and has caused the needless sacrifice of many lives. Many have died of typhus, as the Germans refuse to segregate or isolate those afflicted with the disease but subject others to it.

Thousands are in rags or scant clothing, far from sufficient to protect them from the rigors of winter. In this way, many have died from pneumonia, tuberculosis and other illnesses due to exposure.

Thousands of civilian prisoners—women, children and aged people—when they are almost dead and are useless and burdensome to Germany, are returned to France; and official records show that an appalling percentage are victims of tuberculosis or are insane.

These are some of the facts. Is it not our duty to help these people in their desperate emergency? Won't you respond to that duty now with a generous contribution?

It should be remembered that included in these numbers of prisoners are some of the most refined and cultured of Belgian men and women. They are of all classes, and just as much as any other country of the Entente Alliance will Belgium need them for citizenship when peace has been restored and rehabilitation begins.

The purpose of this Committee, which exists for the relief of these prisoners, is to send to each of them one package fortnightly. Each parcel costs approximately $1.50.

Anyone who so desires may adopt a prisoner by pledging to give $3.00 monthly for six months or by giving $18 at one time, whereupon a prisoner will be assigned to the donor's special care. Packages will be sent in the name of the donor, to whom will be forwarded cards of acknowledgment from the grateful prisoner when received. Experience has shown that over ninety-five per cent. of the prisoners not only receive their packages but send cards of acknowledgment.

These are the facts that describe the awful conditions as they exist. We know and give you our guarantee that it is possible to relieve the situation, at least to a material extent. We are ready and eager to do our part if you will help us. Will you?

Checks should be made payable to James A. Blair, Jr., Treasurer, designated for the Relief of Belgian Prisoners in Germany, and sent to the National Allied Relief Committee, Incorporated, 360 Madison Avenue, New York City.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Mothering Sunday

AMONGST the old customs of rural England ther was a practice of going to see parents, especially th mother, on mid-Sunday of Lent, taking some little pre ent for them such as a cake or trinket; a youth engage in this gracious act was said to go a-mothering. Henc the day itself came to be called Mothering Sunday.

Twenty-two days of Lent have slipped away. Hav they brought us something we can count as gain?- one or two great books read, some hours of serious Bibl study, some hours of Communion at the Table of ou Lord, systematic effort for self-denial and discipline?

There are still eighteen days of Lent before Easte Day. The great à Kempis has given us in his prayer a good a definition as any we know for self-employment "Teach me, O God, to know the things worth knowin to do the things worth doing, and to love the things wort loving." Mid-Lent is a good time for asking whethe the life we are leading is teaching us to know, to do an to love the worthy things of life. Religion can have n higher purpose and Lent no finer aim.

Studies in Religion for War Times

DR. HODGES, in his article on Lenten Reading, publishe a fortnight ago in THE CHURCHMAN, called attentio to the excellent plan of study set forth in the rece pamphlet of the General Board of Religious Educatio While the program of study recommended by the Boa is admirably adapted to Lent, the main purpose of th Board, as we understand it, in issuing these outlines f meditation and discussion is to supply the Church wi material upon which to build intelligent discussion of son problems which the war forces to the front.

Men eager to solve problems begin by asking question If they are in earnest those questions are bound to tou essentials. There are forceful reasons just now wh Christians should discuss immortality. If serious-mind people were to meet together during Lent to study wh the Church, science, philosophy and personal experien have to say about the life immortal, very definite difficu ties would emerge which could be singled out for stu and elucidation. They could also be profitably treated Lenten sermons. Take, for example, the problem evil which has been thrust into prominence by the w It has always troubled people and always will. Recto know from their pastoral experience how much this que tion harasses those who are suddenly brought face face with sorrow and disaster. They cannot hope whol to clarify the problem of evil, but centered around th problem are some of the most essential and beautif teachings of the Christian religion. The war makes su a topic timely and practical.

There occurs to us one very beneficial use to which th pamphlet issued by the General Board may be put. indicates, without declaring so pretentious a purpose, ho Lent may be put to definite educational uses in a paris We know the tendency to let our Lenten services dri into scrappy, disconnected preachments with no correla ing purpose. Of course, such services are helpful in th way. They give opportunities for worship and for hea ing and preaching the Word. But might not our peop gain more from one service of instruction a week th undertakes seriously to handle the fundamental proble of the Christian life than from several sermons from v iting preachers? A Bible class under one teacher w makes toward a definite goal can accomplish more than series of six sermons on topics beginning with, let us sa the letter "P", Patience, Poverty, Peace, Power, etc.

In connection with this subject there occurs to us t helpful suggestion made by Mr. Suter a few weeks a in his letter, "The Greater Lent". That seems to us be good religious psychology. Why might not the fi four weeks of Lent be used for quiet study and discussi and class work, reserving the days beginning with P sion Sunday for a more intense appeal to the heart? We could emphasize Bible study during the first four weeks, then during the remaining great days leading up to Easter let us have our great preaching services and our Quiet Days with frequent services. This would bring us to a high plane at the close of Lent.

Neutral Prayers

CAN a prayer be neutral? A Tammany Assemblyman at Albany thinks it can and ought to be so. All his sense of fair play was outraged by the chaplain who so far forgot himself as to pray for prohibition.

Why will the clergy forget that religion must not get mixed up with business and politics?

Note: This is irony.

News From Russia

IT has been difficult here in America to learn precisely what is going on in Russia as regards the Revolution and the Church. The Guardian publishes the following:

"Revolutions always attack established forms of religion, and it was unlikely that even the Church of 'Holy Russia' would escape the common experience. The Bolshevists have waited quite a long time before issuing the inevitable decree disestablishing and disendowing the Church; but they did on Sunday—a highly appropriate day for such an act. The newly-elected Patriarch —the first for more than two centuries—has replied by excommunicating and anathematizing the spoilers, whom he describes vigorously as 'those outcasts of the human race'. Excommunication is a weapon which has lost its sharpness; but it appears still to be within the power of the Patriarch to lay the country under an interdict. The effect of such a step, we are told, 'would be immediate and far-reaching, for it would arouse in the peasants every superstitious dread and fear'. We are not anxious to see any branch of the Church resort to the kind of weapon which was found effective in England in the time of King John; but it is deplorable that the influence of the Russian Church since the crisis of the Revolution began should have been, as far as can be judged, non-existent."

Welcoming Our Boys

A CONSPICUOUS sign at the door of the cathedral in New York gives welcome to soldiers and sailors and invites them to the services. Since this sign has been posted in the close, there has been a decided increase of khaki and blue in the cathedral congregation. It is an invitation which has already been placed at the door of many city churches. In a number of cases it is supplemented by a notice that a clubroom in the parish house, and perhaps a canteen, offers its hospitality to "our boys".

Perhaps some churches have felt that the open door and the church bell were invitation enough. This does not seem to be the case. A special welcome, the assurance that pews are open to them and that the congregation is anxious to receive them, meets with a ready response from the men in uniform.

Self-Government in the Orient

LESS than a month ago we chronicled the election of the first native Chinese bishop. Now comes the news of the resignation of Bishop Cecil Boutflower of South Tokyo in favor of a native Japanese bishop to be elected some time this month. The Nippon Sei Ko Kwai, the Japan Holy Catholic Church, was organized in 1887, more than twenty years before the formation of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui in China, but up to this time it has seemed inexpedient to elect a native bishop for any of the dioceses. Bishop Boutflower or Bishop Cecil, as he is known among the Japanese, has been for eight years the able and well-loved diocesan of South Tokyo, one of the districts manned by S. P. G. missionaries. Bishop Boutflower feels that the time has arrived for the consecration of a native bishop, and has accordingly resigned. He will, however, remain in Tokyo as the suffragan of the new bishop with special care of the Europeans in the city.

This movement toward self-government in the Chinese and Japanese churches is significant in view of the democratic impulse which is sweeping the Orient. The war news monopolizes our papers to such an extent that few of us realize the stirring towards home rule which has been under way in India.

Religion in War-Time

BISHOP RHINELANDER is delivering a striking course of lectures on Religion in War-time at St. James' church, Philadelphia. We quote from his first lecture:

"Brethren, bear with me if I speak plainly here. Those teachers (and there are many of them: their teaching is, in fact, the very pith and marrow of much that we call 'pacifism') who tell us that the God of Christ, the Christian God, is not the supreme Lord of Hosts, not the Almighty, not the Governor of men, not the unquestioned and unrivaled Will of the whole universe; but is rather a mild, benevolent and indulgent Being, with excellent intentions but pathetic incapacity; unable to prevent war, and doing nothing about it while it lasts; feeling no great anger against sin, no hate of evil; caring not overmuch for righteousness; willing to compromise with cruelty, falsehood, lust, treachery and pride, if only so there may be peace. Men who so teach and so believe are mocking religion, for they are denying God, and they are false witnesses to Christ. For these teachers leave God's throne empty. They leave righteousness without a champion, and sin without a judge. Christ begins with, comes from, Him Who sits upon the throne. His very message is that God is God, though the earth quake and the rocks are rent and men's hearts are failing them for fear.

"Calmly guiding all things towards His own freely chosen goal; meeting each headlong rush of evil; reaching down into the very heart of sin and sorrow, and finding there instruments of His own blessed Will; making all things serve His purpose; perfectly at home upon the battlefield; disposing all the issues; never baffled; never wavering; but ever set on righteousness and always moved by love: that is the meaning of the Christian's God, that is the background and the setting of the Christian Gospel.

"That is the background. And in the foreground, here on this earth, in veritable human flesh, Christ comes to win us for, to bring us to, this One Almighty Father. Not because God is so weak, but because He is so infinitely strong, does He speak to us through baby lips and call us from a cross. Not because God's hold is so precarious, and His Will so dependent upon ours, but because He made us all, and owns us all, and loves us all, does He plead with us, and leave us free to love Him or to spurn Him as we will. None but the Lord of Hosts would dare to do it, could afford to do it. But He, the Lord of Hosts, in doing it, is seen to be more than ever God.

"This, then, is the Christian faith in God. Christians are they who have known and believed all this. They have taken Christ at His word. They have found in Him the great 'Amen' to the witness of their nature. They believe, indeed, that He first put the inner witness there and now has come Himself to confirm and seal it. And so, in calm assurance, no matter how the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing, the great words of old are on their lips, as the one thing they are sure of: 'The Lord of Hosts is with us: the God of Jacob is our refuge.'"

Casualties Among Chaplains

FIFTY-ONE English chaplains have been killed or have died of wounds and ninety others have been wounded during the War. This is a war record of which the Church of England has reason to be proud. Some people have supposed that our chaplains are sheltered from the worst dangers of warfare, but the chaplain, like any other soldier, goes where his regiment is sent. They go gladly.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

MODERN PICTURES FROM THE OLD BOOK

A Lenten Series on Jesus' Parables

By THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

The Young Man Who Went Wrong

Scene Second: In the Far Country

"And not many days after, the younger son gathered all together and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

"And when he had spent all there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want.

"And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine.

"And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks which the swine did eat: and no man gave unto him.

"And when he came to himself he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger. I will arise and go to my father."—St. Luke xv-13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18.

RAGGED, hungering, heavy-hearted, forsaken—the prodigal has run his course. He has had his way. He thought that he was seeking liberty but he wasn't. He might have had all the liberty he needed in the Old Home, and safety besides. He was seeking license. Liberty is the right to do right. License is the right to do wrong. That was what he sought and that was what he found.

And at the beginning it seemed to pay. It often does—at first. If it did not, men would not persist in it. They would not take the primrose path if it were not primrose. Ah, but the end! That is what the Book says: "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death!" See him now, as he sits there in the field, on the prostrate trunk of a once stately tree, fallen; emblematic of his own life—and surrounded by the swine. He, the son of such a father, a swineherd; an occupation to the Jew most degrading of any. He a feeder of unclean brutes!

Where now are the friends who once struck him familiarly on the shoulder and hailed him as a "good fellow"? Gone. Where now the feet which once kept merry time with his, and the painted faces which once in the dance mingled their breath with his? Gone. And now he sits forlorn, alone, forsaken; his head bent and resting upon his hands, his eyes downcast; sighing once and again as he thinks of what he was and might have been, and of what he is.

God save us all from the remorse of the primrose path! Read The Confessions of a Drunkard by one of the very finest of England's Essayists. It is Charles Lamb who writes: "The waters have gone over me. But out of the black depths, could I be heard, I would cry to all those who have set a foot in the perilous flood. Could the youth to whom the flavor of his first wine is delicious as the opening scenes of life, or the entering upon some newly discovered Paradise, look into my desolation, and be made to understand what a dreary thing it is, when a man shall feel himself going down a precipice, with open eyes and a passive will; to see his destruction, and have no power to stop it, and yet to feel it all the way emanating from himself; to perceive all goodness emptied out of him, and yet not be able to fix a time when it was otherwise; to bear about the piteous spectacle of his own self-ruin; could he see my fevered eye, fevered with last night's drinking, and feverishly looking for this night's repetition of the folly; could he feel the body of the death out of which I cry hourly with feebler and feebler outcry to be delivered—it were enough to make him dash the sparkling beverage to the earth in all the pride of its mantling temptation—to make him clasp his teeth,

'And not undo them,
To suffer wet damnation to run through them'."

"And when he had spent all there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want. . . . And no man gave unto him." Oh, the awful hopeless "afterward" of sin!

Which way will he turn? For a man never tarries in that condition long. He will either rise higher or fall lower. There are crucial moments in the lives of all of us, moments of destiny, which hold in their hand our rescue or our ruin. To every man's door Opportunity comes, and she knocks once, perhaps twice, possibly three times, but, if unheeded, she passes on, often, in this life at least, never to return.

Hush! For this young man it is a solemn moment; for as he sits there, thinking, good and evil spirits are fighting for a soul. And now he lifts his hunger-wasted eyes. Look! I believe that upon that face despair is giving way to hope. He gazes toward the blue hills in the dim distance and thinks, "There is my Father, and my Father's house—and bread enough and to spare—while I perish with hunger!"

Bless God! For as he leaps to his feet, a new resolve kindles in that drawn and haggard face. Bless God, for from this supreme moment he is to move upward and not downward. "I will arise and go to my Father, and say unto Him, 'I have sinned'!"

Hallelujah, he is saved! Hallelujah! Hallelujah!

"And the angels echo around the throne,
'Rejoice, for the Lord brings back his own'!"

"When he came to himself." Note that phrase. He thought that he was only leaving his Father. He never realized that when he was turning his face toward the far country, he was leaving himself. But he was. Sin is insanity; moral insanity, but none the less insanity. "He came to himself." "Yourself" is your best. You are not "yourself" because of that which puts you on the plane with the beast, but of that which differentiates you from him. You are not yourself because you eat and sleep and crawl in the sunlight Snakes do that, but how much better is a man than a snake. You are not yourself because it is possible for you to seek the mire and to wallow in it. Swine do that. But you are yourself—a man—because it is possible for you to seek the mire, and you won't; because, unlike the brutes, you have those three majestic endowments which they have not: reason and conscience and spiritual cravings.

And when you turn your back upon these highest qualities with which Divinity hath crowned you, the greatest gifts of God, and go down into the far country, and, like this young man, think most of all of those appetites which you have in common with the beast, instead of those qualities which distinguish you from him—when you go down among the swine and seek to fill your belly with the husks which the swine do eat, as surely as God is God and you are you, you are going to be hungry and lonely and heartsick and homesick, and no man will give unto you, because, until you come to yourself, no man can.

In the next Saturday Night Sermon we shall see the closing scene and the Prodigal will be back again in the old home. He will have found his Father, and he will have found himself. But how about you who may be reading these words? Have you been wandering in the Far Country? Are you hungering for that which the Far Country can never give? O then,

"Come home! Come home!
You are weary at heart;
And the way has been dark,
And so lonely and wild.
O Prodigal child—come home!"

"Come home! Come home!
For we watch and we wait;
And we stand at the gate,
While the shadows are piled.
O Prodigal child—come home!"

Hymns: 625, 342, 606.

His Grace Speaks to America

By A STAFF REPRESENTATIVE

"THEY beckoned unto their partners in the other boat, that they should come and help them. And they came."

These were the first public words uttered by the Most Reverend Cosmo Gordon Lang, Lord Archbishop of York, on his arrival in the United States. They were spoken in the pulpit of the New York cathedral last Sunday morning. If His Grace had braved the submarines of the Atlantic to utter those words and had returned immediately to York, his visit would still have been worth while.

That service at the cathedral of St. John the Divine is one that impressed itself indelibly on the hearts and minds of everyone in the great congregation which filled every available seat in choir, crossing and gallery and surged around the doors and on the steps. They compared it with the service last May when Bishop Brent welcomed Lord Balfour and his mission to this country. Only now it was England speaking, the Archbishop of York representing alike the English Church and State, delivering the message those who have borne the burden of three years and a half of war send to their partners in the other boat who have come to their aid. And the message was that we keep alive our vision of the moral issues involved in the War.

The procession entered the cathedral singing "God of Our Fathers, Whose Almighty Hand". The service was the Celebration of the Holy Communion, sung to Palestrina's Aeterna Christi Munera, which His Grace later told the choristers was favorite music with him. Before the Archbishop began his sermon Bishop Greer ascended the pulpit and welcomed His Grace.

"We welcome England's visit", he said, "through its distinguished representative from Old York to New York, in the confident hope of cementing the ties of fellowship between two great religious communions and between the people of two great nations, that hand in hand are standing together in this crusade for the safeguarding of human freedom. Because of what he himself is, because of his gracious personality and because of his purpose to which both nations are religiously committed I welcome the Most Reverend Cosmo Gordon Lang, Lord Archbishop of York".

Bishop Greer then bid the congregation sing "Through the Night of Doubt and Sorrow, Onward Goes the Pilgrim Band". As the Archbishop, preceded by his primatal cross carried before him by his chaplain, left his place in the chancel, and the congregation sang "Brother Clasps the Hand of Brother, Stepping Fearless Through the Night", a surge of emotion swept the congregation.

Then His Grace reached the pulpit; his profile, like the chiseled cameo of a saint; his sad face illumined by the beauty of holiness.

"My text", he said, "is 'They beckoned unto their partners which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them. And they came'.

"From York, the centre of memories reaching back to the days of the Roman legions and the emperors, and as the first of its eighty-nine archbishops to land on the shores of America, I come to New York, the centre of the hope and energies of a great nation, still rejoicing in the strength of its youth, and I desire in the name of my Church and country to thank you, my Lord Bishop, and the American people, for your good will and fellowship and the practical evidences of your idealism.

"The successor of Paulinus, coming from York Minster, I desire to link its memories and this new and stately cathedral in our ideals and hopes for the future.

"Today, however, I shall appeal not so much to your imagination as to your hearts. For I hope that you will hear in my voice the heart of England, beating hard in the heaviest struggle of her existence, talking to the heart of America in her high resolve to cross the seas and make that struggle what it must necessarily be—her own. For three and one-half years the allied nations have been enduring the burden of this awful War. Think of Belgium, her honor safe, but her people, her land, ravished and torn and broken on the wheel of tribulation in a manner that baffles the powers of description. Think of Serbia and what she had to endure at the hands of the invader. Think of Italy standing at bay, suffering, bleeding, yet struggling with all the lionheartedness that is in her to wrench herself free of the oppressor. Think of Russia, staggering, dazed, and bewildered in the throes of revolution, and yet struggling to free her people from him who would ravish the poor whom he gets into the net.

"It is not necessary to ask you to think of the people of France, brave, unfaltering France, well-nigh exhausted in body but invincible in spirit.

"And when it comes to my own country, you must forgive me if I seem to give way to my feelings when I speak of that land, 3,000 miles away. It is perhaps a habit due to reticence and reserve that causes the English people to do their work, and to bear their suffering and speak little about it. There is even now something in me that makes it difficult to speak of it, and when I do speak I can only say that it is not so much the gentle hand of sympathy as the strong hand of fellowship that we ask of the United States.

"The iron has entered into our very souls. The valor amid tragedy of our troops in the field, the privation which we suffer at home as to food have made the War a vivid matter to us; the tremendous expenditure of more than $32,000,000 a day for war purposes, the ceaseless toil in munitions plant, factory, and shipyard, have made it the predominating industrial matter with us. And, above all, there have been drawn from us and our daughters across the sea 7,500,000 men for the service of the Allies, of whom 5,000,000 came forward of their own free will.

"Then there is the aching of heart that comes when we think of the hundreds of thousands who have died, and the hundreds of thousands who have been maimed and disabled. It is not too much to say that there is now not a home in England where no member of the family or kindred has died in the service. Yes—the sunshine has gone out of our sky, and we wonder whether it will ever shine again. For two and a half years the ship which carries the fortunes of free civilization in Europe has looked wistfully across the seas to the great ship of America, anchored in its strength and security.

"We knew we had your sympathy—still we beckoned for help, and on that great and fateful day, April 6, 1917, you came over and helped us. Now we who were always partners in spirit are partners in arms.

"It is my desire that this comradeship may deepen and perpetuate our partnership during the War and as time advances. Less and less is it a community of place and race that counts; rather is it a community of spirit."

Our first partnership is that of common speech, His Grace went on to say. "Those who speak one mother tongue must needs be brothers. The words of Saxon English which Lincoln spoke to the soul of America are words" which have meant much to England during the past four years. "In English speech your noble President has given us a clearer grasp of the ideals for which we fight." "'We must be free or die, Who speak the tongue that Shakespeare spoke, The faith and morals hold that Milton held'."

Our second partnership is that of laws and institutions. "In spirit they are one, dedicated to 'every man an end in himself'. We acknowledge one common Will in obedience to which the individual finds his highest will." Both peoples are dedicated to the preservation of the principles of liberty, justice, and democracy.

"And third," His Grace continued, "because these principles are at stake, we are now partners in a great and inspiring enterprise. Hitherto we have thought that our ideals—our institutions based upon the will of the people freely expressed—were safe. We have learned that they are not safe—that they can only be saved at the cost of struggle and sacrifice. The issue before this generation is whether nations are to keep their freedom and live in fellowship with one another or to be menaced by the restless self-assertion of a power which claims a world dominion and acknowledges no law but that of its own armed force. There can be no peace until this issue is settled.

"As one of your own citizens has said, 'Peace is not an ideal at all. It is a state attending on an ideal.' Because this ideal is endangered we are at war. Until this ideal has a sure place in the world, there can be no peace.

"You have to send gifts we need sorely, men, money, food, ships. But the gift of greatest value that you have given and which I would charge you to guard, is that of moral ideal and vision.

"It is hard to keep clear the first great purpose. In some places the War was wearing out the spirit as well as the body of the Allies. It is not to be wondered at, perhaps, that at times the question arose: 'Is it really worth while? Are the principles of liberty, truth, justice, and individual freedom representative of definite realities at stake or are these words simply another form of the munitions of war?'

"Then impelled by an ever-strengthening force, you in America arose and said in tones that the whole world could hear: 'These things are so true that we dare not stand aside, and for the sake of the truth, with all our resources, with our national life itself, we will cross the ocean and come over and help you', and you came. For that revindication we thanked God and took courage.

"Everything depends on the spirit of a people. And now it is for America and her Allies to hold strong and clear that great moral conviction, for upon the strength of that conviction will depend the spirit that must permeate our peoples in order that this War may be won. Force will fail unless this moral conviction is behind it in nations and in men. It is only conscience that can never utter the word 'compromise'. Men and nations reach their ultimate and invincible strength only when they are able to say, 'Here stand I. I can do no other, so help me God.'

"Do you wonder that I have waited so long to invoke that great name? I could not have dared to speak in this holy house unless I could invoke God's name. Whatever is true in what I have said leads straight to God. How could we face these bitter sacrifices unless we knew that 'the Lord sitteth above the water-flood; and the Lord remaineth a King forever'? Our strongest tie of fellowship is our religion".

In conclusion the Archbishop said that the two nations were partners in their faith in God, and that the higher they put the ideals for which they were at war, the more loudly would those ideals cry for faith in God to inspire and sustain them. And faith in God, he said, meant not that men should "claim Him as their ally, upon whom they had a right to make demands", but that men should regard him as a sovereign, who rightfully demanded allegiance from them, no matter how great the anguish, no matter how great the suffering.

"Our national character, the national character of our allied peoples, must be raised as high as God in this hour of stress. God is once more taking His place at our side as did the most august of the Sons of Men. Through the clouds of the War He is descending to claim the leadership of the free sons of men. Two great truths are writ large in the wreckage of civilization: civilization needs saving and only Jesus Christ can save it.

"Christianity has not failed. Christianity is difficult, and has never been tried. It is a task well worth the fellowship of two great nations not only to make the world safe for democracy, but to make democracy safe for the world; a saving, uplifting power. With that accomplished, history will record that a new day of light and hope dawned upon the world when we in Europe beckoned to our partners in America that they should come over and help us, and they came."

After the sermon, the choir and congregation sang the "Star Spangled Banner". Bishop Greer then took his place before the altar and read the Prayer for the Church Militant, with a slowness and solemnity that carried the petitions of thousands of longing hearts to God's throne that all men might confess His Holy Name and agreeing in the truth of His Holy Word might live in unity and goldly love. The greater part of the congregation stayed to make their communion, the number of communicants equaling the Easter throng.

In the afternoon at Trinity church the great scene of the morning was repeated. The crowds who came to hear the message His Grace brought from the Mother Church in the Mother Land exceeded any crowd even old Trinity has ever known. The procession could not make its way through the densely packed aisles, and had to proceed directly into the chancel. Immediately behind the first crucifer marched two color bearers, one carrying the American and the other the English flag.

Evensong was sung with the fine dignity that always makes one compare the Trinity choristers to the cathedral singers in England. Dr. Manning had come up from Camp Upton and greeted His Grace as follows:

"As Archbishop of the great historic Church of England, as coming from the ancient and illustrious see of York, . . . I welcome you especially because you are the bearer of a message from our brethren in England while we with you are joining hands to fight and fight to the death the most monstrous form of evil this world has ever seen. We pledge you that we will give to this fight the whole resources of our life and strength and will keep the vision clear of what the struggle means, realizing that this is the holiest crusade men have ever waged."

From the historic pulpit of Trinity church His Grace again urged America to keep before her the ideals which have been the guiding force in her history. His text was "And they said to one another Behold this dreamer cometh".

"You will remember," said the Archbishop, "the old Bible story from which this is taken, the dream of the younger brother, treated with contempt by the older men, but by mind and purpose carried into effect. The ideas of man are the powers that lift him above, given direction and purpose. Every great statesman is and must be a seer. We are living at one of the supreme moments of history. It falls to us to fulfil the responsibility of our citizenship. It is ours to sustain the burden of our nation at a time more essential than any epoch our fathers ever passed. . . . There are two questions than we face, whether there is to be an assured and enlightened peace, and whether out of the wreckage of the present we can build better in the century to come".

"Speaking to you as I do," said His Grace, "from the heart of a host from afar off, from the heart of a nation which is almost dying because of the suffering and sacrifices it endures, because it is a dreamer, I tell you the nation needs at this moment every pound of material and moral strength and help that you can send. This great War represents the things you have been standing for, and because ideals are master powers the war-worn nations in Europe, when a new force entered the struggle on April 6, 1917, could say, 'Behold—this mighty dreamer cometh!' Cynics may say, 'Behold these dreamers come', but history will recall once again that the dreamers were the builders.

"You, dear people," he continued, "will have your times of trial. Now you feel the first thrill. Days of inevitable weariness will follow. . . . I beg of you as one who knows to stay and strengthen and keep assured the great moral and spiritual principles that are at stake. One danger you will have to face, the fallacy that great ideals will take care of themselves. . . . I am sure that there will be quite as much need as of organizing shipyards and training men, of a great stirring of all that is greatest and best, of the deepening of prayer, of uniting the heart of the whole people with their Lord and God."

Throughout the week His Grace is preaching every day at noon in Trinity church. At the close of the address on Monday, His Grace called upon the congregation to rededicate themselves to God's service in this War of righteousness, and as they knelt he said:

"We here offer and present unto thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto Thee."

The Church's War-Work at Washington

By THE REV. WILLIAM L. DeVRIES, Ph.D.

FROM the hour that America declared war last Good Friday, the Church in Washington has been busy in war activities, especially among the soldiers and sailors soon assembled in large numbers in or near the District of Columbia.

At the very outset St. Alban's parish found itself possessed suddenly of a large mobilization camp of engineers, located one mile from St. Alban's church and hall, and one mile, in another direction, from St. Columba's chapel and hall, and at once began, and maintained all summer, a weekly dance and sociable, with musical and other entertaining features, alternating between the two points each week. Special services at the camp and elsewhere, Bible classes, pastoral visits, and like activities have been systematically maintained by the rector, the Rev. Charles T. Warner, and by the vicar of St. Columba's, the Rev. W. W. Shearer, assisted by a willing people.

Epiphany church, located at the heart of the city, has had and has met a great opportunity to serve the innumerable soldiers spending week-ends and furloughs in the capital. Its great parish hall, recently constructed for just such social service work, has afforded exceptional facilities. Here, since early in the War, Dr. McKim, with the good help of his congregation, has maintained Saturday evening sociables and dances, and now for some months has also provided tea and refreshments and a homelike welcome late Sunday afternoons. Dr. McKim makes a point of giving a talk to the hundreds of soldiers every Saturday night, and his experiences as a veteran of the Civil War specially fit him to say the things that help.

Good Shepherd is situated two or three blocks from Camp Meigs, a cantonment for machinists, who flock to a weekly sociable and dance. Here the problem is funds for the light refreshments and other expenses. For the people nearly all work for their living, and while doing their utmost, yet their resources are limited. For this reason, and because they do their own housework, the soldiers at the outset were asked at eight o'clock. But they came as soon as their mess was over, before seven. And the rector, the Rev. C. S. Abbott, the first time they came, was surprised to find a big bunch of soldiers in the choirroom, listening to the choristers at rehearsal.

At Christ church, G street, S. E., the proximity of the Marine Barracks and the Navy Yard affords special opportunities to work for sailors and marines, and the rector, the Rev. David R. Covell, and his wife have shown the leadership and tact in dealing with the men. The rectory adjoins the church and parish hall, and the men drop in at odd times as well as when dances and entertainments are on.

St. Margaret's, St. Thomas's, St. Andrew's and St. Mark's also report well planned activities on the lines before related in the main, but St. Thomas's is making a specialty of a hot supper Sunday evening in the parish hall, and personal hospitalities and pastoral dealings with individuals.

Trinity has turned its great parish hall, near Union Station, into a bunk house for soldiers from Camp Meade, from the Marine Cantonment, from Quantico, and several smaller camps. These men hitherto have often had to sleep on benches in Union Station, or in unsuitable places, or not at all, for lack of room in overcrowded Washington.

St. John's, Lafayette Square, does not possess the equipment for social welfare work, but attracts to its services more officers and men than any Church in Washington, and its service flag contains nearly one hundred stars. Downtown it has opened a clubhouse for enlisted men, with sleeping quarters for visitors overnight, as well as reading and writing rooms, bathing facilities and the like. One of the ladies of this parish pays the rent of the large house for the Reserve Officers' Club run by the Red Cross, and located near St. John's on Sixteenth street. Another communicant of St. John's, Mrs. Julian-James, has made a large house she owns adjoining her residence a centre for training men, women and children in all sorts of war work, including wireless telegraphy, nursing, signaling, Red Cross work, and the persons seeking opportunities of training through this agency number thousands.

The cathedral is not so situated or equipped at present as to offer favorable opportunities for social welfare work for soldiers on a large scale, and yet in services for special occasions, in sending its choir to sing at services at the Reserve Officers' Camp at Fort Myer, and in the cooperating work of its staff with the Virginia clergy at that point, and in personal and pastoral work among many officers and men attending its worship, it has found its own ways of ministering, especially on the spiritual side. The bishop since the first day of the War has been busy with Government officials and Church authorities, the Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association and the Federal Council of Churches, as to Army and Navy chaplains, the moral and religious welfare of enlisted men, and innumerable problems and duties incidental to the War.

Since the Church's War Commission has been at work, regular attendance on its meetings and those of its executive committee, and correspondence, work and counsel on its behalf, have been the bishop's chief activities. In connection with the fuel and food administrations, and other national and local undertakings of an executive nature, and in many personal and pastoral labors, the dean of the cathedral has found more tasks than any one man can handle.

I as canon of the cathedral have addressed myself to hospitality and religious work for young college men in the military, naval and civil service.

About seventy thousand soldiers are in or near the District of Columbia. With the constant departures of regiments for France and the arrival of new ones, the total number of soldiers who have visited the Nation's Capital since the war began is a long way past one hundred thousand. If one adds the tens of thousands, yes hundreds of thousands, passing through on trains to concentration camps and ports of embarkation, and ministered to at all hours of day and night by the Red Cross, among whom are great numbers of our communicants, it is an enormous total that has been served in greater or less degree.

At the dances and other Church entertainments, where the girls and laddies mix freely with the men, the clergy and men and women chaperons always present have little to do except to promote sociability, and from every quarter come good reports as to the conduct of the men. It is plain that the average type of American manhood is very fine in its ethical and social ideals. Faith in God and in the other life is widespread, and these men welcome talk and guidance on the more intimate matters of religion. The clergy and our laymen and women have sought to serve them spiritually also, and many incidents are told of admission and restoration to Holy Communion, Baptism and pastoral instruction, eager receiving of testaments and Prayer Books, special prayers and requests for them before going overseas, and letters from the front speaking of spiritual blessings and helps received in Washington.

For the Flying Corps

O THOU, who hast given to a new generation courage and cunning to do their business in the air, grant to our sons who are serving their country in such perilous fashion the special guidance of Thy hand.

As no sparrow falls to the ground without Thy loving pity, so may their lives be precious in Thy sight.

Keep them in health and strength, keen of eye, steady of nerve and pure in heart.

Give them grace to wage their warfare as Christian soldiers and make them to know in life or death that underneath them are the everlasting Arms.

All which we ask in Christ's name—Amen.

THE MOST REVEREND COSMO GORDON LANG, D.D., P.C.

The Lord Archbishop of York, Primate of England, who has arrived in this country, and who will spend the month of March among our people engaged in the congenial task of strengthening the bonds of Anglo-American friendship

The City and See of York

By THE REV. E. CLOWES CHORLEY, D.D.

THE city of York, called by the Britons Caer-Ebroc, and by the Romans Eboracum, has played a large and honorable part in the political history of England. It is one of her really ancient cities, being at one time the capital of Britain and at another the seat of the Roman prefect. About the time Saint Paul wrote his epistle to the Philippians a Roman general, Julius Agricola by name, arrived in Britain on conquest bent. He was the father-in-law of Tacitus who penned the account of the invasion. After twenty years' stubborn fighting Agricola succeeded in subduing the north country and set about the task of establishing a stable government. As a protection against Scotland he built the far-famed Roman wall, after which he gathered the people into a series of cities such as Chester, Lincoln, Colchester, London and York. The latter city he made the seat of government. During the Roman occupation York attained great importance. It was visited by the Emperor Hadrian in A. D. 120; Severus died there nearly a century later. Constantius, who shared the rule of the Roman empire with Galerius, lived and died at York and in that city his better-known son, Constantine the Great, proclaimed himself Emperor of Rome. After the expulsion of the Romans, York became the capital of Northumbria and fell before the onslaught of William the Conqueror in 1068.

The first authentic mention of York as a see city is in the records of the Council of Arles in A. D. 314. Among the bishops recorded as present on that historic occasion were those of London, York and "Colonia Londinenuim"—probably Lincoln. They are not mentioned by name. The identity of the first Bishop of York is lost in the mists of antiquity. In 598 Pope Gregory divided England into two ecclesiastical provinces, London and York. London at that time was a heathen city and continued so for many years. So Augustine retained his seat at Canterbury, which has ever since remained the head of the Southern Province.

Three years after this division a group of missionary monks arrived in England from Rome. Among them was Paulinus, who is described as having "a tall stooping form, a slender aquiline nose and black hair falling around a thin face". Paulinus soon distinguished himself for unselfish devotion to his mission. So much so, that, on July 21, 625, he was consecrated bishop by Justus, Bishop of Rochester and Kent, who himself had been consecrated by Augustine.

The story of the coming to Yorkshire of Paulinus reads like a romance. King Edwin, who reigned at York, was a heathen. He desired to marry Ethelburga, sister of Eadbald, king of Kent. Eadbald had embraced Christianity and consented to the marriage only on Edwin's promise that his wife and her attendants should be free to worship God. Edwin added that if he found her religion better than his own, he might accept it. When Ethelburga journeyed to her new northern home she was accompanied by Bishop Paulinus and in 626 York became his see city. On Easter-eve King Edwin narrowly escaped death at the hands of an assassin and, startled and softened by the event, promised if he were successful in his campaign against the West Saxons he would embrace Christianity. As a pledge of his good faith he allowed Paulinus to baptize his infant daughter together with eleven of the court attendants.

Edwin conquered the West Saxons, ceased to worship idols but hesitated to submit to Baptism. The following Winter, however, he summoned a great council of his nobles at Goodmanham, where stood his heathen temple, and asked each in turn what he thought of the new teaching. As the conference proceeded up rose one of the great nobles and said:

"So methinks, O king, is the life of man on earth, as it, while you and your nobles and thegns are feasting in a Winter's night, with the fire blazing in the midst of your hall, and the rain and storm raging outside, a sparrow should fly into the hall by one door and fly out by another. For the moment that he is inside he is in warmth and shelter, and then again he goes out into the wintry weather and is seen no more. So, for a short space man's life is before our eyes, but of what is before or what follows it, we know nothing. If then this new teaching can enlighten us as to these things, by all means let us hearken unto it."

These noble words made a profound impression upon the rude audience, which was deepened when Paulinus, at the bidding of the king, explained the Faith. Coifi, the chief priest, proposed that they should destroy their temple and break down their heathen altars and himself led the way by hurling his spear into the sacred enclosure, and set fire to the temple.

The king followed the example of his nobles, returned to York and erected a wooden church dedicated to Saint Peter. There he received instruction and, on Easter eve, April 11, 627, Edwin, his two sons, his nobles and others of his household were baptized. The example of the king was felt throughout the length and breadth of Northumbria. Paulinus journeyed far preaching, always on foot, and crowds flocked to Baptism. Six years later, however, Edwin was killed in battle and his kingdom overthrown. Northumbria again passed into heathen hands and Paulinus sailed with Ethelburga to her Kentish home, where he became Bishop of Rochester. He died October 10, 644, leaving behind the memory of a great and good man.

Thirty-one long and weary years passed before the see of York was filled by the consecration of Wilfrith I. Born in 634, his early life was passed in the far-famed monastery of Lindisfarne sacred to the memory of the two great northern saints, Cuthbert and Aidan. Wilfrith, or as he is better known, Wilfrid, was a chosen instrument of Rome in its conflict with the Celtic influence in the British Church. The Celts and the Romans differed as to the date of Easter and in 664 a Council was called at Whitby to settle the controversy. King Oswy presided and Wilfrid, then Abbot of Ripon, argued for the Roman date. Rome prevailed and the Celts retired to Iona. That same year Wilfrid was consecrated Bishop of York by twelve of the bishops of Gaul and is said to have been carried into the service seated on a chair of gold. France proved so much to Wilfrid's liking that he made no effort to return to his diocese. King Oswy therefore sent Ceadda, Abbot of Lansingham, to Canterbury for consecration. For five years he ministered at York and then an irregularity in his consecration was discovered. Later he was consecrated Bishop of Mercia with his seat at Lichfield and has become immortal under the name of St. Chad. At York Wilfrid came again to his own and ruled prudently with all his power. His later conflict with Theodore, the masterful Archbishop of Canterbury, is one of the commonplaces of English Church History. Without consultation, Theodore divided the northern province and inaugurated long and bitter controversy which had results unthought of at the time. The king sided with Theodore, whereupon Wilfrid appealed to the Bishop of Rome for redress. It was the first time such an appeal had been made from England and did much to strengthen the claim of Rome to ecclesiastical supremacy. Wilfrid ended his stormy career as Bishop of Hexham and died in the monastery at Ripon in 709.

The large story of the see of York can only be outlined. We must pass with mere mention of Bosa, John of Hexham, famed for holiness of life, Wilfrid II, trained in the monastery of Whitby, and come to Ecgbert, brother of the king, who became bishop in 732. He is singled out because he was the first of the long and noble line of the Archbishops of York. In 735, the year of the death of the venerable Bede, the long deferred plan of Pope Gregory was carried into effect and York became the actual head of the Northern Province. For eleven hundred and eighty-three years an archbishop has reigned at York. Most of them notable men, they have varied greatly in devotion to their distinctively spiritual duties. Many of them were high officers of State as well as archbishops and sometimes the service of the State overshadowed the service of the Church. Living often in troubled political times, some of the prelates engaged in military service and were not absent from the battlefield. It was the standard of their time. The best known of York's archbishops who linked ecclesiastical duty with political office was Cardinal Wolsey, who occupied the see from 1514 to 1540 and, for part of the time, combined with it the sees of Durham and Winchester. Installed at York by proxy, he never visited his cathedral city. When, however, he lost the fickle king's favor, he was banished to his diocese and the pathetic story of his last journey thither is one of the classics of English history. Without the necessary money for the journey he said to his ever-faithful friend Thomas Cromwell, "Thomas, it is time to be going, therefore I pray you go to the King and tell him that I would go to my benefice at York but for lack of money, and desire his Grace to help me to some". Henry complied and Wolsey set out. Lingering at Peterborough for Easter he joined the procession of monks on Palm Sunday; on Maundy Thursday he washed and kissed the feet of fifty poor men and on Easter Day sang his High Mass. Continuing his journey every Sunday he visited some poor parish church and finally reached Cawood Castle, seven miles from York, about Michaelmas. But Wolsey was not destined to set foot in his own minster. A few days before the time appointed for his installation he was arrested for high treason and began that painful journey to London which ended with the "laying of his bones" within the sacred precincts of the Abbey of Leicester.

The iron exigencies of space forbid any account o the interesting history of the various residences of th Archbishops of York save to say that Bishopthorpe, th stately home of Archbishop Cosmo Gordon Lang, thre miles from York, has been in possession of the dioces and the home of the archbishops for nigh upon seve hundred years. But a word must be said about Yor Minster, universally acknowledged to be the noblest o the great cathedrals of England. It stands upon the sit of the wooden church hastily built by Paulinus for th baptism of King Edwin. Immediately after that memor able event the king set about the building of "a larg and more noble basilica of stone". Partially destroye when Northumbria relapsed into heathenism after Ed win's death, it was restored by Wilfrid and resulted i what a contemporary called "a most magnificent basilica" This Saxon cathedral was destroyed by fire during th Norman invasion but was reconstructed by Archbisho Thomas of Bayeaux. Few portions of that buildin now remain. Successive archbishops bent their energie towards a nobler cathedral. In the twelfth century Roge built the choir and crypt and in the next century Gra added the south transept and John Romanus, treasure of the cathedral, built the north transept and the centra tower. The nave was begun by Archbishop Romanu and completed about 1345 by Archbishop Melton. Th rebuilding of the choir with its great east window wa completed in 1400. Later in the century two towe were added and on February 3, 1472, the stately minste was consecrated by Archbishop Neville. Such is a frag ment of the story of the see of York. For twelve hun dred and ninety-one years it has borne its living witne to that great Head of the Church who is the same ye terday, today and for ever.

IV—At a Baptism

WHEN a child is to be baptized no arrangement should be made till the rector has been consulted. The Church is the proper place for Baptism, and parents should not ask the rector to permit Baptism in a house unless the need is urgent; that is, unless the child is too delicate to be taken out of doors, or the mother is ill, or there is some similar valid reason.

The choice of Godparents is of serious importance. It is better if the Sponsors can be communicants, since it is hard to ask people to urge children to come to the bishop to be confirmed when they have not themselves been confirmed. In any case, Sponsors must be baptized persons. They must also be really religious people, who have such affection for the parents that they will care deeply for the child's welfare. Should the parents die, for example, before the child is grown up, the Sponsors must show an increased responsibility. Children should be taught to write to their Godparents, and to expect letters and other symbols of interest from them. The time may come when an older friend, whose right to say a word of counsel is recognized, will save the youth from peril.

For a boy there must be two Godfathers and one Godmother; for a girl, two Godmothers and one Godfather. Though the parents may serve as two of these, it is a pity to deprive a child of the larger group of responsible and friendly guardians. Proxies are allowed, so that when the parents are living far from those whose love for them is greatest, they may still ask these distant friends or relatives to be Sponsors, while the "answers" may be made in their name by persons who are present. The relation of children to their Godparents has often been full of mutual happiness and help; to try to make this relation always such will be the care of wise fathers and mothers, as they choose these best of friends. Certainly no merely worldly compliment, no formal exchange of civility, will be allowed to rob the child of this possibility of a high adva tage.

At the Service the child should be held by one of t Sponsors or by one of the parents, for it is always b that the parents should stand with the Sponsors near t font. When the name is asked, only the Christian nar should be given by one of the Sponsors. The child shou be put into the minister's left arm, because he uses h right hand in administering the Sacrament. (About ha the people who hold infants at such a time forget this.)

If the child cries at any time during the Service t parents should not be distressed. For some reason ch dren seem less frightened than in former days, but t minister is never surprised when children cry, and is no way disconcerted. As he holds the dear child in h arms and claims the new life for God, he is often ove whelmed as he thinks what may come from such a b ginning; and the infant's cries are unnoticed.

No fee is expected for a Baptism. If a thankofferi is given it is distinctly understood (and should be ma quite clear by the clergyman) that it will not be used him for himself, but will be given instantly for some go object, preferably for the care of some poor or unfort nate child. It is essential that every one know that t Sacraments of the Church are administered absolute freely to all who will receive them. That the people m know this clearly it is wise to have a Sunday in ea month when there is a Baptism and when people are e pected to bring their children to be baptized. They w then feel that they are causing no one inconvenience. course, the rector is always glad to baptize a child at a time, for it is one of his most cherished privileges. Wh one can easily do so it is a beautiful custom after t Service to put into the rector's hands a thankoffering, be used as he thinks best; but there is no obligation to this, and it should never be done when it is in the le degree inconvenient. No one can pay for the gift of Ba tism.

The Spirit of the Nation

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

THE other day the writer met a public man of his acquaintance, a represenative of labor, and fell into conversation with him for a few moments. "The one danger that we as a people have most cause to fear just now", remarked the politician, "is a failure of nerve; there are thousands of persons everywhere and in all classes who will object to denying themselves when the pinch comes and turn ugly if they are compelled to do it; they would admit the enemy within their gates and give him dominion over all the earth sooner than go without their Sunday joint for a single week".

No doubt this statement was meant to be hyperbolical and only half serious. No one knew better than the speaker that the grit of the Nation had already been tried and proved in a thousand ways; we have suffered much and are perfectly well aware that we have to suffer more; the sacrifices of the past, great as they have been, were perhaps easier to bear than those which have yet to be made. But there is some ground for the misgiving expressed on the words above quoted. There are selfish and cowardly members of the body politic who are quite unashamed in their determination to get all they can for themselves and resist to the uttermost any appeal to their public spirit or power of endurance; they do not even begin to understand that anything is due from them to the common cause or that it is in any sense their cause; their first thought is not how they can help their country but how they can escape the hardships which others have to suffer in this time of universal trial and affliction.

But the writer is inclined to disagree with the opinion that the principal danger confronting us is lack of nerve or that selfish and unpatriotic behavior springs from lack of nerve; it is much more likely to be lack of imagination. It is hard to realize even in London what conditions are at the front or in territories occupied by the enemy, and perhaps it is not to be wondered at that individuals who know nothing of either should grumble at what is only after all a very small part of what our soldiers, and civilian dwellers in the war areas, are having to suffer continuously. For example, one notices a deterioration of manners in many of the young women engaged in public service; they are loud and careless in speech, bold and self-assertive in demeanor, offhand and unconscientious in the discharge of their duties. This growing tendency is pitiable beyond expression and bodes ill for the future of our race should it extend much farther. Happily there is good reason to believe that it is more on the surface than one might at first sight suppose and affects comparatively few out of the millions whom the demands of a strenuous hour have thrown into unaccustomed occupations. Would it exist at all if those guilty of it only possessed a little more imagination? Would any one among us be guilty of conduct that makes the task of our fighting men harder or the burden of those in authority heavier to carry if only we could place ourselves in the actual position of the many who have had to endure unspeakable things in the regions devastated by war?

One sometimes sits looking across the fireplace at a loved one with the thought in mind, "But for the mercy of God, to which we were no more entitled than others, you might have suffered the fate of thousands of Belgian and Serbian wives and daughters". Yesterday the writer sat at lunch next to a gracious middle-aged lady with a sweet calm face, a face like that of Edith Cavell. The lady in question is busily engaged from day to day in war relief work and the alleviation of suffering, and the question instantly suggested itself, though unspoken, as the company present listened to her quiet, wise observations on the national problems before us: "What would have happened to you had you been in the place of Edith Cavell or the Germans in occupation in London?" Beyond doubt she would have been dead by now, for she would have acted in precisely the same way as her brave and noble countrywoman whom Von Bissing executed. The momentary realization provoked a shudder. It seems so incongruous with the occasion. There we sat, a little gathering of ordinary British people, talking about the War, the food shortage, the air raids, our individual duties in relation thereto, and so on, while another picture rose before the mental gaze—the picture of our silver-haired hostess, with the gentle manners and gracious smile, led out from the prison by a Prussian military officer and stationed face to face with a firing party of Prussian soldiers to be shot. Unthinkable? Not at all; this very thing had been done to this very kind of lady elsewhere, and would be done to her if our command of the seas ceased for a single week. It would be done to others, to many of us; we civilians would be slain in platoons to terrorize a population unaccustomed to the sight of an invader. These things have happened, are happening and will happen, to people every whit as worthy as we but not so fortunate. Our fleets and armies hitherto have been able by the mercy of God to stand between us and this fate, and that is all.

Can people in general be got to realize it? Sometimes one is tempted to think otherwise. There is a strange levity of demeanor observable in many quarters, a levity quite consistent with the crassest selfishness and indifference to the needs of others. Let no one be under the delusion that a gay, frivolous, irresponsible habit of mind is the one that makes the best of untoward circumstances and greets the unseen with a cheer. Nothing of the kind. Psychologically it is often only a shade removed from the most callous cruelty. Are the people of our race prepared to endure as much as the Germans have already had to endure? The question is at least worth asking. Are we as willing to sacrifice our personal well-being for a great idea as we seemed to be at the beginning of the War? There are panic-stricken folk who would make peace at any price at any moment, not because they feel war to be wrong or have any pity for its victims in other lands or the mourners here at home, but because prices are high and bombing raids on London dangerous. They can be as cheerful and hilarious as you please so long as they are not personally inconvenienced. The spectacle they present is a poor one at the supreme crisis of the greatest struggle in history and the sternest test of our national manhood and womanhood.

Let us unite in the prayer to Almighty God that the menace of a fractious cowardly temper may be averted from our country; that all discord and foolish clamour may cease; and that the national spirit may be maintained upon the highest levels of fortitude and noble purpose until the end of our striving comes and the blessing of peace is restored to the long-afflicted world.

When an adult is baptized the Sponsors are witnesses rather than Godparents, for the candidate takes the vows himself. One will nevertheless prefer to have in these witnesses people who are likely to care. It is assumed that as soon as may be the Baptism of an adult shall be followed by Confirmation, in that, if he is ready to be baptized he is also ready to be confirmed. And the obligation to enter into the full privileges of Christian responsibility is evident.

Before every Baptism the rector will secure all the statistics required, and immediately after the Service he will enter the record in the Parish Register and make out the certificate. To delay this duty for even a day is carelessness which cannot be excused.

On Training the Clergy—IV

By THE REV. JOHN P. PETERS, Ph.D., D.D., Sc.D

WE have now begun to introduce the study of the English Bible into our schools and colleges. We can never give the Bible the place which it ought to have, however, until we bring theological schools into that relation with the university which I have suggested, and until we make the study of the Bible in the original languages not a discipline of the theological school but a discipline of the university, requiring our theological students to take their training in the Bible in those university courses.

When some thirty-five years ago, in a course of articles in the Evening Post, I advocated the introduction of Hebrew and the Semitic languages into our universities, I was almost ridiculed by my conservative college friends. (Later I was party to a scheme to bring the study of the history of religions into our universities.) It seemed to them so revolutionary to teach languages like that in universities, in spite of the wonderful culture revealed through, and literature contained in at least two of them, and especially in the Hebrew. Now Arabic and Assyrian and others of these languages can be studied in the universities, but the Hebrew Bible has not been given the place which is its due on account of the relation of the university and the theological schools. What is true of the Old Testament in Hebrew is still more true of the New Testament in Greek, and what is true of the Bible is true also of history.

The plan which I propose would, I think, change all this and bring into the general educational forum these great books and these and other great themes. It would give religion a place in education which it does not hold today. To the student for the ministry, on the other hand, would come the opportunity of broader educational facilities, higher intellectual standards, and of familiar contact with men of his own age and kind with different ideals and vocations, with the sense of obligation which such contact would bring to make his religion a real force in the life of the university.

The large divinity schools, or those which exist in university towns like Philadelphia, Chicago, Cambridge, San Francisco, Sewanee, and, above all, New York, should, it seems to me, be brought into the closest possible touch with the universities in those places, and with all the university facilities for training, not only theoretically, but practically, by placing them in physical contact with the university, as it were. The seminaries should become part of the university, retaining, however, full control of the life within their walls, and affording such special and technical training as may seem expedient for their purpose of preparing men for general or special work in the ministry.

This may be a counsel of perfection, but it seems to me that the goal toward which we ought to move, and toward which we are in some regards already moving, is to connect the intellectual training for the ministry with the university, the spiritual and technical training with the church hall or college, divinity school, theological seminary or whatever else it may be called, in connection with the university; to establish a closer connection between the bishop and his candidates, with a proper supervision by him, or such person as he shall delegate to represent him, over that work which you may call the laboratory or experimental work of the student, in connection with the cathedral, city or other missions, parishes, hospitals, prisons, or whatever else, according to the needs of their training, very much in the same way in which young men who are preparing for the medical profession are required to attend clinics and visit this hospital and that; and finally, during his diaconate, that the bishop or his delegate should take the absolute direction of the work of the deacon, and assign him for a year to work which should correspond in a way to that of the medical interne in the hospital.

In the old days I used to see much of Bishop John Williams of Connecticut and his divinity school at Middletown and his candidates for the ministry, and it seems to me, as I recall his relation to those students and his influence over them, that if, instead of pursuing the policy of secluding the students in Middletown in a separate Church divinity school, he had gathered them about him in a Church college or hall in New Haven where they, through the University, could have obtained the intellectual opportunities and the intellectual stimulus of a broad line of opportunity, retaining their intimate, personal and religious association with him, and with such assistants as he might gather about him for practical religious work and for teaching them the history and the love of his dear Church, we should have had nearly, if not quite, the ideal of clerical training. I think, moreover, that such a Church college for the training of the clergy in New Haven would have had a profound influence on the University and brought many men into the ministry.

And now to sum up practically the suggestions which are scattered here and there through this paper:

It is necessary, it seems to me, if we are going to make any improvement in the training of the clergy, to revise radically the canons dealing with requirements for ordination. The requirements for ordination should be general, not specific, leaving very much to the discretion of the bishop and the examining chaplains, with a consulting and advising board of experts appointed by the Church, namely, the Board of Religious Education. Qualifications of an intellectual character, as shown by diplomas from recognized institutions of learning, or by other evidences of work done, should be accepted by the examining chaplains, generally in preference to examinations. Provision should be made in determining the qualifications of candidates for the ministry for a proper estimate of experience, and knowledge in other fields, as medicine, law, engineering, business, governmental and social work, for personality, including the gift of eloquence, for spiritual experience and spiritual power. I see no way in which this can be done except by leaving considerable discretion to the bishop, checked to some extent by the Standing Committee and the examining chaplains.

Let the intellectual work of preparation be done, so far as it is at all possible, in contact and in competition with others, not theological students, in universities and similar seats of learning. A student will learn more and learn it in a more living form in this manner than in the seclusion of a divinity school, where he associates only with persons like-minded.

Let the divinity schools be brought into contact with the universities, and their intellectual equipment become part of the general university equipment. Let them retain under their own control the spiritual, practical and technical work of the training of the student for the ministry.

It is this side of the training of the clergy that needs, it seems to me, special development, better equipment of our schools, and the assistance and co-operation of parish clergy, especially those who have made a pronounced success in some field or fields of Church work. It needs above all the development of what you may call the laboratory idea, an opportunity for the student to observe pastoral work, rescue and social work, and all the rest in practice; and here the voice of the bishop should harmonize with the voice of the institution. The bishop should be in closer spiritual touch with his candidates personally, or as represented by some delegate, than is always the case at the present time; although in the nature of things, especially when he does not live in the place where his candidates are preparing, the actual supervision of their practical work must be left to the experts in the school. If the bishop is a wise man, and these are real experts, he will be glad so to leave it.

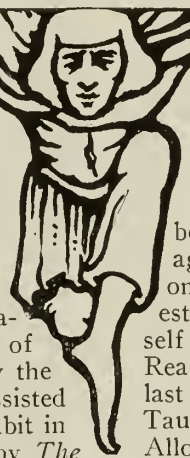
Lenten Reading

By the Rev. Henry Bradford Washburn



THE minister's reading will naturally relate itself in some way to the War. Topics and titles are offered, therefore, with the present crisis in mind.

The consecrated will is needed now as seldom before. The minister must be able to focus his attention and his powers on fundamental principles and on the ideals that are well worth achieving. He must make them real and vivid to his imagination. He must, therefore, understand the power of the Will, and he must appreciate how remarkably the Will may be developed. He may be immensely assisted in such a purpose by the chapters on Will and Habit in James' Psychology, by James' Will to Believe, by The Spiritual Exercises of Ignatius Loyola and by any good Life of Loyola. Loyola was a master of concentration. Although the detail of his method may not appeal to one, his confidence that the Will might be developed to a point of miraculous efficiency, and his actual mastery of himself and of men through the Will is certain to be of practical value.

The minister must realize that times of war are frequently periods of moral and religious progress. Instead of despairing of spiritual development during these years he should count on it. He must buttress his own faith in this with facts in proof of it. He will find them within the period of the Thirty Years War (1618-1648), a period which included also the years of the Great Rebellion in England. Out of those days and the turbulent years that followed, came Milton's Paradise Lost and Paradise Regained. They are full of superiority to the changes and chances of the days in which they were written. John Morley's Life of Oliver Cromwell is not only a masterpiece in biography, but it is an account of one to whom religion was the realist fact of life. The essays on Hugo Grotius in Andrew D. White's Seven Great Statesmen have to do with the man of vivid religion, of practical morality and of determination that the world should be better just because it was bad. They tell most interestingly the story of one who preached the gospel of internationalism while one of the cruelest wars of history was raging.

The minister must by word and deed stimulate national idealism. He must look upon the nation as the servant of the nations, as one of the most potent agents for righteousness. He must persuade men that this is true and that they must assist the state onward toward his conception of nationality. Experience has shown me no better means of achieving this end than a careful study of the life of Abraham Lincoln. Morse's Life of Lincoln, in the American Statesmen Series (for one would not have time for Nicholay and Hay's much longer Life), Lincoln's inaugurals, addresses to Congress and principal speeches will furnish material of absorbing and stimulating character. There will be enough here to fill Lent to the full with study of immediate practical importance. Trevelyan's John Bright, parts of John Morley's Gladstone and of Moneypenny and Buckle's Disraeli are of the same high character. But Lincoln stands supreme. We need all of him. It would be unwise to allow anything but time to limit our study of him. To know him thoroughly is to believe in national idealism.

However, the minister must not only be a part of the present struggle; he must also remain constantly superior to it. The one assurance of superiority to the events of daily life is the consciousness of God. The minister, of all men, must be aware of God. He must, therefore, read and think directly about God. Let him be systematic about it, and let him be vital about it. Read of those only who have known God, and observe how closely their knowledge of God was associated with daily life. Take for example one prophet, the shorter the better, for the promise of mastery will be the more probable. Read and reread and read again. Read him every day for two weeks. Take one of the Gospels, St. Mark, for example, the shortest. Do the same with it, always making real to one's self our Lord's awareness of the presence of God. Read it every day for another two weeks. Spend the last two weeks with some mystic—St. Bernard, John Tauler, St. Theresa, Jonathan Edwards, for example. Allow yourself to be impressed with the consciousness of God that each of these possessed. Let not the minister do this as a mere luxury of study. Let him have a war-purpose in it. Let him try to acquire a measure of the God-consciousness of these that he may apply God to the problems and decisions of the day. To be helpful ministers today, to assist in the War, we need more of God rather than less.

Any one of these four groups will be of interest; any one of them will be of service; any one of them will bring a man to Easter closer to God than he now is; and any one of them will ultimately appear in the more Christian life of the parish and of the Nation.

deacon should spend one year in practical work immediately under the eye of his bishop. Where there is a cathedral, that may well form the centre for this training, the deacons being gathered about the bishop there. The work, however, will not lie entirely, in many cases not at all, in the cathedral itself. That will be the centre of activities and of training, but the deacon may be assigned to work in a rural parish, in a prison or hospital, in the city missions, in some settlement, or in some parish dealing with particular problems, according to the needs and requirements of the man himself and according to the opportunities for training which are available; or, under the direction of the bishop, a divinity school or college hall may itself be the centre of training or the place of residence of the deacons, giving them that fourth year which Dean Bartlett advocates.

It is with much diffidence that I have presented this paper to this gathering, and because of that diffidence I have felt it necessary to preface it and to sandwich it with a very egotistical apologia pro vita mea, in order to show that this is not a novel thought with me nor one which I have evolved in a moment, but that I have long studied these questions, and have had the opportunity to consider this problem from many angles. I present this paper with diffidence, however, and with such apologia because, where I was sure fifteen or twenty years ago that what I desired to propose was definitely the right thing, I now venture only to say, "it seems to me"; and I say even that with the greatest uncertainty, doubting much whether after all what seems to me good has any real practical value. If so, then, why has it not been seen and put in practice by the many wiser than myself who have dealt with this problem? Hence my diffidence. I come seeking light, with a very little hope that I may possibly make some feeble contribution to this theme, but really more anxious to hear what others have to say than to impose my own views.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

FOOD ADMINISTRATOR APPEALS TO CHURCHES

Suggestions Are Sent Out by Social Service Commission

NEW YORK CITY.—Acting on the request of the United States Food Administrator, the Joint Commission on Social Service is calling the food conservation campaign to the attention of the hundred provincial and diocesan social service commissions of the Church throughout the country. Mr. Hoover has just issued an appeal to all churches and synogogues in America, in which the following passages occur:

"The recent proclamation of President Wilson, pointing out the increasing seriousness of the food situation and the necessity for greater production and conservation efforts, together with the new regulations of the Food Administration as embodied in the 1918 Home Card, emphasizes the necessity for a closer co-operation between the religious organizations and the United States Food Administration.

"The work that has been done by these organizations prior to this time is deeply appreciated, and the great effectiveness of this means of reaching the people is the justification for a further communication.

"It is urged that each church and synagogue designate a food committee of one or more, to keep in close touch with the Food Administrator on the constantly developing aspects in the food situation. Such committee in each church and synagogue will act as a bureau of information for the members of its organization and as a stimulus to increased activities along the conservation lines hereinafter suggested, or along any other lines that local conditions may justify:

ACTIVITIES SUGGESTED

(1) Eliminating unnecessary collations from all social functions. (2) At all banquets or occasions where the serving of food is necessary, presenting conservation menus, emphasizing the three-course meal, the use of local foods, and the substitution of other foods for those which we wish to save for export. (3) At meetings of church societies and gatherings of that nature, giving some time to consideration of food problems, as, for example: (a) To teach conservation as a matter of self-sacrifice and to impress upon the public the first duty of feeding our soldiers and our associates in the War. (b) To announce and explain the constantly developing program of the Food Administration. (c) To discuss substitutions, desirable recipes, methods of canning and dehydrating, and the relative nutritive values of various foods. (d) To demonstrate cooking or use of war kitchens. (e) To give instruction as to the most practical products to raise in home war gardens; to stimulate the raising of pigs, poultry, etc. (f) To encourage consumption of local products to relieve the transportation problem. The development of home gardens and the local consumption propaganda during 1917 saved the country from great suffering. (4) Delivering an occasional inspirational message from the pulpit and in the Sunday school. (5) Checking the membership to ascertain if all families are enroled as members of the Food Administration. (6) Ascertaining, by periodical reports or otherwise, the actual saving in the essentials by the families in the church, and reporting same to the Administrator. (7) Urging the patronizing of those retail dealers in food, and public eating places which observe the Food Administration regulations. (8) Encouraging the reporting of violations of the food regulations to the Administrator.

"We confidently rely upon the churches, as leaders in their communities, to assist our efforts in this vital emergency work."

EVERY NAME CAMPAIGN THE LARGEST ON RECORD

New York Parish Increases Pledges by 184 Per Cent.

NEW YORK CITY.—Sunday afternoon, February 24, an "Every Name Campaign" took place at the Chapel of the Intercession, Trinity parish. The title of this, as well as the manner of its conduct, will be recognized as somewhat different from the now familiar "Every Member Canvass". So far as known this is the largest canvass ever made in a single congregation, a larger number of persons having been called on by a larger number of visitors.

To the Intercession come numbers of people, and as in most free churches, it has many adherents and attendants who will hardly be willing to be counted as members, or who even perhaps desire to become members. The name used was designed to be so general as to make these persons willing to be visited. While they would hardly be willing to call themselves members, most of them were perfectly willing to be called "names".

The first Sunday was called Inauguration Sunday. The second Sunday was Consecration Sunday, when all were summoned to a great corporate Communion. The succeeding Sunday was called Acceleration Sunday. The fourth Sunday was Campaign Sunday.

The congregation was divided into twenty-four districts, comprising in all 6,118 names at 2,135 addresses. At the close of the brief luncheon, promptly at 2 o'clock, 384 campaigners went out in 210 teams. It was planned that the campaign should last exactly four hours.

The vicar had shown the need of $7,000 additional to be pledged for the needs of the war work, missionary apportionment and parochial charities. The results of the campaign were as follows: For the work of the Intercession at home, which includes charities, educational and industrial work and war work, $13,950.75 was pledged. For the work of the Intercession abroad, which includes missions, religious education, social service, etc., $4,573.42 was pledged. This makes a total pledged through the envelope system of $18,524.17. Last year the pledges for these purposes under the weekly envelope system amounted to $6,527.85, the percentage of increase being 184 per cent.

ARMENIA AND ASSYRIA AFFECTED BY NEW TREAT

Russo-German Agreement Mak Relief Necessity More Urgent

NEW YORK CITY.—The New York new papers announced on Monday morning t that in the new German-Russian tre three Provinces in the Caucasus have b ceded to Turkey. SALOON IS AN OUTLAW, A FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE

"Raise Manhood Above Hog-level", Says W. J. Bryan

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—William Jennings Bryan made an eloquent plea for "boozeless days" before the New York State Legislature last week.

"The majority of the people of this country now live in 'dry' territory", said the speaker. "If there is any virtue in popular government, the majority should have what they want. We are fighting for democracy in Europe. Will you deny democracy at home? The saloon is an outlaw and a fugitive from justice. And when the Legislature of New York votes it will vote either to stand on the side of the home and democracy, or on the side of an outlaw that has only a few more years to live, anyway.

"God never made a human brain that needed alcohol for a stimulant. If a man thinks his brain needs alcohol, he better see a physician to determine whether he is normal and not defective.

"Merchants put their best-finished products in their show windows. When a saloonkeeper gets his finished product he calls for the police to get it out of the way, and then coaxes it back the next day to be refinished. Alcoholism is a disease. No man would spread disease among the hogs of New York State. All we ask is that you raise the manhood of this State to a hog-level. I once had a saloonkeeper tell me that he had put a sign in his saloon saying that he would not sell liquor to intoxicated men. There was about as much consistency in this as there would be if the State gave a man a license to spread the itch throughout a whole town and then fined every man who scratched.

"We have wheatless days, meatless days; give us boozeless days. We need food. We need coal. We need the food and the coal that the liquor industry has used. We have a law now providing that liquor cannot be sold to our boys in the Army. That is not an indictment of our boys, the pick of the land; it is an indictment of liquor. These men who oppose prohibition are men who would make drunkards of soldiers and leave us defenseless. Liquor is a traitor to this Nation as long as this War lasts!"

St. Faith's School Overcrowded

SARATOGA SPRINGS, NEW YORK.—St. Faith's school, of this place, has sent out an appeal for financial help in erecting a new building, which is to cost $6,000. This addition to the equipment of St. Faith's has been made necessary owing to overcrowding, and the need of a gymnasium in which to carry out the state requirements in physical education.

The school was founded twenty-seven years ago by Miss Shackelton, with the purpose of providing a place of secondary education for girls of moderate means, which would have the advantages of a Christian home.

The Rev. H. C. Plum is principal of St. Faith's. The building project has the support of several of the bishops of the Church and, among others, of Dean Fosbroke of the General Theological Seminary; Mr. George Foster Peabody and Mrs. Spencer Trask.

We Receive a Bouquet

THIS week a letter came into the office from a good friend of THE CHURCHMAN living in a Middle Western city, which contained the following bouquet:

> It does seem to me that The Churchman is failing to live up to its claims to be a weekly "newspaper". Outside of the space devoted to the work of the Church in three large centers—New York, Philadelphia and Chicago—it crowds the items relating to the work of the general Church into two or three pages in the back of each edition, and it has the habit of discriminating against the West in favor of the East. The Churchman, in order to appeal to the bulk of Church men and women throughout the country, has got to have more news items about the general Church, and has got to refrain from discriminating against the West and Central West.

We rubbed our eyes and recalled a phrase of George Fitch's, manufactured by him a year or so ago, when his home town on Long Island was having a "Go-to-church" campaign, and someone asked him to write a bit of advertising copy. He wrote: "Don't knock the Church. It may have improved since you were there last."

We wondered what date was printed on the last copy of THE CHURCHMAN our correspondent friend had seen.

When we arrived at THE CHURCHMAN office some few months ago we came out of the Middle West armed to the teeth with exactly the criticism quoted above. After reading the letter we wondered just what we had been doing since that notable occasion. A fear haunted us. Had we unconsciously been subsidized by the East?

So, in order that our editorial conscience might not needlessly bear another heavy burden, we picked up from our desk the last copy of THE CHURCHMAN. Apprehensively we checked up the news. Eleven pages of thirty-three columns. Our examination was quite scientific and microscopic.

And the most we could make of it for the East was ten columns!

The poor old East got only ten columns of news in our precious pages and the rest of the country got twenty-three. Checking up other recent issues seemed to verify this percentage as a rather general average —though the Atlantic end of America suffered even more in some numbers.

We feel better. Also we feel coming on a terrific desire to say something more on this matter next week.

SPIRITUAL REASONS FOR HELPING LIBERTY LOAN

To Be Promulgated by New Committee Through Churches

NEW YORK CITY.—The Liberty Loan Committee of the Second Federal Reserve District will have the co-operation of the churches and religious press in the next Liberty Loan. It has created a Church Division in its Department of Publicity, and will aim to provide clergymen and religious papers with material that will assist them to give publicity to the loan. A few days ago the committee conferred with representatives of the Federal Council of Churches. The committee's spokesman made the following statement:

"It is not our purpose to ask ministers to preach financial sermons or engage directly in selling Liberty Bonds. We do not ask the clergy to discuss the 'business reasons' for buying Bonds. What we desire is that the clergy make clear to the people the profound spiritual reasons for assisting in this loan. There are great religious and moral reasons for our being at war, and there are great religious and moral reasons for the people helping to support that war. We want the Churches of the district, acting through the clergy, the Sunday schools and other auxiliaries, to give wide publicity to those reasons."

MUCH MORE TUBERCULOSIS THAN HAD BEEN THOUGHT

Association Says America Has Over Two Million Active Cases

NEW YORK CITY.—At least 50,000 more tuberculosis hospital beds will be needed in the United States within the next two years to make possible the adequate control of the disease and check its tendency to increase its ravages under war conditions as it has in Europe during the last three years. This is the latest estimate of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, in a statement just issued.

This estimate is based on a revised conception of the prevalence of the disease as the result largely of the examination of recruits and drafted men for our new army and navy. Until recently it was estimated that for every death from tuberculosis in the country there were five active cases of the disease. It is now believed that the true ratio is twice or three times as great. Instead of about 1,000,000 active cases in the country there are probably between two and three million.

"This does not mean that there has been any such increase in tuberculosis", says the statement. "It does mean that we have evolved new and more accurate methods of measuring it, with corresponding possibilities of more complete control."

Excluding Turks From Europe

PORTLAND, OREGON.—At the semi-annual meeting of the Northern Convocation of the diocese of Oregon it was resolved that "the House of Bishops, at their meeting in April, be asked to urge upon the President of the United States that any intention of allowing the Turks to retain control, after the War, of any territory in Europe, and especially of the City of Constantinople, will be contrary to the enlightened conscience and Christian faith of American people".

SOCIAL SERVICE VENTURE IN CHINESE HOSPITAL

Modern Methods Adopted by Mrs. Bliss at St. James' Hospital

ANKING, CHINA.—A new social service venture has been undertaken here by Mrs. Bliss, wife of the missionary physician at St. James' Hospital.

"So many patients leave the hospital unable to resume their former occupation, that I have been spending many days and nights planning how to help them. Finally I have rented an old Chinese house, put a wooden floor and four glass windows in the workroom and fitted up a second room as a dormitory", she says.

"At present four live in the dormitory. No. 1 has a defective heart. He was a beggar by profession and is now a neat, conscientious, cheerful, self-supporting man. No. 2 came to the hospital in a dying condition—17 per cent. of something that should have been at least 98 per cent. in his blood, I believe. After weeks in the hospital he has over 70 per cent. He was a water carrier by trade, but will probably never again be able to do any heavy work. He has no education, of course, and is the size of a twelve-year-old child, although he is twenty-six. No. 3 is an obstinate leg ulcer case. No. 4 is a soldier with a diseased bone in his leg. He has spent seven months in the hospital and now goes on crutches; still needs daily treatment at the dispensary. These all are working under ideal conditions, and are entirely self-supportng.

"We make place cards, Christmas cards, Christmas toys, blotters, etc. I am sending to America for a jig saw, lathe and printing press, so that we may be able to take on all the needy cripples as they come out of the hospital, and also help those who still remain in the hospital and need work, money and good cheer. Already three convalescents have been able to pay their board and leave with a little money in their pockets to make a fresh start."

ATLANTA BONE DRY LAW PROVES MOST EFFECTIVE

Near-Beer Drinks Satisfy Our Military Men

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.—This city of over 280,000 is so "bone-dry" that not even ginger-ale can be had, but there are numerous substitutes made of cereals, with the requisite amount of foam, and put up in bottles resembling beer and ale. The hotels are crowded with visiting families of the soldiers, the streets, theatres, shops, restaurants, cafes, etc., are so continually filled with soldiers that one unconsciously turns to look at a man in civilian dress. Not one single sign or condition of intoxication was seen. The men look splendid, seemed full of "pep" and ordered their "Bevo" or other cereal drink with as much unconcern as they would ask for beer or whiskey. One thing has contributed largely to the success of prohibition—that is the brewers, realizing the psychology of association, have prepared these non-alcoholic drinks under the same outward form that the men had been accustomed to, in their beer and ale days. And the men, to whom the word prohibition suggested white ribbons and tracts and ranting females, found there was nothing in the outward appearance of a bottle of "Bevo" the least bit lowering to their dignity.

In the most exclusive private clubs, where one sees the beauty and charm of the girls and women and the famous Southern hospitality to the officers from the camp, and the visiting English and French who are here to help train our men; at dinner and the dance, only water is drunk, and one mentally compares it with Northern society under the same conditions.

INCREASE SLIM FOOD SUPPLY

Workers in Ridgeland Mission Wish to Start Garden

WHITE BLUFFS, TENNESSEE.—The workers at the Elizabeth House Social Centre are living on a very limited allowance for food. In order to supplement this and as a beginning toward more work of this kind, they are planning to have a garden. They need ten dollars for tools, and can't get to work until those tools are supplied.

There is an urgent need in the community for vocational training of all kinds, but most imperative is a carpentry shop for the boy who loafs and the boy who is fast becoming a loafer. There has been considerable interest aroused over the prospect of having a carpentry shop. The lumber has been donated but there is no money to complete the building. It will take fifty dollars to finish the building (it lacks roof and windows) and to buy the tools.

The Elizabeth House Social Centre at White Bluffs, Tennessee, is an Episcopal institution doing community centre work in a ridgeland community until now unreached by any social agency. The Rev. Mr. Prentice A. Pugh of the Church of the Advent, Nashville, Tennessee, is the president of the board.

In an isolated rural community such school facilities are poor—bad roads, worse housing conditions and no sanitation.

The centre strives by drawing the individual into proper relationship with our organized work to give the Southern ridgelander an opportunity to regain the chance he has lost—or never had—for economic safety and to institute remedial and preventive measures for the common good of all.

"In educating the ridgeland child you are contributing to America's defense," says one of the workers, "besides giving to the individual life something bigger, finer and more ideal than anything he has ever known either spiritually or practically."

Typewriters Wanted in Brazil

NEW YORK CITY.—When the Rev. W. M. M. Thomas returns to Brazil in March he wants to take with him several typewriters, second-hand ones if necessary but new ones if they are forthcoming. The Rev. Jose Severeo da Silva, editor of the Estandarte Christao, Pelotas, Brazil, needs a typewriter for his work. If anyone is moved to present a typewriter it should be addressed to the Rev. W. M. M. Thomas for the Rev. S. da Silva, Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, who would be glad to take such a gift along with him as personal baggage when he goes. This would save expense and insure safe delivery. Mr. Thomas himself would like very much one or two typewriters for use at the Southern Cross School, Porto Alegre.

MYSTERY PLAYS GIVEN IN ENGLISH MUNITION AREAS

Miss Yeatman-Biggs Writes Girls May Present American Play

NEW YORK CITY.—The many Sunday schools and parishes that have presented from time to time the St. Agnes' Mystery Plays written by Mrs. H. L. Hobart and published by the Board of Missions, will be interested to hear that several performances of these plays have recently been given in England, in spite of war times. In a copy of the January Parish Church Notes of St. Paul's, Winchmore Hill, occurs the following note:

"Two performances of a mystery play, 'The Little Pilgrims and the Book Beloved,' are to be given by Holy Trinity parish, Winchmore Hill, assisted by one or two from neighboring parishes. The play will be on the lines of the old 'Mysteries', with a large number of performers, the clergy themselves taking the principal parts. The net proceeds from both performances will be given to the General Fund of the Universities Mission to Central Africa."

Those who attended the General Convention in St. Louis a year ago remember Miss Yeatman-Biggs, the daughter of the Lord Bishop of Worcester, who accompanied her father on his visit to the United States. She has recently written on this subject as follows: "I should like to have Conquering and to Conquer done here. The Girls' Diocesan Association is looking for something to act after Easter in munition areas, and may do it. They have given A Mirror for Souls with a wonderful appreciation and response to thousands of girl munition workers." (A Mirror of Souls is written by an English mystery play writer.) "I saw Little Pilgrims and the Book Beloved given in Coventry last year. The same congregation are going to do The Great Trail this year."

In this country there has been a slight falling off in the number of mystery plays produced owing to the preoccupation of parish workers with war relief. However, in Seattle, the Juniors are preparing to do Conquering and to Conquer and also in Havana, Cuba, where the performance will be in the beautiful Cathedral of the Holy Trinity in Easter week. At the Geneva Conference this Summer, it is probable that The Great Trail will be given out of doors by the younger members of the Conference.

Fellowships at Union Seminary

NEW YORK CITY.—The three Missionary Fellowships offered by Union Theological Seminary have been assigned for the year 1918-1919 to the Rev. Murray Scott Frame B.D., of the American Board, stationed at Tungchou, Peking, China; the Rev. Er Kashiwai, professor of Church history in the Tokyo Theological Institute, and the Rev. H. I. Frost, B.D., M.S.T., of the American Baptist Board of Foreign Missions, stationed at Basalore, India.

These Missionary Fellowships, each of which yields annually $500, are assigned annually to missionaries on furlough or to exceptionally qualified natives of mission lands who have been engaged in responsible positions of Christian service. Their aim is not only to promote advanced missionary preparation but to encourage productive missionary scholarship.

SPECIAL APPEAL SIGNED FOR ARMENIAN RELIEF

Country-Wide Drive Opens Next Week in All Churches

THE undersigned appeal for an immediate and generous response for the people living in Bible Lands. These people have shed their blood as martyrs. The remnant is experiencing a need greater than we of the West can possibly conceive. The President of the United States appeals for them. The Red Cross assists them generously. But all is not sufficient to stay their hunger. Our own Government cannot undertake official relief. The appeal comes to us as Americans, as Christians and as Churchmen, and it should be given generous consideration at this time.

Checks should be made payable to the order of Mr. Woodbury G. Langdon, treasurer; office, 131 East Fortieth Street, New York.

Bishops—Daniel S. Tuttle, Charles P. Anderson, E. Campion Acheson, Samuel G. Babcock, C. B. Brewster, Frederick Burgess, Charles S. Burch, Thomas F. Davies, Thomas F. Gailor, David H. Greer, Wm. A. Guerry, William Lawrence, William A. Leonard, Edwin S. Lines, Paul Matthews, Wm. F. Nichols, Philip M. Rhinelander, James De Wolf Perry, Jr., W. R. Stearly, Chas. D. Williams.

Priests—D. D. Addison, Lester Bradner, Alexander Mann, William T. Manning, Harry P. Nichols, Howard C. Robbins, E. S. Rousmaniere, Charles L. Slattery, Ernest M. Stires, William Harman Van Allen, Elwood Worcester.

Laymen—Stephen Baker, Wm. E. Curtis, George Whorton Pepper, H. H. Pike, Wm. Jay Schieffelin, Francis Lynde Stetson, Samuel Thorne, Jr., Everett P. Wheeler, John W. Wood, George Zabriskie.

Having in mind the special drive for funds for Armenian and Assyrian Relief, to be inaugurated throughout America on Sunday, March 10, the above appeal has been issued to the Episcopal Church.

Our Church Committee for Assyrian and Armenian Relief received up to February 25 over $105,000. There are many other co-operating committees all over America and Canada working in harmony to alleviate suffering, through whom Churchmen contribute.

The distribution reaches the 350,000 or so refugees in Caucasus—Armenians and others who have fled from Turkish Armenia. This number is likely to increase if the Russians recede from Armenia.

In Persia the funds are administered to the Assyrian (Nestorian) Christians, and just now even the Kurds seem to be in the most abject condition. All of Persia seems to be threatened with famine. Even in the Moslem holy cities of Meshed, etc., Americans are reaching starving people whom the fallous Moslems cannot reach.

In Constantinople the funds are sent through Switzerland to the Swedish Ambassador in Constantinople, and from there missionaries in the interior, including those in Beirut, Syria, are informed of sums held at their disposal to purchase necessities of life.

Then wherever the English armies proceed in Palestine or in Mesopotamia the relief work follows closely to alleviate suffering. The Jewish Committees sent some time ago $100,000 to Jerusalem. Bishop McGinnes is in close co-operation with the funds sent to Palestine through Egypt, etc.

In spite of high prices, 17 cents a day, $5 a month, is the sum asked with which to save a human life, and all of Asia Minor east of the Mediterranean and Marmora looks to America for its humanizing and civilizing influence, even though we are at war with the allies of Turkey.

TEUTONIC SCHOOL GIVES LIBERTY BONDS TO CHINA

Will Help to Equip Children's Ward in Wuchang Hospital

NEW YORK CITY.—Two $50 Liberty Bonds have been given to the Board of Missions by the children of Holy Trinity church Sunday school, to be used for the equipment of the children's ward in the Church General Hospital, Wuchang, China. The Sunday school is 95 per cent. Teutonic in its ancestry.

There were two bonds because the children were asked only for $50, but the oversubscription added another like sum, making it possible to buy an additional bond. The offerings for this purpose were in addition to the usual offering for support of the Sunday school, and were completed in six Sundays.

"In view of the new issue of bonds soon to be made by the Federal Government I thought some other school might like to take advantage of the patriotic feelings of the children to accomplish a worthy object," said the superintendent of the school. "It helps the government, and helps the mission work of the Church even more."

TOKYO DOCTORS CONVERTED

Deaconess Knapp Prepares One Physician for Baptism

"We are having the coldest Winter for twenty years, and coal 33 yen a ton!" writes Deaconess Knapp from Tokyo January 21, 1918.

"With the educated Japanese many different Christian influences contribute toward the work of conversion. One doctor has asked me to prepare him for Baptism; another came to make an appointment when he might ask the questions which especially perplex him and prevent him from becoming a Christian. Another—a good Christian and a very busy physician—came and read three chapters of St. Matthew's Gospel aloud to me, just for the love of it.

"The nurses are very attractive and affectionate, although they must of necessity be irregular. Miss Tsuda's girls also have learned to come to see me. They sit before my nice grate fire and tell me their doubts and perplexities. One was baptized a week ago; another is waiting for the consent of her non-Christian parents, another tells me she wants to believe but cannot—but I am sure she can soon.

"The Red Cross is great. The head, a Jewess, and I are becoming fast friends. It seems to me the Tokyo Branch has done remarkable work this Winter."

GENEVA CONFERENCE 1918 PLANS TOLD IN BULLETIN

Bishop Stearly Will Conduct Sunset Services

NEW YORK CITY.—Outdoor hymn singing and a Question Box at the Sunset Service are two new features which the Bulletin of the Geneva Conference announces for 1918. The Geneva Conference is the Summer School of the province of New York and New Jersey, and meets for the fourth time at Hobart College, Geneva, New York, from next July 1 to July 12. It offers courses to clergy and Churchworkers in the three departments of Religious Education, Missions and Social Service. The program for next Summer is as follows:

Religious Education: Principles of Teaching, Elementary, Dr. Boynton; Advanced, Dr. Bradner; Christian Nurture, Dr. Bradner; The Organization of the Church School, Miss Withers; the Spiritual Note in Church Organizations, a course for the G. F. S. and Daughters of the King, the Rev. D. L. Ferris. Missions: The Mission in the United States, the new mission study book written by Bishop Burleson and to be printed by the Board of Missions, taught for senior classes by Miss Grace Lindley and for intermediate classes by Mrs. Brewster, and the new junior textbook taught by Miss Dorothy Giles. Social Service: Principles and Practice of Social Work, the Rev. Augustine Elmendorf; the Spiritual Significance of Social Service, the Rev. Samuel Tyler; Church Work in State Institutions, the Rev. Samuel G. Welles; After War Problems, the Rev. F. M. Crouch, and a course on Social Justice with a leader to be announced later.

In other years there have been various lectures and addresses scheduled for the evening after the Sunset Service. This year the entire evening will be in the hands of the president of the Conference, Bishop Stearly. At 7 o'clock the members will begin to gather under the trees near the gymnasium and will spend half an hour singing familiar hymns. At half after seven the Sunset Service will begin. Every evening there will be an answer to one of the questions in the Question Box, prayers and hymns, and an address by Bishop Stearly, Bishop Fiske or Bishop Brent. The service will be over at half after eight, and the rest of the evening free for study or rest.

The Conference Bible class will be conducted again this year by the Rev. Walter E. Rollins, D.D., of the Virginia Seminary and will be on the Epistles.

The expense for those living on the campus is about $22 for the ten days. Several alumni groups have been formed and are spreading information about the Conference to "not-yet-Geneva-ites" inside and outside of the province. Arrangements have been made this year for the young girls to live together in Blackwell Hall, with Miss Hobart. Miss Frances Withers for several years has been the Board member acting as "house mother" for Miller House where the members of the Woman's Auxiliary usually congregate. Special efforts are being made by the vice-president and officers of the G. F. S. in the province to bring many G. F. S. associates together at Geneva, and they will also live together in Medberry. Information in regard to the Conference may be secured from the secretary, Miss M. J. Hobart, THE CHURCHMAN, New York.

ATTORNEY GENERAL WILL INVESTIGATE LYNCHING

Association for Advancement of Colored People Sends Protest

NEW YORK CITY.—President Wilson, through J. P. Tumulty, secretary to the President, acknowledged the receipt of a telegram from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People protesting against the torturing and burning of Jim M'Ilheron at Estill Springs, Tennessee, and said that the matter would be brought to the attention of the attorney general.

The following letter was sent to Governor Rye of Tennessee:

"Dear Sir: I wired you yesterday in a night letter from Washington as follows:

"The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, speaking in the name of its ninety branches and 10,000 members, and on behalf of the outraged citizenship of the whole country, appeals to you to take action to bring to justice the perpetrators of the foul wrong against the honor of your State in lynching and torturing on Tuesday night Jim M'Ilheron, a Negro accused of murder. Thousands of colored men in your State and the Nation now serving their country in the battle for democracy await Tennessee's answer to their appeal for justice at home.

"This Association, composed of representative citizens of both races, believes that such outrages as the one against which we protest are indefensible at any time but are particularly offensive and dangerous to the public welfare when the Nation is engaged in a life and death struggle against autocratic powers. Such outrages as this, the third one to occur in your State within nine months, place America in an unenviable position when she seeks to protest, however rightfully, against Belgian atrocities committed by German soldiers.

"Memphis, Dyersburg, and now Estill Springs. We ask, for the information of the newspapers receiving our press service, what the great State of Tennessee proposes to do in regard to the violators of her law. I am sure that it is your desire to put the best police and detective ability that can be secured on the trail of these violators of public order. Should lack of funds be an embarrassment to you, this Association offers to put at your disposal funds for this service.

"Sincerely yours,

"(Signed) JOHN R. SHILLADY, Secretary."

Combines With the Witness

BETHLEHEM, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Bethlehem Churchman has been combined with The Witness. Subscribers for the former will receive The Witness until their present subscriptions expire.

New Parish Organized

CAPE MAY, NEW JERSEY.—Philadelphia's Summer colony at Cape May was well represented last week at a meeting of the newly elected vestry of the Church of the Advent.

The seaside church has just been changed from a mission to a fully organized parish attached to the Diocese of New Jersey. The organization of the parish is as follows:

Wardens—George K. Crozer, Jr., and L. Bert Eyster, both of Philadelphia.

Vestrymen—Charles Hunsicker, Anthony Wayne Robinson, Edward M. Sayen, Jr., and Horace Eugene Smith, of Philadelphia, and James S. Radcliffe and Senator Lewis C. Stevens, of Cape May.

The Right Rev. Paul Matthews, bishop of the Diocese of New Jersey, had nominated for rector of the new parish the Rev. Paul Sturtevant Howe, M.A., LL.B., who has been priest-in-charge of the mission congregation, and he was unanimously elected and his salary increased.

BIBLE CLASSES IN ARMY

St. Andrew's Brotherhood Is Developing This Important Feature

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—Organizing Bible Classes has become an important feature of the work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the National Army. The Bible Class furnishes a good nucleus for Christian work. It holds a group of men together, and gives them unfailing inspiration for personal work among their fellows.

One young soldier at Camp Meade organized such a class among his comrades, and within a few weeks its original enrolment of eight members was increased to twenty-nine.

"If it had not been for the transfer of many of our comrades, I think we would have enroled fifty by this time", he writes to Frederick S. Titsworth, executive secretary of the Army and Navy Department.

"Nevertheless", he adds, "we are on the job, and hope to enrol 100".

DR. GEER CELEBRATES 30TH ANNIVERSARY AT ST. PAUL'S

Says He Expects to Resign Vicarship Very Soon

NEW YORK CITY.—Sunday marked the thirtieth anniversary of the ministry of the Rev. Dr. William Montague Geer at St. Paul's chapel, Trinity parish, one of the city's landmarks on lower Broadway. Dr. Geer has for the greater part of his ministry been a picturesque figure in the clerical life of the old chapel, which is said to be the oldest public building in New York. During his ministry Dr. Geer was instrumental in installing a number of new features in the missionary work of the chapel, which served the business men and women of downtown New York and met in large measure the varied religious needs of this section. Dr. Geer comes of an ecclesiastical family, being the son of the Rev. Dr. George Jarvis Geer, a former rector of St. Timothy's church, this city, and a grandson of the Rev. Alpheus Geer, a former rector of St. John's church, Waterbury, Connecticut. He was born in Ballston, New York, in 1848, and was graduated from Columbia College in 1869. He was admitted to the bar in 1872, but later entered General Theological Seminary. In 1878 he was ordained by Bishop Horatio Potter and after serving two New England churches and Christ church, Oyster Bay, Long Island, he came to St. Paul's chapel in 1888.

At the Sunday morning service at St. Paul's he surprised his congregation by saying at the close of a reminiscent sermon:

"I shall soon place a request for retirement in the hands of the vestry for their consideration and proper action."

DEAN BEEKMAN DESCRIBES BURIAL OF U. S. SOLDIER

Soldiers and Sailors Club "Busiest Corner in All Paris"

PARIS, FRANCE.—Recently Dean Beekman was called upon to bury an American soldier. On returning from the funeral he wrote the following description of it and of his feelings on the occasion:

"Five minutes from the Porte de Versailles lies the Cimetiere de Vaugirard. Here in this quiet corner of Paris, under a mantle of snow, on the morning of January 4, was buried the soldier George Kingman. The record said 'American Aviation Service, residence Easton, Massachusetts'. He had died on New Year's Day in Red Cross Hospital No. 2, Paris. The military service was like many another of the past three years and a half; yet quite unlike. As the procession entered the cemetery gate a chaplain walked at the head, but in a uniform never in all its history seen there before. A tri-colored flag covered the plain soldier's coffin, but its folds revealed the Stars and Stripes. The French military palm given to all soldiers who die for France lay thereon, but beside it were flowers, the loving gifts of the soldier's comrades. A guard of French soldiers under arms accompanied the hearse and stood at attention at the grave, but with them a guard of American Marines. Having committed the body to the earth and the soul to God who gave it, he offered a prayer for those who mourned across the sea. Then the trumpeter, stepping to the grave, sounded taps, the soldiers' requiem, and the service ended.

"The grave was marked 'Division 15. Ligne 18, No. 1'. Stretching back from it for a full hundred yards, with a front of twenty-five graves in unbroken column, bivouacked a battalion of the heroic dead. Surmounting every grave were the wire forms which once had held fresh flowers. The ribbons, weather-beaten but still legible, hung therefrom and read 'De Ses Camarades—A Notre Frere—A Notre Fils'. With two exceptions the tri-color of France waved above them, even as it had in life and on the day they fell. These two were Belgians. And now another comrade from a far-off land, under a new flag, but still a comrade in the great cause of right against wrong, of liberty against tyranny had taken his place in the front rank of this battalion of glory.

"As the chaplain and guards of honor turned and directed their march outward to the cemetery gate, a soldier kneeling at the grave of his only brother, fallen for France a few weeks before, arose and saluted."

Dean Beekman is at the American Soldiers' and Sailors' Club in Paris, "the busiest and most effective corner of America in Paris", says the Dean. Recently he received the following letter from General Pershing:

"Dear Mr. Beekman—Please accept my congratulations upon the success of the American Soldiers' and Sailors' Club. You are doing a noble work, and I bespeak for the club the accomplishment of great good during the New Year.

"With very best wishes, believe me, etc."

PERSHING.

BISHOP ISRAEL VISITS SOME EUROPEAN PARISHES

Preaches in Nice to Largest Congregation Since War Began

ICE, FRANCE, Ash Wednesday, 1918.— Rt. Rev. Rogers Israel, D.D., now with American troops in France, has been to leave his duties at the front for a t time to visit some of our European shes. He has just paid a greatly ap- iated visit to the American Church in city.

Saturday afternoon last he met the shioners at a reception in the rectory. next day, Quinquagesima Sunday, he ched both morning and afternoon; and noble eloquence with which he set forth power and privilege of Christianity in world of today will not soon be for- n by his hearers. ter this service there was a gathering haki, to shake hands with our Bishop haki, and this informal reception the p followed with a friendly talk to arish's vestry. Such were the salient res of the Bishop's visit. Very happily, ver, he was able to spend several days ice, going in and out among us, and he went on his way again all were . For though he had come to us a ger, we had found in him a deeply d friend.

Religious Education Board Meets

WE, INDIANA.—At a recent meeting of Board of Religious Education of the Dio- of Michigan City held at Howe School nite plans were formulated for the sec- annual diocesan Summer school to be at Vawter Park, Lake Wawasee, In- a, June 24 to July 2. The place for the school is ideal. It is on the north shore of the largest lake in Indiana, where is located the Summer home of Bishop White with All Saints' Chapel in the same grounds. The lake, with facilities for boating and bathing and other sports, will afford an excellent opportunity for the recreation outside of study hours. Special arrangements can be made with the Vawter Park Hotel for the accommodation of all who will attend the school.

Because the Rev. R. H. White, secretary of the board, has been called to the colors as chaplain in the Army, the Rev. John F. Plummer of Kokomo, Indiana, has been appointed secretary in his stead.

For Country

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, Elkhart, Indiana, has been presented with three hand-sewed silk memorial flags which have been received and duly dedicated. The processional flag was given by Mrs. C. D. Roys; a service flag, containing sixteen stars, by Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Borneman, and an American flag by Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Foster. The latter gave a new rectory to the parish as a memorial of their mothers just one year ago.

AT GRACE CHURCH (SW.) Washington, District of Columbia, the Rev. Meade Balton MacBryde, rector, the Young People's Club have repeated a three-act comedy (which they gave recently in the parish hall) for the amusement of the soldiers at the Washington Barracks and also at Fort Myer. A Red Cross Unit has been organized, and on Sunday evening, March 10, a group of twenty-five men from the Washington Barracks will be entertained at supper in the parish hall prior to the 8 o'clock service at which the men will be present.

THE REV. LESTER BRADNER, Ph.D., of the General Board of Religious Education, has been obliged to resign from the staff of the War Commission of the Church. He had charge of the registration of the Churchmen who are in national service.

CHICAGO CLERGY HELP THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE

Bishops Urge Co-operation to Make Illinois Bone Dry

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The Anti-Saloon League of Illinois is enlisting the clergymen of the State for legislative organization work. The immediate objective of the first drive is to work out an organization through men in the churches, lodges, factories and other groups of men, so that the forces of righteousness shall be an actual controlling factor in the selection of candidates at the primary elections. It is imperative that Illinois voters elect the men who will see to it that Illinois is one of the States which will ratify the Federal Prohibition Amendment. Bishops Anderson and Griswold are urging upon the clergy the necessity of whole-hearted co-operation with the forces which will make "dry territory" of Chicago and Illinois. The Rev. Edwin J. Randall, rector of St. Barnabas' church, Chicago, is the representative of the diocese in Anti-Saloon League work.

made of leaving St. Peter's church, where the other meetings had been held, and going to the Moolah Temple. This is the monster building where all the sessions of the General Convention were held.

At 8 o'clock the floor was covered with the crowd and the galleries were half filled. By actual count 1,500 were there. And it had rained all day and was a mushy night.

The Rev. Dr. Robert W. Patton in this campaign has profoundly moved the city. Preparations had been made for it during five weeks. Mr. H. G. Hurd, a leading automobile dealer of the city, had been appointed chairman of the central committee. He closed his auto office and opened another office downtown with a sign, "Missionary Campaign", on the door. From there letters and messages and literature kept passing out into the city and the suburbs. It was a part of Mr. Hurd's conviction that prayer meetings should be held in making ready the way for the campaigner; and they were held, lots of prayer meetings in the homes of lots of people. The Woman's Auxiliary co-operated. Guilds and societies talked about the coming event and planned for it and prayed for it. Rectors announced it from the chancel Sunday after Sunday and preached about the purpose of it. In one suburban parish the people having autos volunteered to scurry about the community and hunt for folks who ought to be interested but were not, and compel them to come in—in their autos as their guests. That also was a new thing under the sun for the Episcopal Church.

Meetings were held at 3 in the afternoon and at 8 in the evening. They were advertised to be one hour long. But the people wanted to stay. Wednesday night, at Moolah Temple, it was 10 o'clock when Dr. Patton stopped. And all were there at the finish.

Thursday night in Moolah Temple 1,400 sat down to supper—a very simple supper indeed, simply arranged for in order that we might be together in one place about one board. Dr. Patton took the occasion to argue the question of the Church's missionary opportunity once again. Your correspondent heard one typical business man and Churchman of the city tell Dr. Patton that, if he had accomplished nothing more during the series of meetings, he had converted seventy-five business men just like himself to that degree of a change of heart so that, in the future, their pledges would be "fifty-fifty" for parish work and missionary work; and that they wouldn't make any distinction, either, between what is called domestic and what is called foreign missions. Dr. Patton and Mr. Wood were the guests of the Church Club at a luncheon given on Tuesday and of the rector and vestry of St. Peter's parish at a luncheon given on Thursday.

Dr. Manning Remains in Camp

New York City.—At the request of the officers at Camp Upton and of the War Commission of the Episcopal Church, and with the full approval of the vestry of Trinity church, the Rev. William T. Manning will continue his work as chaplain at Camp Upton for an indefinite period.

According to the first arrangement, Dr. Manning's term of service was to end March 1.

Our Weekly News Letter

NEW YORK

The Archbishop's Visit—Of course the important event of the week is the arrival of His Grace, the Archbishop of York, and the various Church functions at which he is the central figure. However, since an account of all this is given elsewhere I will not include it in my letter.

Two New Rectors—The Rev. Glenn W. White, eight years rector at Albion, has accepted the rectorship of Christ church, Riverdale Avenue. Mr. White will assume his duties after Easter.

Another Christ church, the old Christ church now situated at Seventy-first Street and Broadway, is also welcoming a new rector, the Rev. John R. Atkinson, formerly rector of Trinity church. Elizabeth. Christ church was founded by members of Trinity parish and was incorporated in 1793. Its first rector, the Rev. Dr. Pilmore, came to this country as one of John Wesley's itinerant preachers, but was ordained later by Bishop Seabury.

The first church building was on Ann Street, the second on Anthony (now Worth Street), the third on Eighteenth Street, the fourth on Thirty-fifth Street and Fifth Avenue, and finally in 1888 the present building was erected on Broadway and Seventy-first Street.

Church of the Beloved Disciple—The offering for the Church War Commission at the Church of the Beloved Disciple was about $850. Nearly $1,000 has been given for the work of the Militia of Mercy and the parish branch has sixty-five active members giving much of their time to knitting for our men in the service. There are forty-five stars on the service flag.

Here and There—The Men's Club of the Church of the Epiphany recently visited the Men's Club of Trinity chapel. Addresses were made by the acting rector of Epiphany, the Rev. Arthur Ketchum, and the vicar of Trinity chapel, the Rev. J. W. Sutton. Last Sunday at the Church of the Holy Communion the educational secretary of the Board of Missions, Dr. W. E. Sturgis, spoke on "The Church's Welfare and Our Responsibility", and in the evening Dr. Ross of Union Seminary delivered the first of his lectures on "The Temporal and Eternal in the Light of the War". There will be a quiet day for women at Christ church, Bronxville, this Saturday led by Dr. Barry.

The Rev. E. H. Schlueter at Allentown—The Rev. Edward Schlueter of St. Luke's chapel is at Allentown, where he took up some weeks ago the work Father Officer began among the men of the Ambulance corps there in training. Mr. Schlueter has, however, been back once or twice to look after his own parishioners.

Lenten Bible Class—A class on the missionary message of the gospels is being taught by Miss Grace Lindley at the Church of the Incarnation on Tuesday afternoons.

A Helpful Week—The week en March 2 will long be remembere Churchmen and many others in Loui because of the noonday services he Macauley's Theatre by the Very Rev. wyn T. Owen, dean of Christ Church C dral, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada. It not by flights of oratory that the crow Macauley's were impressed, but by the derful simplicity and beauty of the s er's language, and by his peculiar netism which enabled him to talk pe ally, heart to heart as it were, with one present.

Dean Owen's topic for the week "The Cross", and his presentation o many phases of the Cross and its hold humanity, delivered in a quiet, humar reached home to the very hearts o hundreds who thronged the theatre day, as nothing has done for a long in Louisville.

The noonday services in Louisville this r are being conducted more largely upon ngelistic lines than ever before and the ponse on the part of the people is very tifying.

nfirmation at Camp Zachary Taylor—ring the past two or three weeks Bishop odcock has administered the rite of nfirmation to three different classes, or ts, as they are called at Camp Zachary lor. Charles Herbert Young, an eal to the clergy of the diocese to make fullest possible use of Lent, especially the children. "Let us bring strong ssure upon the Lenten Offerings for sions", says Mr. Young, and upon the rit of Missions', and show our children to help the Church." In the appeal to dren to do hard things, and to overcome acles, we may avoid any real demoralion of the work of religious education in diocese, which hitherto has been really ient.

PHILADELPHIA

Bohlen Lectures at Holy Trinity—The Bohlen lectures for 1918 are being delivered on Monday afternoons at Holy Trinity parish house by the Rev. J. C. Ayer, D.D., the professor of Church history at the Philadelphia Divinity School. There will be five lectures on "The Constitution of the Medieval National Church".

Noonday Services Well Attended—The noon services at downtown centres are better attended than ever this year. Men and women throng to hear the spiritual interpretations of the War—to find the Rock that stands firm, while all else is shifting.

Father Officer's mission at Christ church in Germantown is making a very real appeal to the people: the congregations are increasing, and are being impressed.

Archbishop Prendergast Dies—In 1915 there was celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the work of the late Archbishop in the Roman diocese of Philadelphia. On the 26th of February this year notice of his death was heard with general sense of loss.

Plans for Holy Week—The Synod of Washington at its meeting in November endorsed a movement toward an intensified observance of Holy Week. Bishop Rhinelander called a meeting in January of the Evangelistic committee that was formed at the time of the Preaching Mission.

The committee realized that Holy Week was a time that every parish would have plans for its own observance—when the people and the rectors would expect to come close together. Yet, there is provision made to send a new voice into any parish where such may be desired. A list of definite suggestions has been sent out to the parishes, including (1) A daily celebration of the Holy Communion, (2) Preaching of the Cross at night from Monday to Friday, (3) A special service for Communicants, (4) Special meeting for recent Confirmation classes, (5) A Guild service for the parochial organizations, (6) A service for all engaged in war work, (7) Special services for children (8) Services in public institutions.

The committee has further urged other Christian bodies to make an effort to observe Holy Week in some special way of their own. The leaders of the religious life of the city have responded favorably to this appeal.

The committee is composed of the following clergy from various sections of the diocese: The Rev. Dr. Tomkins, the Rev. Dr. Steele, the Rev. Dr. Hutchinson, the Rev. Messrs. Richardson, Walenta, Pember, Taitt, Townsend and Moorehouse.

MISSOURI

A Crowded Church—A church of our communion twice filled on the same Sunday with what a theatre manager would call a capacity house is a sight as welcome as it is unusual in these days of slim church congregations. But this thing did happen in the Church of the Ascension, St. Louis, on the Second Sunday in Lent. The morning service was the annual commemoration of the birth of Washington by the St. Louis Chapter of the Sons of the Revolution. There was a great gathering of the members of the order and their friends and the communicants of Ascension parish.

The service was read by Bishop Tuttle, who is the president of the Sons of the Revolution of the State of Missouri. The preacher was the Rev. John S. Bunting, rector of Ascension, his topic being "The World Mission of Washington". In the evening in the same church the preacher was the Rev. Dr. R. W. Patton, opening the missionary campaign which was continued for a whole week. The church was crowded and the service and sermon aroused great enthusiasm.

The Ascension parish has taken a leading part in the arrangements for the campaign. Preparations throughout the city have been deliberately and earnestly made. Many meetings of vestries and guilds and societies have for several weeks made this the chief purpose of their getting together. In many parishes frequent prayer meetings were held during the week before the campaign opened. As advance agents Dr. Patton sent to St. Louis the Rev. Louis G. Wood and the Rev. Francis J. Clark. Among the preachers who came to prepare the way was Bishop Bratton of Mississippi. All the congregations of the city of St. Louis and the suburbs are united in the campaign plans and are working to receive a blessing and to become stronger and more reliable power houses for the accomplishments of the Master's mission.

On Sunday afternoon, the second in Lent, as one feature of the campaign, a great rally of the Sunday school children of the city was held at Christ church cathedral. Addresses were made by Bishop Tuttle, Dr. Patton and the Rev. C. E. Betticher. Those who think they know are saying that this is probably the first time in their history that all the churches and missions of St. Louis have been tied together and banded together as a unit in the great cause of setting forward the work of the Kingdom of Christ. Dr. Patton is having conferences at St. Peter's church three afternoons and three evenings this week. Thursday night it is expected that at least 1,200 will sit down with him at a simple supper in Moolah Temple, where instructions will be given concerning the every-member canvass which is to be undertaken.

Noonday Services—The downtown noonday services are again getting a very encouraging attendance this Lenten season. Some debate was had as to whether they should be held in the Cathedral or, as in former years, at one of the theatres. It was finally decided in favor of a theatre, as being more informal and more likely to catch the casual worshiper. The Bishop of the diocese, as has been his custom for many years, took the services during the first few days. Other speakers include the Bishop Coadjutor of Colorado, the Rev. Dr.

R. W. Patton, the Rev. Dr. Phillips, the Rev. J. S. Bunting of St. Louis, the Rev. Samuel M. Dorrance of Jefferson Barracks recruiting station, Bishop Fiske of Central New York, the Rev. J. A. Schadd of Quincy, Ill., Bishop Thurston of Eastern Oklahoma, and the Rev. F. J. Clark of New York.

RHODE ISLAND

Church Dedicated—Christ church, Coventry, the only church in the village, was dedicated by Bishop Perry on February 3, assisted by the Rev. Charles A. Meader, Diocesan Missionary. There was a congregation overflowing the little church. The service was the crowning of the arduous work of Deaconess Dahlgren and Deaconess Gillespy in the surrounding community. The edifice is of gray stucco, with open timber roof. The interior furnishings, including the altar and brass cross, were the gift of St. Martin's church, Providence, and the communion set was from the St. Elizabeth Home, Providence. On the same occasion Bishop Perry gave formal blessing to the new Christ Church Memorial House, adjoining the church property. This is a neighborhood house for the village, erected in memory of Annie Rutherford Morgan Dahlgren by her personal friends.

Lenten Services—The special preachers at the Tuesday evening Lenten Services at St. John's church, Providence, are the Rev. Philemon F. Sturges of Grace church, Providence, the Rev. Stanley C. Hughes of Trinity church, Newport, the Rev. John A. Gardner of Holy Trinity church, Tiverton, the Rev. John H. Robinette of Trinity church, Pawtuxet, and the Rev. Percy G. Kammerer of Grace church, Providence.

Miss Fales Dies—Miss Emma C. Fales, well known in the Diocese of Rhode Island as Superintendent of the St. Elizabeth Home, Providence, for twenty-three years, died on February 16 at the Rhode Island Hospital. She had retired from her post in 1911, on account of ill health, after having given the best years of her life to the upbuilding of the Home, and never recovered her former vigor. The funeral at St. Michael's church, Bristol, was conducted by the Rev. Anson B. Howard and the Rev. Joseph M. Hobbs. Interment was at North Burial Ground, Bristol.

Service Flag—A beautiful silk service flag was unfurled in St. James' church, Woonsocket, on a recent Sunday evening. It contains thirty-nine stars. The rector, the Rev. Charles A. Denfeld, read the names of those in service, and the choir sang "God Save Our Splendid Men" to the tune of the national hymn. The flag is the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Thayer of Worcester, Massachusetts.

Notes—The Rev. Herbert C. Dana of St. Mary's church, East Providence, whose leg was broken by a fall on the ice early in December, has recently undergone a severe operation at the Memorial Hospital, Pawtucket, on account of the failure of the fracture to knit. He is now convalescing with encouraging progress.

Miss Abbie E. Southwick is acting as Educational Secretary of the Diocese of Rhode Island, and has established office hours on Tuesday afternoons at the Bishop McVickar House, Providence, where she can be consulted on Sunday school matters.

Mrs. Barbour, the wife of the Rev. James E. Barbour, of the Church of the Advent, Pawtucket, has undergone a serious operation for appendicitis at the Rhode Island Hospital, but is now on the way to a satisfactory recovery.

EASTON

Farm Products Help Parishes—The increased value of farm products is already showing itself in many of the parishes throughout the Diocese of Easton. Numerous rural parishes which have been hindered during the past years because of financial difficulties are now coming into their own and rapidly planning expansions. Many vestries are talking improvements to the parish property and changes in the buildings to afford better facilities.

Christ church, Kent Island, one of the more prosperous rural churches of the Diocese, is planning a much needed extension of the Chancel and improvements to the rectory. These will be started early in the spring.

St. Peter's church, Salisbury, the Rev. Herbert D. Cone, rector, is planning as soon as possible to provide a better rectory either by selling the present rectory and buying in another part of the city or by building a new one. St. Peter's is one of the few churches in the Diocese which is able to maintain a full Lenten schedule with sufficient fuel.

St. Stephen's church, Earleville, the Rev. Edmund Burk, rector, is considering the acquisition of a property at Cecilton for a rectory. The rectory at present is situated at Earleville adjoining the parish church. The larger number of families live at Cecilton, the center of the parish, where the chapel is located.

WYOMING

A "Mission of the Incarnate Life"—A new method for parochial missions, devised by the Rev. Paul B. James of Torrington, Wyoming, has been tried out with marked success in a mission in St. Luke's church, Buffalo, Wyoming, conducted by the Rev. Mr. James, assisted by the Rev. Rowland F. Philbrook of Glenrock, and by the vicar of St. Luke's, the Rev. Samuel E. West. Twelve scenes from the life of Christ formed the basis of both instructions and sermons, each of these scenes supplying the topic of one complete service of the mission. The description of the scene and of its function in our Lord's life and teaching, with brief comment suggesting the thoughts the event might have produced in His own human consciousness or in that of one or more participants or witnesses, formed a separate "exercise" each evening, the missioner who was to read the lesson having this portion of the work assigned to him.

The following examples of a scene, topic of instruction, and the sermon developed therefrom, will help explain the method:

Scene, the Birth at Bethlehem; instruction, the New Birth (Baptism); sermon, "The Infant Christ in Our Hearts."

In its descriptive portions the "Mission of the Incarnate Life" employs a principle known to everyone who has learned how to make a Meditation, i. e., the objective lineation of a scene. Its general me is but an extension of that of the T Hours' service for Good Friday to o events in our Lord's life. It is a densed presentation of the Christian Y

The advantages of the method ap to be: (a) Definite instruction in the of Christ; (b) The linking of Chri doctrine and practice to their source in life and teaching; (c) Emphasis on motives which produce conversion r than on conversion itself as a subje experience; (d) Dependence upon the s preaching of Jesus Christ Himself in hearts of the hearers, rather than upon personal gifts of the missioner; (e) eral harmony of the method with Church's system of teaching, elimina the usual hiatus between a parochial sion and the "follow-up" work of the pa priest when the mission is over.

It is too early for more than a ger summary of results from the Missio Buffalo. These, however, may be no (1) Increasing interest and attendance, e cially of men; (2) An unusual numbe resolution cards signed and returned, of them indicating serious thought, self amination and prayer; (3) The clea away of much misunderstanding about Church and the Christian religion; (4) awakening of several "lapsed" comm cants; (5) The breaking down, espec among business men, of cynical indiffer to the claims of Christ and the Chu (6) The discovery of several candidate confirmation; (7) 20 per cent. increas regular subscriptions for the support o parish; (8) Promises secured from teen business men to make an "Every-M ber Canvass".

BOSTON

Archbishop of York in Boston—Archbishop of York preaches at Har University on the Fourth Sunday in (March 10) at 11 a. m.; at Trinity ch Boston, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon o same day and at the Cathedral at 7: the evening.

On Monday, March 11, he will address a patriotic mass meeting in Symphony Hall, Boston, at 8 o'clock in the evening. Admission to this meeting will be by ticket until 8 o'clock, after which the hall will be open to all.

On Tuesday, March 12, at 12 o'clock, noon, there will be a mass meeting in Faneuil Hall, Boston, where the Archbishop will speak, which will be open to all.

Bishop Lawrence is giving a luncheon in honor of the Archbishop of York on March 12, to which he has invited all the clergy of the diocese.

Corporate Communion of the Clergy—Bishop Lawrence has asked all the clergy of the diocese to be present at the Cathedral on the morning of March 12 for a Celebration of the Holy Communion, at which he will make an address.

It has been the Bishop's custom for several years to gather as many as possible of the clergy together once a year at a Eucharist in the Cathedral and to lead their thoughts at this time on subjects vitally connected with the fundamental principles of pastoral and priestly life. This is the first occasion of the sort since the entering of this country into the War, and it is certain that the diocesan will have for his clergy words of solemn and inspiring import relative to the unprecedented character of the present call for spiritual leadership.

Missionary Bishops in Town—Boston has been favored during the last month by the visits of two of the Church's newest missionary bishops. Bishop Burleson of South Dakota came first with his ringing message of the Church's accomplishments and present opportunity in this Western district where her children are so nearly evenly divided in number among the white and red citizens of the State.

Bishop Touret of Western Colorado has been preaching in various churches of the city and speaking before parish organizations of the challenge that is before the Church in this sparsely settled frontier district. His vigorous optimism and confident vision is making supporters for one of the hardest, but most stimulating, of the Church's missionary tasks.

Ordination—The Rev. Leslie F. Wallace, curate of St. Thomas' church, Taunton, was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Babcock on the Third Sunday in Lent in St. Thomas' church. This was the first ordination that has ever been held in this church.

Another Chaplain—The Rev. Smith Owen Dexter, rector of Trinity church, Concord, has gone to Camp Devens for five months as a "voluntary chaplain". During his absence the Rev. John W. Suter will take charge of services in the Concord church.

Personals—The Rev. Frederic C. Lauderburn, vicar of St. Stephen's church, Boston, has resigned.

The Rev. Francis L. Beal, D.D., rector of the Church of the Ascension, East Cambridge, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Mark's church, Fall River.

Order of St. Vincent—The recent election for the first General Council of the Order of St. Vincent has resulted as follows:

Priests—for one year: the Rev. Kenneth R. Forbes, St. James' church, Roxbury, Massachusetts; the Rev. Charles E. McCoy, St. Matthew's church, Kenosha, Wisconsin; the Rev. William Harmon van Allen, Church of the Advent, Boston, Massachusetts; the Rev. Harry Howe Bogert, St. Michael's church, Birdsboro, Pennsylvania.

Provinces I and II—Elected members, for three years: Charles H. Westcott, St. Stephen's church, Providence, Rhode Island; for two years: Arthur M. Crane, Christ church, Elizabeth, New Jersey; for one year: George I. LeBaron, Christ church, Binghamton, New York.

Provinces III and IV—for three years: Francis H. Kent, St. Luke's church, Germantown, Pennsylvania; for two years: John J. Bennett, St. Mary's Memorial, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; for one year: Richard Chapman, Trinity church, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania.

Provinces V and VI—for three years: Martin L. Nelson, Cathedral SS. Peter and Paul, Chicago, Illinois; for two years: Arnasa R. Booth, St. Paul's church, Springfield, Illinois; for one year: James M. Black, St. Alban's church, Indiana Harbor, Indiana.

Provinces VII and VIII—for three years: Arthur H. Sargent, St. Mary's church, Kansas City, Missouri; for two years: Richard W. Parkinson, St. John's church, Oakland, California; for one year: August A. Rantala, St. Michael and All Angels' church, Fort Bragg, California.

Secretary-General for three years—Robert T. Walker, Church of the Advent, Boston, Massachusetts.

Week-day Closings—For the first time within the memory of most of the parishioners, the Church of the Advent, Boston, will omit its Sunday evening service until the warmer weather. All the week-day services have been held in the parish house for several weeks. The rector and wardens of Trinity, Boston, announce that the church and parish house will both be closed on week-days from February 3 until further notice, the various organizations meeting and the week-day services being held in Trinity House, 73 St. James Avenue.

The War Commission Offering—The diocese as a whole has risen splendidly to the call of the War Commission for funds. The total asked for by the Bishop and the committee of the Episcopalian Club was $90,000. Fifty thousand dollars of this amount was for the general work of the Commission and $40,000 was for special work within the diocese, of which the equipment and running of the Naval Service Club in Boston was the chief. Trinity, Boston, was asked for $10,000 and gave before February 1, $27,000. Emmanuel church, Boston, likewise largely overpaid its quota. Numbers of the smaller parishes did equally well in proportion. Christ church, Hyde Park, was asked for $700 and gave $1,200. Trinity, Newton Centre, gave $1,600—more than twice its usual missionary apportionment, which was the average sum suggested as the quota for the various parishes.

BALTIMORE

An Ordination—On Thursday, February 21, Mr. Thomas Donaldson was ordained deacon by Bishop Murray at Emmanuel church. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Benjamin B. Lovett and the candidate was presented by the Rev. Dr. Hugh Birckhead, to whom Mr. Donaldson will be assistant.

The Clericus—The February meeting of the Clericus was held in the parish house of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels. The special speaker was the Rt. Rev. Hugh Burleson, missionary bishop of South Dakota. The Bishop gave a most interesting account of his work, telling especially how he overcame difficulties that confronted him because of the War and its demands for clergy. He told of his utilization of the laymen, especially of the workers among the Dakota Indians, and how these workers were divided into three orders of the lay ministry—helpers, catechists, senior catechists. Many points in his admirable address were taken up for discussion, after which luncheon was served by the ladies of St. Michael and All Angels parish. Before the Clericus adjourned the Rev. Philip Cook organized on a sound basis several corps of men to visit the base hospitals at Camp Meade and Fort McHenry. These men will begin their visitations at once, and continue them on regularly assigned days of each week, each corps being under a captain who is responsible for visitations on certain days.

Organ Recitals—The Maryland Chapter of the American Guild of Organists has made plans for a series of free organ recitals to be given weekly during Lent at Old St. Paul's church on the new organ. The first one was given on the first Wednesday evening in Lent by Alfred R. Willard, organist of St. Paul's and dean of the Chapter, who played numbers by Mendelssohn, Widor, Bonnet, Franck, Lemare, Kinder, Gaul and Fletcher. The second recital in the series will be played by Harold Philips, Mus.Bac., F. R. C. O., head of the organ department of the Peabody Conservatory, and the third by J. Norris Hering, F. A. G. O., organist of Christ church. There has been a great wave of popular interest in organ music all over the country, and if the interest and support given these recitals warrant it the Guild plans to bring two of the most prominent organists in the country for the last two recitals of the series.

INDIANAPOLIS

Lay Preachers—St. Peter would not have been able to stand by the fire and warm himself in the churches of the Middle West of late, but now the Spring has opened and all activities resumed in the churches. However, to test the point made in the Atlantic by Dr. Odell, come to Indianapolis and watch the experiment, for laymen are to be the Lenten preachers at the Wednesday night united services of the Indianapolis parishes. Judge Sullivan will speak as a vestryman and Mr. J. R. Marsh as a Sunday school teacher. Mr. W. D. Pratt will give the layman's ideas of Church finance, and Mr. W. W. Hammond will discuss the lay-reader pro and con, and Mr. Louis Howland will speak of the layman as a communicant. Noonday services will be conducted in Christ church by local clergy during the last two weeks of Lent.

Friends Move—The Friends have outgrown their church building in New Castle and St. James' congregation have sold their old frame church and purchased the building from the Friends and will have it ready for dedication soon after Easter.

A Hoover Luncheon—The clergy of Indianapolis and vicinity welcomed Bishop McKim of Japan by a Hoover Luncheon. Bishop McKim will spend a month in the diocese making the Confirmation visitations for Bishop Francis, who is in France.

A. L. Murray.

LEXINGTON

First to Raise Service Flag—Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, the Very Rev. R. K. Massie, dean, has the distinction of being the first church to display a service flag in Lexington, its example being followed by some half dozen others since. During the service Dean Massie read the names of those represented by the thirty-two stars and commended them to the prayers of the congregation. The stars were in the form of a cross, making a very striking and beautiful design. Three more stars are to be added; five or more to follow when the hospital unit goes from this city. One star in the cross was in gilt for the one member who had died in uniform.

St. Philip's, Harrodsburg, Wins Service Flag—At St. Philip's church, Harrodsburg, the Rev. H. P. Manning in charge, Bishop Burton on February 17 received and dedicated a beautiful satin service flag bearing two stars won during the recent Red Cross Campaign in Mercer County. Mr. J. A. Eisenberg, chairman of the Mercer County Red Cross Committee, offered service flags to all congregations in the county, 90 per cent. of whose membership contributed to the cause. St. Philip's was the only one of the eleven receiving flags whose entire membership contributed.

NORTH TEXAS

Notes—An attractive little brick chapel at Canyon, the seat of the West Texas State Normal, is well under way and will be completed before Easter.

The Church of the Heavenly Rest, Abilene, leading parish in the district along lines of social service, is fast completing a parish house, tile, and at the same time enlarging the stone church. Rev. A. D. Ellis, rector, has during his five years' rectorship done a phenomenal work.

St. Andrew's church, Amarillo, is now complete except for the installation of the pipe organ which is under construction. The first service was held Friday, February 1, the funeral of the only son of the rector, the Rev. E. C. Seaman. Bishop Temple and the Rev. A. D. Ellis conducted the service, assisted by the entire choir.

Archdeacon Jesse S. Wicks, with his wife and little daughter, left the district February 4 for Cuba via New York. The Archdeacon will take similar work under Bishop Hulse, beginning March 1. His place in North Texas will be filled by the Rev. Wm. Garner, beginning April 1.

English Church News

The Church's Audacity—This is the title of an article in the Times, one of a series which has been mentioned frequently in these notes. Put concretely, the writer's contention is that the Church is very unlike in spirit to the medieval builders, who reared our cathedrals with the splendid audacity of their faith. Faith did not then crave humbly for a hearing: it shouted. But today "when the Gospel clashes with the accepted standards, the Church is tempted to lower its voice and to hint at compromise. Something of the old audacity is wanting". The writer can understand the reason: the Church is going through the furnace. It is inwardly distressed, while at the same time science is transforming the world, and so the faithful are alarmed and silent. But the Apostles had an equally difficult world to deal with, and they were not ashamed of their message: they commended the Gospel "with the confidence of a passionate faith. . . . The Church must regain that note if it is to be again heard by the world. . . . If any company of human beings believe it whole-heartedly, they have no right to be apologetic". And along with such pride of faith there will go a tenderness and gentleness towards the world. Such is the sermon which our leading newspaper preaches to us. I need not again dwell on the significance of such words appearing in the public press.

There is a disposition to make too much of the "failure of the Church". The Bishop of Norwich (Dr. Pollock) has just been pointing out that the Church has had a large share in keeping up the spirit of the Nation. The sympathy of the clergy in the sorrows of the bereaved has been worth a great deal, and has not been duly appreciated by those who talk of failure. Our confession to God of our personal shortcomings has been misunderstood as a confession of the failure of an institution. So now we must concentrate on the things which Christ loved, unity and humility.

The Future of the C. E. M. S.—When the Archbishop of York reaches your shores, you will be able to judge what he has been to the Church of England Men's Society. He has an almost unique power of influencing the men of the Church. His latest message to the members of the C. E. M. S. is full of hopefulness. The Society has suffered through the departure of young men to the War, and the local branches have been keeping on as best they could with the older men. But there is no discouragement in the Archbishop's message. We at home have to prepare for bigger things. New methods have to be thought out, and it is expected that the Council of the Society will recommend drastic changes. "It may be that the Society will have in a sense to be unmade in order to be remade. Many of us think that the next Conference should appoint a date at which all branches should come to an end, and only be renewed if, knowing the real mind and purpose of our movement, they can say 'We mean that, and we are prepared to stick to it'." It is a courageous suggestion, well worthy of imitation by other societies.

Consecration of Dr. Henson—Unavailing protests continued almost up to the day fixed for Dr. Henson's consecration. A strong body of well-known High Churchmen petitioned the Archbishop to require a more explicit profession of faith in the Virgin-Birth and the Resurrection from Dr. Henson, while Lord Halifax, as representing the English Church Union, forwarded a memorial, together with a letter from himself. To the former petition the Archbishop has not yet replied, and to the latter he has sent to Lord Halifax a somewhat curt reply declining to deal in correspondence with the attitude of the E. C. U. in regard to constitutional questions of Church and State.

On the Feast of the Purification, February 2, Dr. Henson was duly consecrated Bishop of Hereford, with the usual ceremony in Westminster Abbey. There was never any doubt that a sufficient number of bishops would be forthcoming. Two members of the Abbey chapter are bishops: the Dean and Dr. Boyd Carpenter, who were of course present. The number of others was probably increased by the fact that besides Dr. Henson, the Archdeacon of Kingston (Dr. Hough) was also to be raised to the episcopate as suffragan bishop of Woolwich. But of Dr. Henson's future colleagues in the Convocation of Canterbury only five out of twenty-eight took part in the consecration. These were the Bishops of Llandaff, Bristol, Lincoln, Southwark and Peterboro'. But there were others from outside the province. The Bishops of Durham and Newcastle came from the North, making seven diocesan bishops in all, and there were also the two suffragan Bishops of Jarrow and Kingston. The Chaplain-General, Bishop Taylor Smith, came over from the War Office to assist, so that, including the two members of the Abbey staff, there were twelve bishops present at the ceremony. The Bishop of Carlisle would have made a thirteenth, but an urgent call to the North compelled him to leave early. The Dean of St. Paul's preached the sermon.

Death of Notable Leader—One whose name was a household word has just passed away. Canon W. John Knox Little was of Irish Protestant extraction, as his name indicates. But he spent his life from youth upwards in England, and was in his day a tower of strength to the Catholic party. Though he had been through the big fights of the "seventies", he was not in any way persecuted. His Irish geniality carried him through, and he was on the best of terms with his bishop (Fraser of Manchester) while he was working his big parish in that city. His popular gifts as a preacher kept him always in a privileged position: he drew crowds year after year at his Holy Week addresses in St. Paul's cathedral. As a preacher he went everywhere, and he outlived the famous retort of the witty bishop who when a friend criticized the preacher as "vox et praeterea nihil" instantly amended it to "rather say Knox et praeterea Little". Perhaps his inveterate habit of scenic description—he was always bringing in the Alps or the ocean—gave him a wrong reputation as a merely picturesque preacher. In reality, he preached the whole faith with great sincerity. The evening of his day was spent as residentiary canon of Worcester.

A LETTER TO A SOLDIER

By Anne deB. Scotland

Lena slipped away from her mother and he baby, and walked up the aisle, with her mall head held high, and a purpose in her rm little steps.

In the second pew from the front a lady vas seated, and the little girl hastily sat lown beside her with a sigh of relief. It ad been quite an ordeal, going up the aisle lone, and swiftness seemed to be the best nd only method of procedure.

Now that the getting there was over with, Lena cuddled up close to the lady, her eart filled with a sweet desire to give comort.

Her mother had said only the night beore that this lady's only son was in the Army and might even then be going hrough the danger zone, where U-boats vere lying in wait to sink the transports hat are carrying our boys "over there".

Lena knew some of the lines of a hymn hey were singing; it began, "God, the all nerciful", and two verses ended with, Give to us peace in our time, O, Lord!"

The soldier's mother sang it with all her eart. The tune was the Russian National Air, and its grandeur thrilled the child.

When the last verse ended Lena looked p into the face of the soldier's mother, and omething she saw there put a sudden nought into her little mind.

After the service was over she and the ady walked out of church together, and all he way home Lena kept saying to herself, I'll write a letter to him, that's what I'll o, and get Daddy to send it, and I'll wrap p a tin box of tobacco and mail that too."

She sat right down as soon as they eached the house, and by asking her mother ow to spell some of the words, and spelling the rest by sound, slowly and carefully rote what she had to say:

Dear Sammy:

"I herd my mamma talking about doing umpin for the soldyers, so I am righting letter to you, an' I send you a tin box f tobacko, an' sum sigeret papers. Daddy its where your camp is, on 'em for me.

"Good by,

"From Little Lena."

A few weeks later, when the soldier pened Lena's letter, although he felt proud nd happy to think a little girl had picked m out, there was a curious lump in his roat. He showed it and the box of tocco to the boys "over there", and said: Can you beat that?" They shook their eads, because nobody had one that could uch it.

Quite unconscious of being a power beind a power, Lena started the ball rolling. he school she attended heard about her ter and package, and the scholars decided adopt Lena's soldier, and while they re about it, thought they would adopt four ore, and send them all letters and prests for Christmas.

Although Lena did not really comprehd the words, there was one verse that e and the soldier's mother sang together at day, to the Russian National Air, which ade her heart beat fast, and she could el the lady trembling.

"od the All Wise! by the fire of Thy chastening,

Earth shall be freedom and truth be restored,

Through the thick darkness Thy Kingdom is hastening,

Thou wilt give peace in Thy time, O Lord."

Time is hard to measure, and the fire of chastening is burning fiercely. Let every child, woman, and man follow Lena, and do something to help our brave boys put out the blaze of cruelty and horror that our dreadful enemy has started. Remember, it is written, "And a little child shall lead them".

Sheltering Arms Not to Close

Brooklyn, New York.—A report has been circulated that the Sheltering Arms Nursery, situated at 157 Dean Street, Brooklyn, has been closed.

This is not true. The Nursery, which is not a diocesan institution, is carried on by a fine body of Church men and women, and is faithfully continuing a work which it has been doing for over forty years, namely, caring for the poor little waifs picked up in our streets or elsewhere.

The Board of Trustees has been reorganized with: president, Mr. Birdsall; vice-president, Mr. Howard; secretary, Mr. Shepherd; treasurer, Mr. G. Foster Smith.

Physician for Anvik

New York City.—The Rev. John W. Chapman, D.D., writes from Anvik, Alaska, that the Bureau of Education is considering the possibility of assigning a resident physician to Anvik. He feels that this is likely to be done if the Mission can provide a residence for the doctor. Dr. Chapman believes that this should be done as quickly as possible, "in order to consolidate our gains". At present, the nearest physician to Anvik is over 100 miles away, and the nearest approach to a hospital is more than 200 miles away.

Obituary

THE REV. GEORGE STUART BAKER, D.D.

The death of the Rev. George Stuart Baker, D.D., gives the trustees of the Shelter for Respectable Girls in New York City sad occasion and opportunity to express their profound sense of obligation and loss. Dr. Baker had been a trustee of the Shelter for thirty-four years and for thirty years president of the board. He was unwearied in attendance at its meetings through increasing infirmity, steadfast in difficulties, prudent in counsel, vigilant in promoting the interests of the institution. Active in the cause of the Shelter even before its incorporation he was of its first board of trustees and succeeded Dr. William F. Morgan, its first president, in 1888. Rarely has any institution enjoyed such long, faithful, wise and unflagging service as was given to this Shelter, with soldierly fidelity to every duty of his office, by our much regretted president, Dr. Baker.

RICHARD HARTWELL DELANO

At sunrise, February 2, A. D. 1918.
"Let not your heart be troubled."

MINUTE ON DEATH OF THE REV. GEORGE STUART BAKER, D.D., ADOPTED BY THE CLERGY PRESENT AT THE FUNERAL, FEBRUARY 20, 1918.

The son of a clergyman, the Rev. George Stuart Baker, D.D., was from his early years trained to the service of the Church. Four Baker brothers became priests in the Church, and one served his fellowmen as a physician. Dr. Baker was always ready to give himself without stint and without reserve to what he believed was the cause of righteousness and the service of God. Going South as a young man, he threw in his lot with those with whom he lived, and served as a soldier in the Confederate army. It was the same spirit of devotion to the ideal, and service to his fellowmen, which led him, when the war was over, to enter the ministry of the Church. Ordained deacon in 1869 and priest in 1870, after serving in the pastorate in Rochester and in Batavia, New York, for eight years, he became, in 1877, pastor and superintendent of St. Luke's Hospital. Many an elder clergyman remembers with deep affection the kindly personal service and sympathy which he received from Dr. Baker when he was a patient in St. Luke's. To his initiative was due the formation of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Association, now the United Hospital Fund, which has played so large a part in providing for the sick poor in this city and elsewhere. Made emeritus in 1900, the latter years of his life were an example of graceful, beautiful and useful old age. Until the day of his death he was president of the Shelter for Respectable Girls. He also connected himself with St. Michael's Church, as the Church of the parish in which he lived, and rendered there a loving service which endeared him to all who worship there. He continued to the end a soldier of Christ and a sympathetic minister to every suffering soul. So a noble and helpful life found a gracious and beautiful ending.

We desire to testify our love and veneration for our brother, our belief that he has won his reward, and our prayer to the Father of us all that he may enjoy peace and felicity in the heavenly kingdom.

For Country

DR. CABOT, the senior curate at the Church of the Advent, Boston, who is taking a year's leave of absence which he is spending on war service abroad, attached to the staff of a London church and engaged in special work for soldiers, has written recently that in a German air raid a bomb dropped just outside his window, but providentially did not explode. He reports himself as well and happy. He was to be the preacher at Westminster Abbey on the morning of Quinquagesima.

CHRIST CHURCH, Williamsport, Pennsylvania, responded with $1,235 for the War Commission Fund. In various capacities many members of Christ church are extremely active. The Hon. C. C. LaRue Munson, Senior Warden; Mr. Allen P. Perley, Junior Warden; the Rev. Charles Noyes Tyndell, rector, were appointed by the Governor of Pennsylvania as members of the Public Safety Committee of the State at its formation just after the United States entered the war. Mr. Perley was also made a member of the Executive Committee of the Public Service Commission, which consists of twelve picked men of the State; Mr. Munson is Chairman of the Lycoming County branch of the Public Service Commission and the rector is Director of the Civic Relief Department of the Lycoming County branch. In the Williamsport Chapter of the American Red Cross (which comprises a territory covering Lycoming and Sullivan Counties), Mrs. Edgar Munson is Chairman of the Chapter, the rector is Chairman of the Civilian Relief and Home Service Bureau, and the heads of the Surgical Dressing, Pattern and Cutting, Knitted and Woolen, and the Packing Room Departments are all members of Christ church parish. Also, one of the young men of the parish, Mr. John W. Jacobs, has been appointed as a Camp Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and thirty of the boys of the parish in the active service.

WILLIAM R. MOODY, president of the Northfield Schools, is serving as a Young Men's Christian Association secretary at Camp Devens. In doing this he is following in the footsteps of his celebrated father, Dwight L. Moody, who, during the Civil War, took an active part in the work of the Christian Commission.

A WOMAN LIVING in Albany, New York, who has been "shut-in" for years, is supplying the soldiers at Camp Cody with scrap books containing souvenir postals, cartoons, stories and items of general interest. She sends them to Doyle E. Hinton, camp secretary of the Army and Navy Department, of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, who gives them to the men in the hospital. The pictures and stories are a godsend to the poor fellows who have to spend many weary hours on beds of pain. But why should this kind of work be left to a shut-in? Why should not hundreds of healthy women and girls, who have considerable leisure, make these scrap books and send them to the camps?

Valenciennes Laces

Reg. Trade Mark

at McCutcheon's

In addition to a carefully selected stock of all kinds of fine quality Laces, particular attention is directed to an unusually extensive assortment of Valenciennes Laces.

These Valenciennes Laces consist of matched sets of the most desirable weaves and designs, manufactured in England and France.

Also an interesting variety of "Entre Deux" or Seamings and dainty narrow Edgings, always greatly in demand and difficult to procure.

These French and English Machine-made Laces in many instances are reproductions of the Hand-made Belgian Valenciennes mentioned below.

Hand-made Belgian Valenciennes are being displayed in our Lace Department in a wonderful variety, considering the present difficulty in procuring Belgian-made Valenciennes Laces. These are real Belgian Laces and are made of specially prepared thread.

The above Laces are marked in our regular stock much below present values.

Some Forthcoming Churchman Features

Social Infection and the Community—In this paper Bishop Lawrence has opened what seems to us an epoch-making discussion of one of the gravest evils that confront modern life. He brings to bear upon an alarming menace the facts of medical science, and he suggests the solution that lies with the Christian community.

A Symposium—Dr. Peters' articles, which have been appearing in The Churchman, have brought vividly before the mind of the Church the problem of theological education. The editor has secured from Dean Hodges, President Lowell, Dean Fosbroke, Dean Bartlett and Dean DeWitt a brief expression of opinion upon this topic.

Prayers and Prayer Meetings—A brilliant article written in Mr. John Jay Chapman's characteristic style.

CLERGYMEN SMOTHER FIRE

Old Cassocks Used to Save Brooklyn Church From Destruction

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—The Rev. An- ew C. Wilson and two of the clergy who d just assisted him in the celebration of Holy Communion in St. Paul's church rmed themselves into an emergency fire gade with the sexton and his assistant t week and saved the church from what . Wilson believes would have been total truction.

The clergy used old cassocks and their n clothes with which to smother the mes, even tearing at smoldering wood- rk with their bare hands, but though they re rather the worse for wear when it s over, the Church suffered compara- ely little damage.

The police estimate the damage at $200, Mr. Wilson believes it is considerably re. The floor and the walls of a room mediately adjoining the Church audito- n were pretty well burned out.

The rector himself discovered the blaze t as he finished celebrating the mass, odor of smoke leading him into a room ere a pot of beeswax, used for floor pol- ng, had boiled over. He telephoned the department instantly, but then formed own force of fire fighters without wait- for the firemen.

Freckles

There is just one way to remove freckles and make the skin clear and beautiful. It is in this way that Kintho Cream gets rid of the old, freckled skin, gradually and harmlessly, and gives a soft, clear, white, youthful and beautiful skin, which of course should have no freckles.

Just get a box of Kintho Beauty Cream at any drug store and apply it night and morning as directed, and your freckles should begin to disappear in a day or two. It is well to get a cake of Kintho Soap also, as this helps to keep the freckles away, once Kintho has removed them.

We are reluctant to sever our connection with any of our friends for the reason of their failure to pay for the paper, but during the stress of war times we find it necessary to curtail in every possible way our expenses. We are therefore planning to cancel beginning March 20th, all subscriptions not fully paid up and renewed by that time. All subscribers whose payments are in arrears have been notified by mail. This will serve as final notice to them.

A Test of Faith

THE present War so far as America is concerned has been called a War of Intellectuals. It was among the thinking people, university circles and professional men that zeal for the War first manifested itself. Slowly the rank and file of our countrymen awoke to the issues involved. One of our English visitors not long ago remarked that Harvard University declared war against Germany two years before the Government broke with the Central Powers. Generally speaking, in spite of Mr. Odell, the clergy of our several Communions were hot for war long before war was declared. They strained at the leash which held the Nation back; they wore their nerves thin with impotent indignation; they saw with unerring Christian instinct what tremendous issues were involved.

Because it has been in America a war of the intellectuals, it has been from the very beginning a test of faith. When one feels intensely the righteousness of a cause as his very faith in God gets bound up with the fortunes of that cause. We have all of us heard from the lips of thinking people the desperate statement: "If Germany should win this War I should lose my faith in God".

We are passing through a time of bitter discouragement. Germany has contrived to produce in some of the allied communities the very impression which is her largest asset. She has almost succeeded in making people believe that she can work miracles; that in her diabolical cleverness, she is invincible. That, of course, is above everything else what she wants us all to believe. If we really got to believe it, the War would be lost for us. Against that counsel of despair, we have our faith; not faith in economic strength, superior man power and mastery of the seas, but faith in the miracle-working power of the Spirit of liberty which has been from the beginning the manifestation of the Spirit of God among the sons of men.

Does any one reading history believe that the cleverness of Germany's ruling class, however strongly entrenched in science, can dominate a freedom-loving world? Even should Prussia win this War, that conspiracy which we see spreading its web over the map of Europe and Asia cannot control forever the hearts of her men people. Our faith forbids our believing that the heart of any nation, even Prussia, is impervious to the new workings of the spirit of freedom which is the very spirit of Christ. No army has in its control such instruments of victory as those which Isaiah and Socrates, Huss and Savonarola, Hampden, Cromwell and Pym, Kosciuszko and Kossuth, Luther, Mazzini, Washington and Lincoln carried in their hearts. The spirit that spoke in all the revolutions of European history is not dead. It is of the very essentials of Christian faith to believe that that spirit is invincible.

Does any one not obsessed by fears and anxiety believe that the German Junkers can dictate their law to men who "speak the tongue that Shakespeare spoke, the faith and morals hold that Milton held?" Germany has forced her faith in science. She cannot hold dominion over three hundred million human beings who place their faith in Christ. Up to the present hour that faith has been unconquerable. It will yet lead Russia into paths of freedom. It can win even the heart of the conqueror. Not in the braggart sense with which the Kaiser hails God as his ally do we claim the Christ as our leader. One must be upon one's guard. But in humility we can ask Him to cleanse the thoughts of our hearts that we may be worthy in faith and deeds to magnify His Holy Name. Faith in Christ is our munitions of war. Day by day we approach the hour in the Church year that symbolizes the power by which the Spirit of Christ conquers the world. We must trust the power of that Cross.

Such a faith, too, will clarify our minds as to the real cause and basic issues of this terrible War. We do right in one sense in laying the crime of the War at the feet of Germany. Germany is powerful in her ability to work evil, but no single nation or group of men could possess the power to do so gigantic a wrong unless the whole world shared in the blindness and cruelty which worked together towards this culmination of misery. It would help our faith and strengthen our determination; it would make our sacrifice light with hope and gratitude were we to see in the clash of dark forces in this titanic struggle of wills not merely the Allies battling against autocratic Germany, but a freer, happier world that is to be shaking off the shackles of slavery of a world from which we are emerging. The stage is big, the actors many, but it is once again the old, old contest between the slavery of selfishness and the freedom of the spirit of Christ. If that be true, the cross that millions of Christ's helpless, ignorant, yearning brothers are this hour carrying throughout the world is the Cross that always conquers. Its agony is both its glory and its symbol of assured victory.

Regrets on the Archbishop's Visit

WE wish that among the many meetings planned by the War Commission for the Archbishop of York to address our fellow-citizens here in New York there might have been one at Cooper Union or the Labor Temple where His Grace could have stood face to face with the East Side and spoken to its heart. He knows the language of their suffering, and he is not a novice in dealing with their problems, but it is hard for officials of our Church to believe that the weakest aspect of the Episcopal Church in this country is the narrowing of its horizon to a special class. His Grace asked to be taken through our East Side. Perhaps no one had thought to insist upon his seeing where our poor dwell. He saw Fifth Avenue and Riverside Drive. He wanted to know how our poor lived, but he wasn't given the opportunity to speak to them in their own temples. The Pilgrims' Dinner was exclusive in price and invitation. The meeting at Carnegie Hall was popular only in a limited sense. Two-thirds of the space at the noon-day services at Trinity church was occupied by devout Church women, not even the clerks in and around Wall Street were really given an opportunity to hear His Grace. When the lunch hour came the church was pretty nearly filled by Episcopalians who had leisure to sit there and wait.

The other night at the Rand School of Socialism on the East Side, in the discussion after the lecture, some one said: "Would the Archbishop come and talk to us?" "No!", their leader said, "he takes no interest in people like you". The particular group in question was made up of young Jews and Jewesses largely from the East Side. That response did cruel injustice to His Grace. His ministry has for the most part been spent among the poor, but the poor of New York were not permitted to know this. It is to be regretted that the War Commission neglected to see certain spiritual possibilities in the visit to America of the Primate of York.

Killing the Lion

WE hope that the other American cities which His Grace the Archbishop of York will visit during his stay in this country will be kinder to their guest than New York has been. In the prodigality of our wish to be hospitable and to show him honor we have heaped upon our gracious and willing visitor labors that would well-nigh kill an ordinary man. The Archbishop is not an ordinary man but he must have physical limitations. He is eager to speak to America and America is more than eager to hear him. His highest service to us and to England is effected in such marvelous meetings as that held on the evening of March 7 at Carnegie Hall, where he could meet face to face and speak to thousands of our citizens. It was for this purpose that he braved the dangers of an ocean voyage to come to our shores.

He ought to have been spared, as it seems to us, the needless fatigue of dinners and receptions. It was gratifying to his hosts to offer that type of hospitality, but these are stern days and the amenities of ordinary times must be foregone. Perhaps His Grace wished to have it so, but to men of ordinary physical endurance days crowded with public addresses morning, afternoon and evening, added to a continued "reception", would be a pretty cruel tax upon the vitality.

There was a solemn word spoken by the Archbishop in his memorable speech in Carnegie Hall. He said that he felt like a man who had been so long a time trudging through dust and rain and sleet along a narrow road, that he forgot that the sun ever shone; and who suddenly found himself in a great open space, where the sun was shining and the breezes blew.

Between the lines in many a passage of his addresses in New York one might read the impression that the blaze of American lightheartedness was almost blinding for one coming straight from sombre, sorrow-stricken England. Even if private dinners and receptions did not violate the lenten conventions of Churchmen, the mood of the race at this hour ought, as it seems to us, have forbidden the over-indulgence of our hospitable and social instincts. Water substituted for wine at our banquet tables does not make a Lent.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Our Dead

FOR three and a half years Americans have read with a mixture of awe and sympathy the honor rolls printed in many of the English papers. And now, as the sober months of our own share in the War wear on, we begin to look for our lists of those who have died on the field of honor. Honor rolls have been posted in our clubs and churches, colleges and business houses.

THE CHURCHMAN proposes to establish a roll of honor in its columns. Here will be listed week by week the names of the sons, and daughters, of the American Church who have laid down their lives on the battlefields of France and Flanders, who have perished on the high seas, or who have died in hospital or camp in the performance of duty.

In maintaining this honor roll we ask the co-operation of all of our readers. It is only by their keeping us informed of the casualties among the young men who have gone out from their parishes that we can hope for any degree of completeness in this honor roll.

Christian Protest in Tennessee

WE are proud to make mention of the vigorous appeal of Bishop Gailor to his fellow-citizens to rid the state of Tennessee of the "barbarity, indecency and degeneration" of mob rule. He has spoken with power. He makes his appeal "to the men and women of Tennessee who profess to be Christian and believe in the Bible".

The Christian people of any State that now tolerates mob rule can put an end to its infamy if they will. It ill befits us to talk about atrocities in Armenia, Belgium and France while we are impotent to control our own race hatreds.

Lost Prestige

CARDINAL BOURNE laments what he sees to be the determination of the Allies that in any negotiations for peace the voice and views of the Holy See shall not be heard; he declares that "No one has ever forgotten the Holy See but he had to pay the price".

Whatever else the War has revealed which may throw light upon Church Unity it has dispossessed Christendom of any hope it may have cherished that the Papacy is fitted to voice the conscience of the Christian world. The War has stripped to naked realities a good many venerable institutions. Its work of cleansing is not yet finished. In this process of disillusionment the Papacy has suffered infinite loss. There was a supreme crisis in the War when the Pope might have spoken words that could have shaken the world. When Belgium lay at the feet of the despoiler, Christ's vicar upon earth was silent. He was worse than silent during the many months of horror that followed that crime of all the ages. He was playing with all the finesse of the Italian tradition the timid politics of a temporal power. He might at that supreme moment in history have won the love and veneration of the world. He sacrificed his last chance of leadership in the world that is to be.

When Bishop Anderson in his notable lecture on Church Unity suggests that a return of the Protestant world to a fealty to the Pope is among the concessions we might be willing to make for the sake of unity, he must have had in mind a papacy such as has not existed for centuries. Rome has no spiritual contribution to make which is worth a concession to that peculiar type of papal worldliness of which the Protestant world has rid itself once and forever.

The papacy will have no voice in the peace council. It deserves to have none. Laymen have seen the vision and have spoken the healing words during this terrible crisis in Christian history. Christendom will never forget that Christ's vicar on earth failed humanity in its hour of bitter need.

From a Chaplain's Letter

THIS which we quote from a chaplain's letter is the kind of encouragement we need nowadays:

> No such immorality prevails among these men as I hear of constantly at the front. It may be too early to be elated but I'll bank upon these men going through to the end a pretty clean, game, fine lot. With opportunity for drunkenness and immorality everywhere, I know precisely what I say when I say there is hardly anything of either in this regiment.

A Message From Germany

THE New World publishes the following interesting account of a declaration made public by five prominent clergymen of Berlin during the Luther Quadricentenary and reprinted in Swiss journals in December. Little notice of it has been given in the American press:

> In this commemorative month of the reformation, we, the undersigned, pastors of Berlin churches, acting in conjunction with many Protestant men and women, feel ourselves called upon to make the following declaration, which is also intended to be an answer to manifold demonstrations of a similar character which have reached us from neutral countries:
> We German Protestants, conscious of the Christian heritage and Christian aims which we hold in common with them, extend to all fellow believers, to those in enemy countries also, our heartfelt and brotherly greeting.
> We recognize the deepest causes of the present war to lie in the anti-Christian powers which control the lives of the people of the earth, their mutual suspicion, their worship of force and their covetousness, and we behold in a peace by mutual agreement and reconciliation a peace that is worth striving for.
> We find the obstacles to an honest and closer approach of the nations to be mainly the unholy sway of lies and and phrases by which the truth is distorted and silences and false opinions gain currency, and we call on all, in all lands, who desire peace, to resolutely combat this evil.
> We feel it a duty, in view of the present frightful war, in the name of our common Christianity, to strive henceforth with determination that war as a means of settling differences between peoples shall disappear from the earth.
> DR. K. ANER, DR. F. RITTLEMEYER,
> W. MITHACK-STAHN, R. WIELANDT.
> O. PLESS,

THE RIGHT REVEREND DAVID HUMMELL GREER, D.D., LL.D.,

Who on March 20 will celebrate his seventy-fourth birthday. The people of his diocese, citizens of New York and Church people throughout the country extend to him their congratulations and good wishes as he begins the seventy-fifth year of his life. In spite of seasons of illness and infirmity Bishop Greer has never relaxed his hold on the work of his great diocese. He is giving today, as he has given throughout his ministry, every atom of his strength to the work of his Master.

Ancient and Modern Warfare

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

THE present period of turmoil and tragedy reproduces many of the characteristics of similar periods in days gone by. For there have been similar periods, all statements to the contrary notwithstanding. History never quite repeats itself, but the same tendencies and moral situations recur often enough to justify the generalization that it does. The War now raging is said to be the most terrible on record, the most murderous, and the most appalling in the devastation and havoc it has wrought. So it is, if we have regard only to the scale on which it operates; but there have been other wars, and other and lengthy periods of social disintegration and anarchy, even worse in their effects upon individual well-being. The Germans are justly accused of having driven chivalry from the battlefield and abolished the former comparative immunity enjoyed by non-combatants; but it should not be forgotten that the immunity has never been very real, and that there have been times when as a matter of course whole populations were destroyed by the sword of the invader without distinction of age or sex—in fact, we may say that such barbarity was the rule and not the exception until fairly modern times.

Contrary to the general assumption the wars of old were in proportion more destructive than that which is cursing the Nations today. They made a clean sweep; the conqueror slew and pillaged without mercy. After a great battle the victors slaughtered the vanquished as long as they were able; comparatively few escaped from the field or were taken prisoner; considering the size of the armies engaged the number of those who fell was greater than now. When a besieged city was taken the massacre of inhabitants that almost invariably followed was thorough and complete; little children were not spared any more than their parents unless they were deemed worth carrying away into slavery. Thus when Jerusalem was stormed by the soldiers of Titus in A. D. 70 nearly a quarter of a million Jews perished. Attila, whose uncouth hordes of Huns have supplied the modern nickname for our German foes, boasted that no grass grew where his horse had trodden and did his best to act up to the dictum. Nor was it pagans only of whom the same kind of thing could be said. No military masters on earth have ever behaved with greater savagery than some so-called Christians, as witness the exploits of the Duke of Alva in the Netherlands. This worthy was no hypocrite, merely a fanatic; he was the friend of Santa Teresa, full of the most exemplary piety, and died in the odor of sanctity; yet one of his repeated claims to self-congratulation was that during his iron rule in the low countries—over part of the very territory now occupied by the German armies—he had sent no less than 60,000 victims to the scaffold, the rack, or the stake. So terrible was the condition of Western Europe, including our own country, in the dark and awful ninth century that thousands upon thousands of poor defenseless people killed or drowned themselves rather than remain exposed to the horrors of repeated invasion, spoliation and torture. Or let anyone compare the methods of Hindenburg today with those of his predecessor, Wallenstein, in the Thirty Years' War. God preserve us from the like calamity even in our stricken age as that which befel Europe then. It is the peculiar infamy of Prussia that she is deliberately tending to make us revert to it.

But there are some differences between ancient and modern conditions nevertheless, and it is to be hoped that our statesmen and leaders of public opinion are wise enough to see what they are. The proletariat has now become conscious of its strength, which was not formerly the case; it claims a voice in deciding the terms of peace and the moment for their inception; it has definite views as to the international solidarity of the workers and the abolition of class privilege; there is a rapidly growing feeling that the true antagonism of interest is not between the workers of Berlin and those of London, but between both and everything represented by military and capitalist domination. The end of the War may come dramatically after all by a sudden assertion of the international consciousness of those whose thews and sinews provide the means for carrying it on. Kaiserism may tumble down in a night and all its baneful accompaniments with it. There is only one thing to prevent this collapse, and that is the fear and mistrust begotten everywhere of the bona fides of the Nations in their dealings with each other. Mutual suspicion, jealousy, and the cynical breach of plighted word are having their evil effect on human hearts. If we could only trust one another we could have peace tomorrow. May the miracle of good-will come speedily to pass and the daring experiment be made. Never again can it be in this country as after Waterloo, when starving men and women demonstrating in the streets were ridden down by dragoons or hanged and shot for demanding work and bread. Never again will those who have fought their country's battles be refused a share in their country's life or forbidden to express their will in matters of public policy. All that is at an end, whatever else comes.

Moreover, there is an almost universal determination outside of professional military circles that this shall be the last war between civilized peoples. We cannot endure the thought of such a holocaust again, and we have learned how to prevent it. William Morris told us long ago, in his News from Nowhere, the economic weapon is more powerful than sword or gun.

Only one factor of fundamental importance is left uncertain. Can we appeal to something higher than self-interest in the future with any hope of success? Can an international public spirit be created as fine and noble as the patriotism which sent the flower of our British youth to the colors in the first days of the War? Is a true enthusiasm of humanity possible in which all prejudice and antipathy shall be swallowed up and lost forever and ever? Only one thing can do it, and that is a revival everywhere of the spiritual internationale on which Christianity is based and for lack of which the world is perishing. God send it quickly.

Lenten Hymn

By W. C. BENET

LORD, hear our prayer; with contrite hearts we bow
Low at Thy throne;
Our secret sins, with many a broken vow,
To Thee are known.
Wert Thou extreme to mark iniquity
We could not dare to lift our eyes to Thee.

Lord, what is man that Thou should'st mindful be
To heed his prayer?
Or son of man that he should cast on Thee
His earthly care?
Yet, bid by Thee, Thy wand'ring children come,
Poor prodigals, still welcome to Thy home.

Through Jesus Christ, the new and living way,
We would draw near;
Hath He not said, if in His Name we pray
Thou wilt give ear?
Blot out our sins; in that dear Name we plead;
And grant Thy grace to help in time of need.

Guide Thou our feet into the way of peace
Trod by the blest,
'Til in the land where sin and trouble cease
At last we rest.
There may we sing with thankful hearts to Thee
Glad songs of praise through all eternity.

Amen.

How Saint Patrick Kindled the Paschal Fire

By NORREYS JEPHSON O'CONOR

THE legend of his driving the snakes and toads out of Ireland has shown such extraordinary vitality in the popular mind, that Saint Patrick has come to be associated with the humorous side of Irish life. How unfortunate such an association is can only be appreciated by those who have read an authoritative life of the saint, such as that by Professor J. B. Bury, or the translation of the Irish Tripartite Life made by the late Whitley Stokes. Professor Bury has shown that many of the beautiful legends centering about Ireland's patron saint may well have a basis in fact; to a critical examination of sources he has added the power of a vivid imagination, and has written a life accurate and at the same time full of vitality and color. With this book as guide, it is possible to turn with all the more pleasure to the picturesque descriptions of the saint given in an arrangement of the Tripartite Life like that in the Notre Dame Series, published by B. Herder, St. Louis, under the title "Saint Patrick", or to the effective translation of the Tripartite Life itself, printed facing the Irish text in a volume contributed thirty years ago to the Rolls Series. No one can fail to be impressed by this ancient Irish document, nor fail to realize that Saint Patrick is one of the most interesting figures connected with the early Christian Church, a man of force, gentle and loving, only stern upon occasion, a saint who is truly catholic, belonging to all who profess Christianity.

Saint Patrick was born about the year 389 at a place called Bannuenta, which was on the British, not the Irish, side of St. George's Channel. The saint was a Roman citizen, his father being Calpurnius, a decurion and a deacon of the Church. The saint's mother was called Conchessa. The child was probably christened Patricius Magonus Sucatus, the last being a Celtic name, although the Tripartite Life says that the name Patricius was given the saint upon his ordination as bishop, "a name of power as the Romans think, to-wit, one who looseth hostages. He, then, loosed the hostageship and slavery of the Gael to the Devil". The young Briton was brought up a Christian; the Tripartite Life recounts a number of miracles ascribed to his earlier years. Because of its influence upon his career, the most important event in Patrick's youth was a raid by Irishmen upon Bannuenta when the lad was sixteen. This raid was conducted during the reign of Niall of the Nine Hostages, High King of Ireland, and the king himself may have been of the marauding party. The result of the foray was that Patrick, with a number of other men and women, was carried captive to Ireland, "to the ultimate places of the earth", as he himself says in words that express many an Englishman's idea of Erin today. Tradition says that the saint became a servant to one Miliùc, a petty king of Dalaradia. Dalaradia is in Ulster, and the name of the saint is associated with the mountain now called Slemish, near the famous Glenariff Glen, in Antrim. Professor Bury, however, thinks the saint was in captivity in Connaught, in the west of Ireland.

Whatever the place, the solitude, when Patrick tended the flocks of his master, seems to have wrought spiritually in the soul of the youth. Perhaps the beautiful vistas of Irish landscape, green hills and plains, foliage-fringed lakes and dancing streams, caused Patrick to turn his thoughts to the God who had given men all this beauty. At any rate, Patrick was brought closer to God, while the desire to make other men know Him began to grow in the young man's heart, and he imagined in his dreams that he heard voices, much like those heard by Joan of Arc in a later century. These voices finally told him that the time for escape was at hand. He managed to reach the sea, where he was taken on board a trading-ship bound for the Continent.

The simple-minded traders were pagans and the old chronicle gives a detailed account of Patrick's journey with them, during which he engaged in his first missionary labors, and showed such qualities of leadership that they were loath to part with him. Apparently, in Italy he slipped away and returned in the direction of Britain, finding a resting-place with the monastic community of Lérins, an island off the cape of Cannes. In this distinguished household Patrick passed several years and from his sojourn gained an idea of the importance of cloistral life in an ecclesiastical foundation, an idea to which he later gave outward expression when organizing the churches of Ireland under the supremacy of Armagh.

Patrick left Lérins to visit his kinsfolk in Britain, his parents having died during his period of captivity, and it was while in his native land that a realization of his vocation came to him in a dream. A man come from Ireland (some biographers say the saint's guardian angel, Victor) stood beside him. He gave Patrick one of a number of letters held in his hand, and the saint found that this contained "the voice of the Irish". "And as I read the beginning of it, I fancied that I heard the voice of the folk who were near the wood of Fochlad, nigh to the western sea. And this was the cry: 'We pray thee, holy youth, to come and again walk amongst us as before'. I was pierced to the heart and could read no more; and thereupon I awoke." Without hesitation Patrick left Britain to study for orders in the town of Auxerre, in Gaul, the see town of Bishop Amator, which there is some reason for regarding as a resort of Irish Christians. Patrick was here ordained deacon, but he seems to have passed fourteen years before his consecration as bishop. In the meantime, Bishop Germanus had succeeded to the see, and it was a deacon of his, Palladius, who was appointed by Pope Celestine first missionary bishop to the Irish. Palladius, however, did not accomplish much in Ireland, where were already a few Christian communities, and his sudden death gave Patrick the opportunity for which he longed. He, it seems, had already set out from Auxerre for Ireland as an humble missionary, when the news came of the death of Palladius. Bishop Germanus called Patrick back to Auxerre and consecrated him immediately a bishop. The Tripartite Life says that the saint was consecrated in Rome by Pope Celestine, and adds a beautiful and picturesque touch to the account of the ceremony: "And when the orders were areading out, the three choirs mutually responded, namely, the choir of the household of heaven, and the choir of the Romans, and the choir of the children from the wood of Fochlad. This is what all sang: 'All we Irish beseech thee, holy Patrick, to come and walk among us and free us'." The date of the consecration and of the saint's departure for Ireland is 432.

The bishop and his followers arrived in Erin at the mouth of the present river Vartry, in what is today the County Wicklow, in the Province of Leinster, the field of his predecessor, Palladius, but soon set out northward, perhaps with an idea of visiting scattered Christians in Ulster. At the entrance to the modern Strangford Lough, the travelers brought their vessel to land, and went ashore to rest after the cramped quarters of the ship. They were discovered by the swineherd of a chieftain named Dichu, son of Trichem, who, quite naturally, imagined that the strangers belonged to a raiding party which had descended upon the coast, and so reported them to his master. Dichu came to set his dog at the missionaries, but Patrick chanted the words, "Deliver not up to the beasts, O Lord, the souls of them that confess to Thee"; and the great wolf-hound, instead of attacking the saint, wagged his tail and became suddenly gentle. Then Patrick preached to Dichu, who, being a man spiritually inclined, believed and was baptized. After that, Dichu thought fitting to make a present to the saint, whereupon he gave him a barn, the memory of the gift being preserved in the name of the place today, Saul, derived from the Irish saball, barn. And Patrick thanked Dichu in the words of the following poem:

God's blessing on Dichu,
Who gave me the Barn!

May he have afterwards
A heavenly house, bright, pure, great!
God's blessing on Dichu—
On Dichu and all that pertains to him.

Thus Saint Patrick began his work in Ulster, a work which continued to grow. Many became Christians, and some who were converted became bishops ordained by the saint. Of the stories told about the men and women who joined him, none is more beautiful than that of the youth, Benén, who as Benignus succeeded to the primacy of Ireland. Patrick was one day asleep on the ground, and the lad, Benén, a child of great beauty of soul and body, came and laid flowers upon the saint's bosom. Some of Patrick's followers, who were near at hand, reproved the boy, saying: "Do not do that, lest he should waken". Patrick, hearing their stern voices, opened his eyes, and, seeing the smiling child, blessed him, and said to those around him: "He shall inherit my kingdom".

Thus the bishop and his companions worked diligently and successfully among the heathen Irish, who were, as a rule, easily converted, perhaps because of their inborn love for spiritual things and their consciousness of a world outside that which they could see and touch, a consciousness which had resulted in the development among them of the arts of wizardry and enchantment, practised by a fellowship of druids, and in a belief in Fairies, those gods who had not quite become men, representatives of the majestic race of the Tuatha Dé Danaan.

As Easter of the year 433 approached, Saint Patrick determined to make his way again towards the centre of Ireland, where the High-King Leary (Loegaire), son of Niall of the Nine Host ages, whose soldiers had carried off Patrick, held sway at Tara, in the royal province of Meath. Through this Easter legend the vivid Irish imagination has given a fanciful explanation of how the Christian faith made permanent headway in the territory of the High-King. The Christian scribe of the Tripartite Life has unnecessarily blackened the character of Leary, who apparently was tolerant of Christianity in his kingdom, although declining himself to profess it.

In celebration of his first Easter in Ireland, Saint Patrick determined to light the paschal fire on the Hill of Slane, which, with the Hill of Tara, distant about ten miles, overlooks the great central plain of Meath, or Mag Breg, "wherein", the chronicle says, "was the chief abode of the idolatry and wizardry of Ireland, to-wit, in Tara". The same authority declares that the saint and his clerics made the journey from the north by boat, leaving their vessel at the mouth of the Boyne and going thence overland to Slane. This hill was at the time known as the "Graves of Fiacc's Men" (Ferta Fer Fiacc). There Patrick and his companions prepared to pass the night, and there they built and kindled the paschal fire, a great blaze which shone in the sky for many miles around.

Easter Even, it so happened, was likewise the eve of a pagan festival which the High-King was accustomed to celebrate in his palace at Tara by a feast, to which were bidden the under-kings, or clan heads, of the whole country. In this year 433, Leary, being a good king, with respect for the customs of his ancestors, had made ready the feast of Tara. On this night, as had been declared by Irish law and royal proclamation, no fire in Ireland might be kindled before that on the royal hill of Tara. Imagine, therefore, the amazement of the king, his druids, and the remainder of the company, when upon the Hill of Slane, or the Graves of Fiacc's Men, suddenly gleamed a mighty fire, filling the soft spring darkness with brilliant light.

Perhaps the amazement of the druids was not so great as it would have been had they not, for some years, felt uneasy because of the world-wide spread of Christianity, of which they had heard from men who travelled abroad and from the few Irish Christians. Indeed, the druids had foretold the coming to the land of Christian priests in an allegorical poem. In this the expression "adzehead" undoubtedly refers to the tonsured monk:

Adzehead will come over a raging sea,
His mantle head-holed, his staff crook-headed,
His table in the east of his house.
All his household shall answer, "Amen, Amen"!
Adzeheads will come who will build cities,
Who will consecrate churches, pinnacled music-houses,
Many conical caps, a realm round croziers.

The "many conical caps" is a reference to the belfries of the numerous churches that would be founded in Ireland.

Saint Patrick's arrival must, in view of this prophecy, have caused the druids grave concern. When they saw the fire shining on the Hill of Slane they immediately suspected its connection with the Christian bishop and came to the instantaneous conclusion that drastic action was all that could save their ancient religion. In answer to the King's angry exclamation, upon beholding the fire, they declared: "We see the fire, and we know that unless it be quenched on the night on which it was made, it will not be quenched till doomsday. The man, moreover, who kindled it will vanquish the kings and lords of Ireland unless he is forbidden." The chronicle continues: "When the King heard that, he was mightily disturbed. Then said the King, 'This shall not be. But we will go,' saith he, 'and slay the man who kindled the fire'. 'Thou shouldst take heed', say the druids, 'not to go to the place where the fire was made, that thou mayst not do reverence to the man who kindled it; but stay outside, and let him be called out to thee, that he may judge that thou art the King, and that he is the subject, and we will argue in your presence'."

King Leary agreed to this suggestion, and, ordering his chariots yoked, he galloped with the queen and his guests to the Hill of Slane. Arriving there, the horses were unyoked, and the King bade Patrick come to meet him, which the saint did, chanting, "Some trust in chariots, and some in horses, but we in the name of the Lord our mighty God." None of the company save Erc, son of Deg, rose up before Patrick, but they remained seated, "with the rims of their shields against their chins," a hostile attitude. The saint blessed Erc, who later believed and became the bishop of Slane. Patrick and Leary questioned each other, and a druid, Lochru, contending angrily against the saint and blaspheming the Trinity, was, at the prayer of Patrick, raised suddenly from the ground, to fall with his head against a stone and so be killed. The King, enraged by the miracle, called to his followers to slay the saint, but Patrick lifted up his voice to the Lord. The sun, which by that time had risen, was suddenly darkened, the earth trembled, a mighty wind arose, and the arms of Leary's followers shook in their hands. Then the pagans began fighting with one another, and the unyoked chariot-horses, terrified, ran hither and yon. Fifty men were slain, and all but the King, the Queen, and one man of the King's household, fled. Angas, the Queen, besought Patrick not to destroy them, promising that the King should kneel and believe in God. So Leary knelt before the saint and offered him peace, a peace which turned out to be false, because other miracles were necessary before the stubborn pagan could be persuaded to tolerate the Christians in his kingdom.

From that memorable Easter morning, however, the Christian faith has burned in Ireland with inextinguishable brightness, for Patrick, called to the reward of Heaven, left behind him the paschal fire.

A Nation's Plea

By CORNELIA F. WHITNEY

CALVARY'S sad voice is pleading
"Stay the tide of warfare's rage;
Let redeeming love, all cleansing
End earth's strife and woe assuage.
O'er the graves of heroes, martyrs,
Let not marshalled forces reign;
O'er the seas of death-strewn waters
Let not war-gods claim domain."
Has earth's carnage blurred the vision,
Of that wondrous, guiding star,
Ages long the Nations' beacon
Light to peace, and strength to war?
There will come a holy dawning,
When the tortured seas shall hear
O'er their writhing crests, the warning
"Peace be still—thy Lord draws near!"

His Grace Speaks to Women

By A STAFF REPRESENTATIVE

LAST Wednesday afternoon the women of New York were gathered in Synod House under the auspices of the Girls' Friendly and the Church Mission of Help to hear the message His Grace, the Archbishop of York, has brought to the women of America. The meeting inaugurated the joint campaign which these two societies have been conducting to raise the sum they need for the furtherance of their war emergency plans for the protection of the young girls and women of our city.

In many of his addresses His Grace has made special reference to the work and the responsibilities of the women, but this one summarized his message most completely. The gracious presence, the dignity, sweetness, humor and wisdom of the Archbishop won the hearts and the confidence of his audience as they have won the love and loyalty of all who have come under the influence of his glowing personality.

"To me a meeting held particularly in connection with the Girls' Friendly Society has a familiar ring of home", His Grace began. "There is a very peculiar and special sense of the community of our churches in the fact that I am closely connected with the Girls' Friendly Society in England and find myself speaking to many who care for the Girls' Friendly Society in the United States. With regard to the Church Mission of Help, there again I feel that I am on very familiar ground, as I have been concerned in this work all the time of my ministry and for nearly nine years was in charge of all the rescue and protective work in the great city of London.

"You will realize I am speaking from experience, knowing intimately the work of the G. F. S. and the problems, sorrows and hopes that are connected with rescue and preventive work among our women and girls.

"Both these movements are necessarily going through at the present time, like our nations themselves, the ordeal of a very special crisis. There is no question at all that at home—and I suppose it will be equally true of this country—the coming of war intensified many of the problems that existed before in the work among our women and girls.

"With us the War has had its inevitable effect in stirring the enthusiasm of our women and of our girls. I have no words in which I can describe the debt which we owe in our war-worn country to the spirit and pluck and heroism of the mothers, wives, and sisters, who have lost those who are dearer to them than life itself. Their enthusiasm has been deeply stirred. With all this there has been, and there will be among you, a great deal of vague restlessness and excitement. Our younger men have the problem simplified for them, but life is not so simple for their sisters. We must make allowances for the restlessness and excitement which fills younger women and girls of every class. Happily with us many opportunities have been found for their services.

"Those who have had chances of greater education have thrown themselves into the noble work of Red Cross. I suppose there is scarcely a girl of education in our country who is not actively and ceaselessly engaged in our hospitals. The difference between you and us is that your womanhood will be tried more than ours, because mothers, wives and sisters of men who are serving at the front will not be able to attend and comfort and heal your wounded and disabled men.

"In England, at the present moment, hospitals are everywhere. Hardly a large country house anywhere that is not now a hospital. All educated girls of every class are ceaselessly engaged in the network of hospitals extending from one end of the country to the other. Large numbers of our girls have thrown themselves into the service of their country in the production of munitions. In vast work-shops, three to five thousand women and girls are almost ceaselessly engaged, night and day, in the production of munitions of war. I am thinking of one great industry near my home where there are 20,000 women and girls. Trains take them from all the towns and villages about. They are deposited in the middle of a great moor and there with wonderful cheerfulness these girls, many of them belonging to the roughest classes of society, are proud to have their place.

"We have 20,000 girls volunteered for service with the army, in the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps. When I was in France, I took particular pains to ask about the behavior and conduct of the large army of girls planted amid dangers of a new country, and I was convinced that all rumors circulated were false, that these girls were filled with a high sense of honor. Again, there are a large number of girls working on the land in England.

"In all these ways our girls have found vent for their enthusiasm and relief for their restlessness. The G. F. S. at home, together with other organizations, chiefly the Y. M. C. A., have been doing their best to provide clubs for women who are engaged in national service. The great revolution that has brought hundreds of thousands of girls into industrial employment with very high wages is only the fringe of the problem with which you are here concerned. There is no good in concealing the real crisis which we have to encounter. It is itself inevitable—the excitement of what I may call the consciousness of sex. That is and always has been the accompaniment of war. You are right in facing it at once with good sense, sympathy, and courage.

"The presence in our towns and especially around our camps of men in uniform does excite the large masses of our girls of a younger age. I do not imagine you will have the same problem to such a degree, because with all the willingness you may have in the world you can not arm and send out the numbers our country with a smaller population has sent. We have trained in our country and then sent abroad six millions of men. There is no doubt that it has resulted in a great deal of sex excitement.

"You will have it in some measure and I would hope that you will approach it from the right point of view—the view of sympathy. After all, there is a very great deal that is natural and commendable in this spirit. The best fighters of the world have been those who have had the sense of chivalry about them, and been encouraged with what they owe to some girl for whom they cared at home. It would be strange if it were not so. All our girls should feel a very special admiration for the men who are ready to fight for them and for their home country.

"At the same time it is impossible to deny the dangers and it would be equally wrong to ignore them. There is without doubt danger in the presence of vast numbers of young men taken away from their homes, given every chance of acquiring physical strength—something must relieve their strain and monotony. It is only natural that primary passions of sex should be aroused. Equally there is a possibility of danger that large numbers of girls that have never been prepared for such an excitement should have their modesty affected. The difficulty is not so much with the older girls as it is with the young, and it is there that most vigilance is needed. Therefore, it is that while you will approach the problem with every sympathy, it is one that presents very great elements of danger."

His Grace emphasized the fact that we must "wholeheartedly recognize the right of enabling these young soldiers and women to meet as free, as far as possible, from the risks of temptation". To this end he encouraged the establishment of clubs and hostess-houses. He commended the work of protection accomplished by our Government, and added: "We have done a great deal besides that. In London and other large towns we have persuaded the police to enrol and recognize women-patrols who go about the streets at night and by their presence and kindly word spoken just here and there have reminded these lads and girls of honor. It is a very noble and heroic work, because it is most difficult to go out night after night under these circumstances, but it has increasingly been recognized by our police as being an invaluable help. I hope that those who represent these two societies, if opportunity is presented, will be proud to offer some of their members to do this most difficult and necessary work."

The Archbishop then passed to the need of rescue work, and urged the G. F. S. to do its utmost to uphold its standard of honor and modesty.

"I know all about the problems of the third Central Rule," he continued. "I am not going to stir these difficult waters, although I have had to wade pretty deep in them. It is impossible to justify that rule in the G. F. S. if it were ever to mean that whenever a member slips and falls G. F. S. failed to follow that girl up with the utmost possible care and devotion. She is a member for whom G. F. S. before God has a very special and real responsibility.

"May I add that I hope it will increasingly be made manifest that there is something radically wrong with the whole spirit and life of any church, parish, or diocese, if this work is not regarded as integral and essential. The time is long past when the work whether of G. F. S. or C. M. H. should be left with committees of specially interested women. It is too big and great for such a point of view. It is an essential part of the corporate life of every member in the life of Christ.

"The chief way of meeting this special difficulty is one which is deeper and more effective. It is the education of our girls especially at the time when these temptations begin to be strong. I do not know what is done in the United States schools, but no teacher can possible take the place of the girl's own mother. Therefore, I ho there is working with you some means by which t mothers of the nation are at a time like this being r minded of the immense responsibility on them to prepa young girls against new temptations to which they will exposed. The supreme lesson to be taught is that f men and for women there is only one sovereign remed against these difficulties. St. Paul said, 'But put ye the Lord Jesus Christ and make not provision for t flesh to fulfil the lust thereof'.

"Never was a time when our girls had greater chan of meeting a new epoch in their history. After all, r legislation which you can make, no clubs which you ca institute will ever dispense with one fundamental nece sity—girls like men must be sustained with a high sen of honor. If that sense of honor fails, nothing will su ceed. If it succeeds almost nothing else is necessar The only way to make them rise to the height of this occ sion is to link their sense of honor with the memory the victorious Jesus Christ.

"I give and pray God's blessing may rest upon t work of these two great agencies, and also I trust th you may be able, according to the several opportuniti given you, to diffuse throughout the Church and t country the determination that this War be not allowe to bring upon this country the worst scourges of war, b that it will mean the stirring of all that is best in the co sciousness of women and men, that we shall take a di tinct step forward in rescuing the whole tone of socie from the temptations of the flesh."

Revealing the Heart of the Church

By THE REV. C. A. F. RUGE

DAHLONEGA is a small town in the North Georgia mountains. One of the state colleges, a branch of the University of Georgia, is situated there.

Lumpkin county, in which Dahlonega is situated, is one of the poorest counties in the United States, and its inhabitants are amongst the first sufferers from the War within our own country. There are no railroads or industries in the county. Ambition and energy earn but poor rewards at the best—except in the demoralizing business of whiskey-making and lending money or advancing groceries for the next crop. Poor men sometimes still work for as little as seventy-five cents a day on the farm and women and children have no opportunity of earning a cent except at planting and harvesting times.

In addition to their hardships, which they bear at all times with pathetic patience, they now carry the burden of war prices without in the least sharing in the general prosperity. Where sickness, old age, accident or the death of the breadwinner aggravates the case, destitution stares them in the face. There is no poorhouse nor hospital. Starvation food, absence of the most primitive comfort in housing and furniture, and total ignorance of diet or sanitary measures, coupled with the helplessness and sadness of isolation, make a sickroom a chamber of horrors.

Cattle and hogs have gone up in price, so that many poor families are without either. They live on cornbread and chicory coffee and a little lard, but some have not even bread for weeks. Buying new clothes or shoes at the present prices is entirely out of the question.

My duty seemed very clear to me. It was quite evidently both a patriotic and Christian obligation to use every possible opportunity to relieve the suffering around me. My experiences among the Cedartown millhands had been a good preparation, and one that enabled me to understand the characteristics of the Dahlonega people. They are quite illiterate, quite unable to comprehend the mind of the Church. I knew that I must attempt to show them instead the heart of the Church which they wou be able to understand.

I began with a service for the benefit of the loc branch of the Red Cross. Our duty to our soldiers ma this the natural first step. The service was well attende and the response was cordial. We decided that in t mountains we could not do "our bit" better than by pr venting our own poor from suffering too severely.

My appeals to generous and patriotic Church frien have been answered with surprising generosity. The mi sion has been enabled through the year to clothe a "shoe" all the many who were recommended by loc authorities for assistance, to pay for land to be ploughe fertilized and planted for six helpless families, to bu pigs for others, a canning outfit for another, and to s up two blind men in business, for the State of Georg is one of the few civilized countries which make no pr vision for people who lose their eyesight after childhoo The sick were attended by Mrs. Ruge, furnished wi bedclothes and other necessities for a sickroom and wi proper food. Several families received cornmeal weekly allowances in cash for months.

This Christmas seventy poor children, barefoot, rags, hungry or sick, were provided with a change of u derwear and of stockings each, toys and other things ch dren delight in—the first Christmas for many of the Winter is very hard on the poor little ones, half fe clad in thin, torn shoddy, no underwear (unless th mothers sew them in flour sacks), often barefoot, living unsealed huts, i. e., places where the wind blows throu countless chinks in the walls and floor and where it rai and snows in through the leaky roof.

May I use this opportunity to thank publicly all tho who so kindly supported our philanthropic work? Th have done more good than any one can imagine who h not lived amongst these people, the "least brethren Jesus".

Church Usage

By PASTOR IN URBE

V.—At a Marriage

WHENEVER possible a marriage should be solemnized in church. Before any arrangements are fixed upon the rector of the church should be nsulted to make sure that the church is free at the ur desired. A message left with the sexton is quite sufficient, inasmuch as only the rector has the authority say when and how a church may be used, and, even the rector is glad to overlook an impropriety, the sexton not likely to know all the services for which the ctor has already promised the church, and both embarrassment and inconvenience are likely to follow. Before the day and hour are decided upon, therefore, the ctor should invariably be consulted. It is never proper have a wedding in the evening.

When a church is to be decorated for the marriage rvice, the name of the florist should be submitted to the ctor, and definite inquiries should be made what is owable. Florists eager to make a display have sometimes broken carving, and scratched both stone and wood, covering everything possible with their too lavish ornment. Quite apart from the danger to which a autiful church is sometimes put, it is, to say the least, t fitting that every sign of the church's proper use ould be concealed, and all be turned into an African ngle. From another point of view, a wedding is not occasion to make a church look as if it were ready for Easter morning service. The War is improving our te, and more and more those who think most carelly are remembering that the bride and bridegroom ne to the church to have their union hallowed by the redness of the place, and all that is brought into the ctuary is brought as an offering to God, to be used st for the beautifying of the temple and then to be nt to the sick and forlorn in His Name. It is a safe e to have in the church, then, only such plants and wers as can be so given, through the representatives the rector. This will bar out the vulgar display of ificially constructed palms, and the silly profusion flowering plants, all of which are promptly carted away do duty within a few hours somewhere else,—pers in a ball-room. The very best decoration is a few autiful flowers in the vases which belong to the church. ore and more, as we develop, some such simplicity l doubtless be our invariable usage at all weddings.

The organist of the church is the only person who arrange any music for the service. Only he or his resentative may play the organ; and, if choristers are ired, only the choristers of the parish, under his dition, may sing.

When another clergyman assists the rector in the vice, the rector will divide the service as he thinks e. Ordinarily the visitor will read the service to the nt where the bride is given away, and the rector will plete it.

The legal papers required by law should be in the nds of the rector, if possible, a day or two before the rriage. When this is not possible, they should be en him several hours before the service. He must in case, to keep the law, have them before the service.

Rehearsals for weddings ought to be discouraged. a few moments the rector can tell the man and the man what is expected of them; and most bridal procsions would be more seemly if the people who come them would walk simply into the church without any borate attempt to be impressive; that is, if they followed their own gentle instincts, and forgot about themves. As gentle people they cannot do anything that out of place, and there are no rules for these trivial ails. The natural and considerate action is always best.

The bride enters upon her father's right arm, and so ed to the choir steps, where the bridegroom is awaitr her, at the right. Generally the clergyman and the mbers of the bridal procession enter the church at about the same time. As soon as the clergyman enters, the congregation rise and remain standing throughout the service. There should be no music after the clergyman begins the service, except that the organ may be played while the rector, the bride and bridegroom, and their attendants are proceeding from the choir steps to the gate of the sanctuary; and of course a wedding march is proper after the Benediction.

Because the clergyman always gives to the bride and bridegroom all necessary directions as the service advances, they may feel quite free of anxiety. It is well, however, if at the start they will see that they are directly in front of the clergyman. When the rector asks, "Who giveth this woman, . . ." the father of the bride, taking her right hand, places it in the rector's right hand, who in turn places it into the right hand of the bridegroom. The father then goes back to the pew where the other members of his family are standing.

When the clergyman asks for the ring, the bridegroom taking the ring from his attendant, places it upon the clergyman's Prayer Book, who, first placing his hand upon it for a moment, with the silent prayer that it may be the symbol of continuing love, gives it again to the bridegroom, who, putting it upon the bride's finger and there holding it, repeats the declaration as taught by the minister. (The passing of the ring from the bridegroom to the bride, who gives it to the minister, before the minister returns the ring to the bridegroom, is due to a misinterpretation of the rubric; and is a custom originating by accident, with no clear meaning, which is happily giving way to the simpler and more ancient usage.)

The whole congregation should say the Lord's Prayer. To find oneself with bowed head, saying the Prayer with all the others, is to bring many a careless spectator at a gay wedding to his senses. He knows henceforth that he is not part of a social scene, but is sharing in a religious service, where God's blessing is asked by a whole congregation of interested friends. It is intended that the bride and bridegroom, as well as all the others, remain standing during this part of the service; only kneeling just before the Benediction, when of course they, only, kneel, because the blessing is for them alone.

As they lead the returning procession to the west door (simply facing about where they stand, so that, having been at her fiancé's left arm, the bride now turns and takes her husband's right arm), they will try to remember that dignity requires that they look straight ahead. Their happiness will be sufficiently evident to all who see them, and the time for recognition and greeting belongs to a later time. Whatever excuses may be made for the new husband and wife, no excuses can be made for simpering wedding attendants. If they take part in a procession they should at least show the poise of well-bred choristers. This is an unnecessary warning for most people, but for the very few who may need it, I put it down.

It may not be quite superfluous to say here that the members of the congregation will be scrupulous to show their reverence and breeding by refraining from all conversation, from the time they enter the church door. Certainly they will not lose their sense of high courtesy by talking with the ushers as they are conducted to or from their seats. A great church wedding deserves at least the propriety and carefulness which a royal court requires; and in our free democracy we may show on such occasions that we have the innate sensibility which gentle people will always bring to the sacredness and beauty of a place and an event which deserve of us the best.

The marriage register of the parish will be signed before the wedding by the bridegroom in the vestry room, by the bride in the church porch as she enters. After the service at least two persons, who have been present will join the rector in the vestry room to sign the register, the certificate, and the other legal papers required by the State.

Social Infection and the Community

By THE RT. REV. WILLIAM LAWRENCE, D.D.

WE are at war. Every man, woman and child in the country is alert, caring for his health, saving food, money and time, getting ready for battle. Whatever hinders action or weakens strength is cut out. Society is coming to a war basis. Physical health and rugged character are of prime importance. Bad teeth, bad feet, poor blood, measles and other contagious diseases are our enemies. So are weak wills, low ideals and moral cowardice. We are moving against these with power. The discipline of camp and the self-denials of home are making us a stronger and better people.

The tragedy of the situation is this—not that we have foes across the water, but in our midst: foes in our own household whom we do not and will not see and bring out into the open. More subtle and dangerous to our success in this war than German propaganda, pacifist or anarchist, are two diseases which are insidiously working into the vitals of our young men and women, and which by a traditional conspiracy of silence the people refuse to recognize.

You have no reason to believe me in medical matters. But you cannot escape the statements of medical experts of world-wide reputation. Listen while I quote from them.

Dr. Rosenau of the Harvard Medical School writes, "As a danger to public health, as a peril to the family, and as a menace to vitality, health and physical progress of the race, the venereal diseases are justly regarded as the greatest of modern plagues."

Dr. Osler says that syphilis is one of the four greatest killing diseases.

Dr. Morrow says, "No disease has such a murderous influence upon the offspring as syphilis: No disease has such a destructive influence upon the health and procreative function of women as gonorrhea. Inherited syphilis is a powerful factor in the degeneration of the race."

Dr. Biggs states that in 1912 of the population of New York City at least 800,000 people, one-fifth of the population, have or have had some venereal diseases, and that in a large per cent. the disease is still active.

At a medical meeting in Vienna in November, 1916, figures were given to show that of the seven million in the Austrian army, seven to eight hundred thousand were suffering from venereal diseases.

Statements issued under the auspices of the United States Army report of syphilis: "There is as much syphilis as consumption in the average community, but syphilis is more infectious: it is a blood disease and may be transmitted to children before birth, making them physically and mentally defective: it is the cause of nearly half the abortions and miscarriages. It is the cause (experts says the chief cause) of locomotor ataxia, softening of the brain, paralysis, and a great percentage of insanity: it is the cause of a large proportion of diseases of the heart, blood-vessels and other vital organs."

"Gonorrhea is the most prevalent of all diseases except measles: one of the most dangerous and difficult to cure. It blinds thousands of men and women in this country every year and is the cause of 80 per cent. of blindness in new born babies: is the cause of most surgical operations on women and of much of the sterility of women."

I who am only a layman could make you shudder at the tragedies from the disease: men who have thought themselves cured years back compelled for life to care for and look upon their imbecile or hideously deformed child, which silently curses them for the ignorance or sins of their youth. We could conjure up an host of children, men and women imbeciles, deformed, insane, who for no fault of their own have had this curse laid upon them by the sins of others and by the neglect of society to take action.

What interests us today is, however, the question of the War. How can we let these diseases wage their warfare against the strength of soldiers, sailors and citizens, and not count ourselves slackers or traitors? How can we as patriots allow the whole people to be in danger of infection, weakening the whole body politic in physical strength, in morals and character? What waste of time to save food and money, to cheer our sons off while these diseases lie in wait for them. Overwhelmed as our people are with new problems and multiplying campaigns, this problem must be met if we are to win the war: it is a military problem.

This is the time to meet it, for our compulsory service system gives the first real opportunity for exact statistics. This is the time, for even though the Army and Navy may be clean, the whole people, the munition workers, the ship builders, the mill people, every one is in the service: their whole vitality is needed. This is the time, for when peace comes the competition of nations for trade, commerce and leadership will be on, and success will come only to nations whose people are strong in physique, clear in brain and sound in character.

Clear that the day for action has come, we now take up the study of the subject and the program.

First, a word of history, for it is interesting. Until 1493 Europe had never been touched by syphilis: in 1494 and 1495, parts of Europe, Spain, Italy and France were scourged with syphilis. This is strong evidence that the disease was brought back from the West Indies by the crews of Columbus and of succeeding ships. The disease, finding virgin soil in Europe, was rampant for a while: and then in the voyages of commerce and adventure was carried throughout the world. The Cross, the sword and this curse went together.

How are these diseases passed on through the people? Chiefly through sexual intercourse: one person infected ever so slightly infects the other, and no one can tell how lightly or severely.

Syphilis also passes from one to another by contact with those infected, an abrasion of the lips, for instance. Think of this medical report: at a game of boys and girls with kissing as a forfeit, six girls went home infected with syphilis from the lips of one boy. Hence the danger of common drinking and eating utensils. More infectious even is gonorrhea, for that quickly affects eyes: a common towel, touching the with an unclean finger is enough.

Through inheritance. The infection either parent is enough to carry the d down to the innocent child, even to second and third generation.

Other methods of propagation by score you may find in the books and ph cians' experiences.

Some one says that the publication these things may create a panic: every will imagine that he has the disease: m will be made unhappy by the discovery they do have it. Have we not trou enough now?

If a panic must be raised, let it co better panic than defeat or death. In long run, however, panics are due to pression of facts, to secrecy. Thus imagination is aroused and people dread unknown. Publicity is the best preven of panics.

War has always brought a fresh outc ping of venereal diseases: hence they been thought of as especially army navy diseases. There is reason for too. Masses of men trained to fight kill have the brute forces brought to front: away from home and good wo they are free from the conventionalities oversight of society and home. Under monotony of training and the heavy s of battle, the nervous reactions are al overwhelming. In masses of men there a certain number of low-minded and living brutes, and they make themselves in camp.

The tradition too that a certain nu of low women always have followed camp, and always will, is strong: and assumption on the part of officers th certain percentage of men have got to women has some foundation in experi

Thousands on thousands of pat fathers and mothers have therefore wat their boys go into camp, and have follo them in imagination with anxious, anxious forebodings. Even wives let husbands go, trusting them, but with bodings of the possible.

My purpose in this lecture is to stat facts to these fathers and mothers, an point out to them and to all citizens s as I can the path of action along whic facts lead us. My message is one of hope.

For brevity I shall use the word "dis for the group of venereal diseases: and word "army" for all the military and forces of the country.

The Army comes from the people, a physique and character is the embodime the people. The Army after war re to the people. There is therefore such interplay of Army and society that cannot be studied separately. Hence study will at each point take up the A and then society.

How prevalent is the disease in the A First a few facts of a few years ag way of comparison.

In the various leading armies there per thousand soldiers afflicted with the ease:

No wonder these figures brought alarm. ince then, and especially since the opening the European War, the Medical Depart- ent of the Army and Navy Service has tacked the problem with determination, ill and high purpose, so that today the ecretaries of the Army and Navy, the irgeon-General, the staff and officers are inging to the problem the forces of ience, medical skill, discipline and social rvice. With what disappointment, there- re, you will listen to these figures of our my taken in the twelve-week period im- diately following the draft, September 21 December 7, 1917.

Of 1,000 men in our Army there were licted with disease:

gular Army	88.0
tional Guard	115.2
tional Army, composed largely of lrafted men direct from the people	162.4
average of	121.9

May I point out to you incidentally that ile 121.9 was the figure for this disease, total figure for all other communicable eases (excluding measles), for pneu- nia. dysentery, typhoid, meningitis, scar- fever and the rest was only 25.7.

Why is it that with the great activity and l of the Medical Department these figures uld be so large, so alarming? Note the e during which these figures were taken, twelve weeks when the Army was ab- ing great masses of citizens. The Na- al Army, more than either of the others, cross section of the physique and char- r of the men of this country. Of this cal cross section, 162 were diseased out every thousand men.

et me now give you some suggestive fig- of the Army during two weeks.

he first week ending September 28, 1917, e were admitted to sick report for the ase, of every thousand men:

onal Guard	3.7
fted Men of National Army	7.4
ular Army no figures for 1917: but corresponding week in September, 16	1.7

ie second week, twenty weeks later, uary 9, after the men had been under ary discipline:

onal Guard	1.2
onal Army	1.6
lar Army	1.1

these conclusions we are driven:

1 The drafted men, typical of the com- ty, have a far greater percentage of isease than the others.

2 Under military discipline and methods pression and prevention the number of isease than the others.

3 Under the conditions of camps in this ry the boys and men are far safer disease than in their own homes, towns cities.

4 The high purpose and determination of the Medical Service and of our military leaders give strong assurance that in meeting the very difficult conditions in France, a country desolate, in parts demoralized, weary of war, bereft of strong men, full of chivalric and self-sacrificing women ready to show their gratitude to America, the young men of our Army will as a whole be held to loyalty, purity and health. And so far as I can get figures and impressions from personal letters, I believe that even there the American boy is safer from disease than in his home city. The time has now come for society to turn upon itself with alarm. For fathers and mothers, for all citizens to look to the base of supply of venereal diseases, our own streets and homes. "Physician, heal thyself."

I will not harrow your feelings any more with the awful tragedies at our doors. I am only a layman. Read the reports of experts, Osler, Rosenau, Biggs, Morrow, Vedder, Exner and a score of others. Study the records of your poor houses, insane asylums and jails, your orphanages and hospitals: talk with your physician, though professional honor prevents him from telling you all. And note that the disease permeates every class in society, especially the poorest and the richest.

If we at home are to start and carry on a warfare against this disease, we may turn to the Army for our principles and methods so far as we can use them. The first and deepest reason for the success thus far attained is the high purpose and the determination of the men who have the fight in hand. They know better than we do the tremendous conservatism which army life brings with it. What has been, must be, says the conservative soldier. "Men must have women, you can't help it." "You cannot put out of business the oldest profession in history, prostitution." "Disease of course, it has always been. You may do something to check it, but you can't be too sanguine."

But the modern soldier knows that to make an effective army the day of swashbucklers, of drink and loose women has gone by. The facts, military and medical, are against them: and each year sees that class dying off.

The Army regulations of today are in all questions of morals pitched upon a very high note: the soldier's character as well as his physique is a serious matter to his officers. The whole atmosphere of the camp is that a man who falls under the disease has been untrue, disloyal to his comrades—and that brings many to a better mind and life.

What are the definite means of prevention of the disease in the Army?

1. Spot the man that has the disease and keep a keen eye on him. To do this every man entering the service undergoes the Wasserman blood test. Then if he is admitted to service and also infected, he is, so long as he is a danger to others, isolated in the venereal disease hospital, and when freedom from hospital is safe, he is followed up until his cure is as certain as is possible: and even then his record stands for the future. If the man and all men could be held in camp all the time, they could be kept from infection. But on leave they must go outside of the discipline of the camp and into society. There is the danger of infection.

2. Hence the prophylactic treatment. This perhaps does more to cut down the numbers of infected men than any one cause. It is as radical as it is effective. Every man returning from leave who has been in danger of infection must report immediately to his medical officer and receive prophylactic treatment.

If this is given within a certain time after the possible infection, it is a practically sure preventive. Hence any man who has the disease is liable to be court-martialed on the ground that he did not report. Thus reporting is really universal.

Combined with this, are the shame attached to the danger of infection, the disgrace of the venereal ward, the rebuke and advice of his officers and the loss of pay. In the hospital he receives the most skilful treatment, the use of salvarsan and other modern methods: for the Nation is paying the costs, and he must get back into the ranks at the earliest safe date.

Twice a month every man in the ranks is thoroughly inspected, and if there are any symptoms of the disease, he is watched and treated.

3. Next to this medical treatment—some would say superior to it—is the character and force of the commanding officer of the camp: for from him the staff and regimental officers take their cue.

Under the present regulations the statistics of the health department will show with practical certainty the character and force of the commander. Camp conditions differ of course: some are near low-toned towns and cities—some away from all population. Allowing for these, a division general can by a study of the medical reports know whether the camp commander is worthy of his post. And if he is not, the public opinion of the Army as well as the higher officials will, if true to themselves, relieve him of his post.

4. This Nation is now entering upon a great and most interesting experiment, based on a sound philosophy and social experience. The best fighter is the normal man trained in body, mind and character to the highest military efficiency. Men to remain normal require a certain amount of variety of interest, change of thought and exercise, play, books and society. In Christian armies religion has always been recognized. It is being supported at fresh points.

Every citizen is so familiar with the principles and methods of the camp activities that I need say no more. The most radical move is the presence of women in the camp. Instead of the camp followers of old, we now have women, strong, mature, tactful and attractive, in camp, canteen and hostess house. A letter from a landing port in France is before me. "I wish", the writer says, "the people at home could see the boys' faces brighten as they come off ship and see one American woman waiting there to greet them. It gives them just the right start in this strange life."

These facts of the Army give me the message of hope to society. Under military discipline, with high purpose and medical skill, the disease can be prevented, cured and stopped—not in a day or a decade, but the facts show that under certain conditions and character it can be done.

The vital question for us is: Are we ready to support to the full this program to lessen and in time eradicate the disease? Is society going to help or obstruct?

The Army comes from society: the recruits have shown the condition of society. The danger is not in the Army but in the city, not so much in France as in the industrial town and country village. I need not repeat the facts. If we are to support the Army and win this war, there has got to be a tremendous cleaning up of ourselves, our own neighborhoods, our streets and theatres, our hotels and resorts. Yes! Education and warning must enter the homes of the innocent for their protection. First the people must have the facts. The great engine of publicity is the press. But they will not give the facts: they claim that the people will be offended at them.

I challenge the newspapers of this country, those with great circulation, to place upon their front page not two or three startling statements with sensational headlines, the figures that I have given or such a succinct statement of facts as the Medical Department of the Army and Navy are ready to give them, revealing the conditions of society in relation to the Army. It is a war question, as vital as food and fuel. They say that the people do not like such facts: they offend their taste. Let the press try the people.

It is time that the lid be off and men and women meet this problem as they have met diphtheria and tuberculosis. Of course there is a difference. People protest that "this disease touches sexual problems and questions of morals: the finger of scorn will point at the victims. Doctors cannot report their cases to the public. We are not an army". No, we are not, but must we therefore do nothing and continue to poison our Army? We are told that if people begin to talk about such things, it will lead to improprieties.

People are talking: you are talking: I am talking, our boys and girls are talking: the stage is talking. Why not come out into the open, and let the talk be healthy, sane, medical and practical?

What now can society, which has not the discipline of the Army, do to protect itself and the Army?

First, I have said, publish the facts. The first thing is to get them: thus far we have little more than estimates, good guesses on the part of experts as to society's condition.

A few States are pointing out the path, and as Massachusetts is the latest, I select that for our study.

In December, 1917, by action of the Public Health Council, gonorrhea and syphilis were added to the list of diseases declared dangerous to public health. Think of it, our own State, only two months ago!

The next problem is how to spot the infected person, the carrier of the disease, to prevent him from being a source of danger. For the object of the program is not punishment or publicity but the safety of the community through the cure of the infected. If physicians are compelled by law to report the names of infected persons, many of these will keep away from physicians and thus be a menace to society. Hence the State by a certificate system receives from the physician a number which will always identify the patient, the physician holding the name in confidence. The physician or his successor, if the patient changes doctors, is held to account for the patient whose name, however, is given to the Board of Health if he evades the law. The reports are made to the State Board of Health, not to the local board.

Establish "approved clinics" throughout the State, where adequate treatment may be had, free to the poor—a small charge as a rule. The purpose of these clinics is to stop the disease and make the patient harmless to others.

Follow-up work by social workers from the clinics. The building of hospitals for venereal diseases.

Of what use is it to treat a thousand prostitutes or a hundred infected tramps and send them back onto the streets without the cure and upbuilding which a hospital gives? We might as well collect poison, make it into pills, sugar-coat them and throw them to the crowd, as to treat and not cure such people and send them back to the street. So much for the medical side.

As to the social methods. The first aim is to break up the alliance between prostitution and alcohol. Every expert that I have read, every medical officer that I have talked to, every officer of the Army—one of the last was General Leonard Wood—says the greatest obstacle to the suppression of venereal disease is alcohol. Stop the men drinking, and you have won more than half the battle.

The Government has acted to protect our soldiers and sailors. Why should not the same protection be given our munition workers, our shipbuilders, and the whole people? I say no word here about Constitutional Prohibition: whether in great industrial States more or less alcohol may be drunk under that form of prohibition allows of differences of opinion. But of this I am clear, that during the War the same protection should be given all the people as is given our soldiers and sailors: and I am confident that the War motive which supports the enforcement of our Army would support the enforcement for the whole people. Meanwhile, so long as medical officers and experts say what they do of the immediate relations of alcohol and venereal diseases, I believe that it is the patriotic duty of every citizen to do what he expects the man who is giving his life for him to do, abstain from alcoholic drink.

Whatever the law is on the subject, are we as a people ready to act upon that voluntary action? Shall we help or obstruct the Army?

Other social efforts follow. Of the highest importance, the organization for social service and repression of vice by all the communities about the camps, a clean five-mile zone and more if necessary. Repression of street solicitation, police and reformatory action: rehabilitation of the prostitute: improvement in living conditions, athletics and all those influences which go to the building up of healthy bodies and sound characters.

Three definite pieces of work are vital.

1. Probably 50 per cent. of the prostitutes are sub-normal mentally or in will power, some really feeble-minded. The tremendous work of protecting this great mass while still children is an immediate duty. And a large percentage of the diseased boys and men are sub-normal also. Thousands of these of both sexes infect the strong and normal: thousands of sub-normal children are born of these, and the vicious circle, demoralizing the people and costing the Nation millions on millions of dollars, continues its round because we do not want to face the facts.

2. The great source of supply of the thousands of open and clandestine prostitutes is the young girls with easy-going, careless parents who have no thought of leading their children to better things than they can find on the street and in the parks. Silly, and fond of fun and admiration, a man attracts them, and once fallen, sometimes through ignorance, sometimes through a temporary affection, many of them are within a year or two diseased, demoralized, practically outcasts of society.

No police or reformatory or House of Mercy will correct these conditions. The responsibility falls upon the homes, the Church, the schools and public opinion. When will the mothers who proudly send their boys to the War take pride in protecting their boys by keeping their girls happy and pure at home?

Shall the women of this country turn in with all their might to study the girl problem, and in sympathy with the emotions ideals and habits of girls, lead them to a pure and true womanhood?

3. To meet the sex problem and passions a pure and happy home, a sound body, the habit of work, a sense of duty and a religious faith are the best assets.

In these days, however, some sort of education in sex relations, simple, sympathetic and brief, is a necessary safeguard. How that shall be done may be answered in many ways: and because we are in doubt as to the best method, we cannot leave it undone.

All these things have a direct and immediate relation to supporting the Army and winning the War.

My last thought is this, a somewhat personal one. The greatest shock that has come to me in the study of the facts is not in the pervasive infection of the community not the horror of the disease or even the tragedy of the results, but in the amount of immorality, the thousands on thousands who are yielding to illicit passions. If we add to those who are diseased through immoral relations the number of those who have immoral relations either frequently or occasionally and who escape infection we count an appalling percentage. The question is not so much of national disease as of national demoralization. From such habits come of course frequent divorce broken homes, parentless children. A people so living demand a licentious stage and foul literature.

The facts are interesting and enlightening as to our social conditions. Again, it is interesting to note how when the Christian Church has given up saving the heathen by threatening them with the terrors of hell many social reformers and doctors are bringing that motive to bear upon men and women, on boys and girls, to save them from vice. The threat works sometimes: it probably brought some heathen to Christ but as a motive power it is really very weak.

In the sex problem we are dealing with primal passions, next to self-preservation probably the greatest passion. This turbulent stream of passion cannot be held in restraint by fear of a future: it will take its chances. It cannot be checked by any such discipline as civil life offers. Even the harshest military discipline can hardly restrain the passion when in battle the brute has been roused and in victory the brute seeks women.

Strength of will and character are built up by self-mastery, by good habits, and by that spiritual force which has exceeded all others in human history, religious faith. It fails a thousand times, but it still remains

ALL ST. CROWDS EAGERLY LISTEN TO ARCHBISHOP

Trinity Turns Away Thousands Anxious to Hear His Grace

NEW YORK CITY.—The city has been eager hear the message His Grace the Archshop of York brought to it. Never in all e history of Trinity church have such emendous crowds packed the pews, aisles, orches and even the churchyard, as filled it ery day at noon last week. Something e twelve hundred packed inside on Friday, d hundreds of others were turned away, stood on the steps and in the street gerly trying to see the pulpit when the eat doors were flung wide open to give em this opportunity. The emergency olice were called out, but even then it was possible to manage the crowd. Outside roadway and Wall Street were thronged ith those anxious to see the great prelate he passed to and from the church. The xperience of last Spring when Lord Balour and Marshal Joffre visited the city ere repeated.

The message His Grace brought has given ourage and new assurance to all who have ared it, not only those who heard the unesitating call to a war for righteousness at rang from his own lips, but those who ught some echoes of it in the press reorts.

The worshipers at the Trinity noonday rvices can never forget the figure of the rchbishop, radiating strength and holiness, he stood in the flag-draped pulpit with the olors of England and the United States on is right and left. "I feel as though I had een in the presence of one of the Fathers r the Apostles", someone said; another, a een business man from Wall Street, "It as one of the noblest and most beautiful isodes of my life".

Although His Grace spoke four or five mes every day, and to groups of people at ranged from the members of the New ork Presbytery to the seamen gathered in e lobby of the Institute on the water ont, there was a unity and singleness of eme to all that he said that made his fferent utterances blend; those who heard m a number of times thought of his mesge as a wonderful whole.

At Trinity his five addresses dealt with e moral and spiritual issue and demand f the War. From that solemn moment on onday when he called upon the congregaon to dedicate themselves anew to their eat cause, and repeated with them the ords of self-dedication in the Prayer of onsecration in the Communion Office, until e closed on Friday with the words "In Hoc igno Vinces", he held before his listeners e tremendous fact that only under the adership of Jesus Christ can we win this ar for His Kingdom.

"We are endeavoring", he began each day these or similar words, "during these ief moments snatched from busy life, to alize the gravity of this great moment of story and to see the claim it makes on the nscience and spirit of all; to raise it and rselves with it nearer to God." "The issue of the conflict", he continued, "will be vain and ineffective unless there is a new spirit animating us. . . . War can only destroy, only the Power of God can create the new world for which we are waging the War." His Grace brought his hearers face to face with the problem involved in reconstruction when he described the "century of boasted civilization through which we have lived, classes and even sexes divided against each other, the internecine feud of capital and labor, the two pillars of which are the monotonous poverty of the many and the wealth of the few". "To build up a better common life among your people there is need of a new spirit. Here is the spiritual issue. . . . We are brought straight into the presence of the greatest Human Figure, we are brought to the feet of Jesus Christ."

"From Wall Street in war to Jesus Christ", were the opening words of His Grace's Friday address. He set forth the example of supreme patriotism in our Lord, who died for His Father's country, and reminded his congregation of Good Friday, 1917, when, as many of them sat at noon under that very pulpit, their country had dedicated itself to the great sacrifice. "Many men and women set their faces then towards the cross. The vanguard of the chivalry of sacrifice has already gone forward." The comfort of many, he continued, will be in "linking the great silent Sacrifice to their own". "The Nation can now see in the Cross the measure of its true greatness. . . . You are higher now, nearer to God than you were on the road of peace. The Nation is signed with the sign of the Cross, the highest decoration human life can wear." "One other word without which it is not right to close", he concluded, "another sense in which we carry the Cross into the struggle. Never again is a stern necessity but the same motto commits us to see that when the task is finished we make it endure by the spirit of love. Just in proportion as we carry the spirit of love into the struggle, we carry the Cross; in so far we may say In Hoc Signo Vinces. Lift your eyes and behold! Link the sacrifice that awaits you with His. Let the will to power be conquered by the will to love. So shall we attain the ultimate victory!"

Then as His Grace gathered the unspoken prayers of the congregation and laid them at God's feet; as he again offered in self-dedication that great throng to God for God's service, a drum and fife corps passed down Broadway playing Over There.

MULTITUDES ARE STIRRED TO HIGH ENTHUSIASM BY ARCHBISHOP OF YORK

Tells Carnegie Hall Audience that Fine Phrases Will Not Win the War, But that the Soul Will Tell

NEW YORK CITY.—At three great patriotic gatherings in the metropolis during his stay in the city last week, the Archbishop of York stirred the crowds gathered to do him honor to heights of enthusiasm.

On Monday the distinguished visitor went to Camp Upton, where he addressed the officers of the cantonment. This meeting was followed by a reception at the Officers' Club, and on Tuesday morning a review of the troops was held for His Grace.

"I want to emphasize the tremendous urgency of your bringing all that you can to the services of the Allies at the present moment," said the Archbishop in his address. "It is not too much to say that on the incoming of your thoroughly trained and efficient increase of man-power the foundations of civilization for many years depend."

After reviewing the events that have brought about this need, the speaker closed with words that touched very deeply the men who heard him.

"My heart is too full for oratory. I see before my mind, as I speak to you, the graveyards by the Somme, where I stood by the graves of men dearer than life to me. I asked myself whether, in the justice of God, these men had died in vain. As I look into your faces and feel the force of this nation's latent power now being realized I feel that there is hope. When your great nation came in I felt that our dead had not died in vain—for liberty and civilization."

It was a brilliant scene that greeted those who gathered in the Astor ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria on Tuesday night, when the Pilgrims of America gave their banquet in honor of the Archbishop. A thrill passed over the throng of diners when a group of Scotch "kilties", playing bagpipes and drums, marched into the hall before the speakers as they came to take their places.

"We should know each other, stand by each other, and understand each other for the good of the world," said the Archbishop in opening his address. "I feel a satisfaction in being a plain citizen speaking for the plain people of my country. This brilliant scene makes me like this picture of my innocent and ingenuous youth (referring to the photograph reproduced on the menu card); it makes me young again. And the music of the pipes reminds me of my native heather. But the last time I heard them they were piping the soldiers of Canada to their place on Vimy Ridge.

"I cannot forget, though we stifle it, that there is a sigh in the hearts of the English people. If we cannot stir your imaginations, you must forgive us, but we believe that you will keep our hearts strong.

"I was immensely moved last night and this morning by my first sight of your national army. I have seen our soldiers trudging along in the dust and heat, on the way to the trenches; I have seen them returning, tired and broken. And once, your excellency (turning to the French Ambassador) I have seen your troops returning—a sight never to be forgotten.

"Let us not forget," the speaker said in closing, "that each man and woman goes out to meet the test of his generation. Whatever the imperfection of my words, you will have felt that they were speaking from the heart of my people."

Thousands of people who asked for tickets for the citizen's meeting in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening were turned away. The speakers, besides the Archbishop of York, were Governor Whitman, the Hon. Elihu Root and Dr. Manning. Not the least stirring moments of the occasion were those when the vast assemblage of people well known in New York and national life sang "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

But there were two other moments when the audience was even more profoundly moved. The first came when Mr. Root declared, at the close of his address, which evidently made a deep impression upon the Archbishop: "This is not a war for Serbia, for Alsace-Lorraine, for Poland, even for Belgium. It is a war between Odin and Christ. It is a war to see whether the God of mercy may smile upon a world where He is worshipped in Spirit and in Truth." The other came when a reverent silence fell over the meeting as the Archbishop, referring to Washington and Lincoln, and declaring that in every war the American people had felt the personal influence of a great leader, said that all men fighting for freedom today should be heartened by the example of Jesus, the leader of every struggle for liberty.

"I think you will all understand how difficult it is for me to speak to you tonight," said the Archbishop. "I am overcome by the fervor of the welcome you have given, not to me, but to my country across the seas. You have said things to us tonight which we, being men of stumbling words, though of stubborn deeds, find it impossible to say of ourselves. I could wish that some of my brothers who have died in this struggle could have heard your vindication of their death."

Speaking of the days before the war, when there might have been suspicion and misunderstanding of his mission, as days that had passed away, the Archbishop brought a ripple of appreciative laughter to his hearers when he said: "In those days it might have been thought that I came bearing even a suspicious title, and wearing a suspicious dress. It might have been thought that I belonged more to the Middle Ages than to the days of freedom."

He told the story of a little child who, having been awed by descriptions of the Archbishop, exclaimed upon seeing him: "Why, Mother, he's only a man."

"I speak to you only as a man whose manhood, like yours, is going through trying tests. After Mr. Root's eloquent words I can speak as your fellow-countryman of that free commonwealth which is to be established on earth."

He told of three experiences which, he said, were indelibly impressed on his memory. The first was his visit to the Grand Fleet in 1915. "I wonder what those silent men would have thought if they had heard what you have said tonight. I don't think that it occurred to them that they were being heroic. They were there to do their duty. By their presence there they prevented that onrush which, but for that presence, might, in three months, have swept civilization from the earth."

His second memory was of his visit to France and Flanders last summer.

"I have seen the flashing and heard the thunder of those guns of death. I have spoken to thousands on the eve of battle, have seen them returning covered with mud and blood. I have stood by those white crosses, dotting the field of the Somme, marking the graves of those who, when I last saw them, were in the full springtime of young manhood. These dear men would scarcely have understood half the things I have heard here tonight.

"My third memory will be of this visit to the United States. It is quite impossible for you to realize the impression it has made upon me. I feel like a man who has been for a long time trudging along through dust and rain and sleet, along a narrow road, until he had forgot that the sun ever shone, who found himself suddenly in a great open space, where the sun was shining and the breezes blew.

"Our life has been quite transformed from the old days. We all think of the time before 1914 as of a world in which we never lived. All of our young men, you might say, have left us. At home we are quite as familiar with the sight of our wounded as you are with that of your automobiles on Fifth avenue—and I'm not sure that the sight isn't more inspiring."

The audience was touched by the speaker's reference to an old class which had already been wiped out by the war—the school and university men—and which was to be replaced by multitudes of another class. "The school and university men went out first into the war, without thinking. I hardly realized what it meant to live for three years in England and to know that all the young men the future was to depend upon were gone. All that we ask is that, in their name, you will help us carry on their task until it is done, and done forever.

"I want to say a word of something else you can bring us. It's no good thinking that Germany is going to be bewitched by any beautiful phrases spoken either in England or in America. Yet, don't forget that you may very likely, before long, get tired of the perpetual output of men, money and resources, unless you keep clean and strong before your eyes the great ideals your President has so forcibly expressed.

"I therefore beg of you to realize that where things matter most it is the nation that has its ideals most strong that will bring most blessings. In the long run it is the soul that will tell in this great struggle."

WATERBURY, CONNECTICUT.—A little allegory by Kate Woodward Noble has been printed in attractive form and is sold for the benefit of the War Commission at 15 cents per copy by Davis & Nye, Bank Street. It is called Sancta Ecclesia, A Vision.

School Endows Hospital Bed

YONKERS, NEW YORK.—The church school of St. John's parish, Yonkers, New York, the Rev. J. M. Ericsson, rector, has just completed a fund for the endowment of a child's bed in St. John's Hospital amounting to $3,000.

BEQUEST OF $25,000 FOR BOARD OF MISSIONS

Oldest Parishioner of Trinity Church, Boston, Makes Generous Will

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—The announcement is made of a bequest of $25,000 to the Board of Missions by Charlotte M. Fiske of this city. Mrs. Fiske, the widow of Joseph N. Fiske, a Boston banker, died on February 17 at the age of ninety-six. She was the oldest parishioner of Trinity church. "Never was there a gentler or sweeter old age, and never were the burdens incident to such years more cheerfully borne," wrote Dr. Mann of her. "A devoted member of Trinity church since 1873, Mrs. Fiske took the greatest interest in its work. Every good cause received her generous help, but the missionary work of the Church was especially dear to her. On the last Christmas eve of her life the choir boys went to her house and sang the Christmas carols and she insisted upon their coming in to speak to her. So she lived her quiet, beneficent, sunny life to the very end, keenly interested in all that was going on about her, and facing the future with a serene trust."

Mrs. Fiske left many bequests to philanthropic and educational societies, but the largest was the one to the Board of Missions. She left $5,000 each to the Episcopal City Mission of this city and to the Massachusetts Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The Rev. George S. Fiske, of St. John's church, East Boston, is her nephew.

NAVAL FUNERAL HELD AT THE BOSTON CATHEDRAL

For the Ex-Secretary of the Navy George von L. Meyer

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—A naval funeral with active pallbearers from the bluejackets of the Boston Naval Station at Charlestown was held for George von L. Meyer Tuesday afternoon at 1 o'clock at St. Paul's cathedral. Bishop Lawrence officiated. Secretary of the Navy Daniels issued orders to Commandant Rush to see that a full detail of bluejackets was on hand to pay respects to the former Secretary of the Navy.

Colonel Roosevelt wired his sympathy to the widow and children and said that his physicians would not allow him to make the trip to Boston. It was hoped that the Colonel's condition would be so that he might be present and act as an honorary pallbearer. Those selected were Senator Lodge, Admiral Leigh Palmer, President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard, Francis L. Higginson, Philip Dexter, I. Tucker Burr, Ensign G. C. Cutter, Jefferson Newbold and J. A. Tuckerman.

GIFTS AND MEMORIALS

The fourth lancet window in a series of eight has just been erected in Trinity church, Upper Marlborough, Maryland, by R. Geissler, Inc., in memory of the rector's eleven-year-old son, who was killed at the rectory gate by a careless driver of an automobile last August. The series of lancet windows are memorials and each depicts some one act in the life of our Blessed Lord. The same firm has built a beautiful reredos and litany desk, and will in the near future complete the interior decoration of chancel and nave with memorials.

ARMY MEN IMPRESSED BY "COMMUNION DEMOCRACY"

Officers and Privates Kneel Side by Side to Receive

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Communion service, as conducted by Protestant Episcopal chaplains, is having a novel effect upon Army men. It emphasizes the "democracy" of the Church of Jesus Christ in the midst of a military caste, and, as a result, many of the rank and file are being drawn toward the Church.

In one of the Southern cantonments a major, a captain and several lieutenants went to the first rail with a group of privates. Every private in the congregation was impressed by that proceeding. It was contrary to all ordinary military ethics. Officers never mix with privates, and to see them kneeling there in the chapel, shoulder to shoulder with the men, gave all a vivid realization of the leveling process of Christian brotherhood.

As one of the enlisted men remarked, it "got him".

An old Army officer confessed that it was the first time he had received Communion. A Methodist, who knelt at the rail, confided to his comrades that he had never expected to participate in an Episcopal Communion service.

Y. M. C. A. secretaries and chaplains are asking for the service in their various units. Camp secretaries of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew report that attendance at Communion services is increasing. The groups formed by the camp secretaries encourage their comrades to attend the celebrations.

Apart from the consolation and spiritual uplift of partaking of the Holy Sacrament, the "democracy" of the rite is making a strong appeal.

Questionnaire on Rural Social Service

NEW YORK CITY.—A sub-committee of the Joint Commission on Social Service, appointed for the purpose, has decided to address to the rural clergy throughout the country a questionnaire designed to elicit information concerning any constructive rural social service being carried on in their communities with their co-operation, and has also drawn up other tentative plans concerning which announcement may be made later.

This action was in response to a resolution of the last General Convention and to its own growing conviction that in this time of national crisis the rural problem is of greater urgency than ever and that the Church in the country districts must realize its relation to the solution of that problem.

Episcopalian Club at Syracuse University

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK.—At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Episcopalian Club of Syracuse University on March 4, Professor Lewis W. Crawford was elected to the presidency. Miss Barbara Watson, of the class of 1919, was elected secretary.

A Lenten letter was issued to the members of the club, announcing services in the neighboring churches and also Confirmation classes.

There will be a corporate Communion of the members at St. Paul's church on Palm Sunday, and a reception in St. Paul's parish house on Tuesday, April 9.

The club has ushers and hospitality committees in some of the city churches where pews are set aside for the students, and also assists in having clergymen of the Church speak in college chapel and students' religious organizations.

A SPECIAL EDITION

"Connecticut Churchman" Devotes Issue to Memory of Great Bishop

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.—The last number of The Connecticut Churchman is a Bishop Williams number, devoted entirely to the memory of that great saint of the American Church whose centenary was celebrated last August. In this issue the beautiful suggestion is made that all who honor his memory should as a memorial to him perform a very simple act. This memorial is "a re-reading of the service of Confirmation, as found in the Book of Common Prayer; a renewal of the vows then taken; a determination to keep them better in future; and to make their Communions more regular, more prayerful and more spiritually helpful. Nothing would rejoice Bishop Williams more than to see a deepening of spiritual life among those upon whom he laid his hands in the rite of Confirmation, and those who love and revere his memory may thus honor it in the highest possible way".

NEW CANAAN RECTOR DIES AFTER 28 YEARS' SERVICE

Dr. Neidé Stricken in Study While Talking to Parishioner

NEW CANAAN, CONNECTICUT.—The Rev. Robert Howland Neidé, D.D., rector of St. Mark's church, New Canaan, Connecticut, died of hemorrhage of the brain after a two-day's illness on Wednesday morning, March 6. He was stricken in his study in the rectory while talking with a parishioner and never again regained consciousness.

Dr. Neidé's first charge was Cazenovia, New York, where he remained two years. He was then called to New Canaan, Connecticut, his rectorate there extending over twenty-eight years. The diocese of Connecticut has lost in the death of Dr. Neidé one of its most earnest workers, a priest consecrated to the duties of his holy office, who leaves a parish made strong by his labors. He was endeared to those around him, especially to the young men of his congregation, by a certain bouyancy or spirit of youth which he retained throughout his life. His counsel and guidance freely given to many were characterized by a wholesome cheeriness as well as wisdom and good judgment. His parish work was constantly aided and shared by his wife, Elizabeth Thompson Neidé, whom he married thirty-three years ago, and who survives him. He was cared for in his last short illness where he was stricken, among the books he loved so well and which had so long been his daily companions. After his death his body lay surrounded by flowers brought to the rectory largely by little children of his parish who wished to show in this way their love and sorrow for the loss of their beloved friend and rector. Bishop Brewster of Connecticut officiated at the burial service held at St. Mark's church on the afternoon of Saturday, March 9. Many of the clergy of the diocese were present.

Bishops to Meet in New York

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Notice of the change of place for the special meeting of the House of Bishops has been sent out as follows:

"February 28, 1918.

"Notice is hereby given that the already announced special session of the House of Bishops will, in accordance with the invitation of the Bishop of New York, convene in the city of New York in the hall of new Synod House, Cathedral of St. John the Divine, Amsterdam avenue and 110th street, at the time designated in the former notice of January 4, viz., Wednesday morning, April 10, 1918, at 10 o'clock, instead of in the Church Missions House, as it is found that the accommodations at the latter place are not adequate for so large a meeting.

"SAY OUR COLORED PEOPLE STAND BY SIDE OF FRANCE"

Cincinnati Rector Sends Greetings to French Government

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—The Rev. Edward H. Oxley, pastor in charge of St. Andrew's church (colored) of this city, has sent to the Hon. M. Stephen Pichon, France, the following letter, as the result of an unusual meeting held at his church recently:

CINCINNATI, OHIO,
February 28, 1918.

Hon. M. Stephen Pichon,
Ministre des Affaires étrangères,
Paris, France.

Dear Sir: Through the courtesy of Mlle. Morhard of L'Alliance Française and Dr. Charles W. Dabney, president del'Université de Cincinnati, between six and seven hundred of the representative colored people of our city on Sunday afternoon, February 17, at St. Andrew's Episcopal church, had the unusual privilege of listening to a most wonderful and inspiring address, "The Effort of the Colored Troops in France during the Great War"—by M. Marcel Knecht, Officer of the French Army and member of Joffre-Viviani Commission to the United States and the "Effort of France and Her Allies, etc." When the distinguished speaker portrayed the justice of France to her colonies in Africa, the part played by her black troops in the battle of the Marne, their terribleness in conflict and generosity to a fallen foe, the warmth and affection of the heart of France for her valiant soldiers—the white and the black alike—the vision in the streets of Paris of other dark-skinned warriors, khaki-clad, from across the Atlantic, the large audience rose to the heights of greatest enthusiasm. The colored people of our country, and in fact all over the world, know that this War is for the vindication of the common rights of mankind and are entering it with sacrifice and supreme confidence in the final triumph of the right. M. Marcel Knecht has awakened the deepest sympathy for your colored troops and has paid France her finest tribute—justice and fairness in the days of power, reaping sacrifice and voluntary service in the days of stress and storm. Say to the people of France, the colored people of Cincinnati and America stand by her side and the side of her Allies who put humanity before Empire and right above might, and in this awful struggle we are doing our part in the words of our President, "to make the world safe for democracy". Please convey also to Sénateur Bérenger my cordial greetings for his great support of our race.

Vive La France! Vive La France!

Sincerely yours,
EDMUND HARRISON OXLEY.
Curc, St. Andrew's Episcopal Church.

Clergyman is Honorary Citizen

WAPPINGERS FALLS, NEW YORK.—A certificate of citizenship presented to the Rev. Gerald A. Cunningham, rector of Zion church, at the farewell reception held in the Grinnell Library recently was the first ever issued to a resident of this village and it is doubtful if a similar recognition has ever been made in Dutchess County. Mr. Cunningham is leaving for France for war work. The certificate read:

"This certificate is respectfully conferred upon the Rev. Gerald Arthur Cunningham, rector of Zion Protestant Episcopal church, as a token of the great regard entertained for his fine character and deeds and for his great interest and co-operation in all civic matters and is hereby proclaimed an 'honorary citizen' of the village of Wappingers Falls in the County of Dutchess, State of New York, United States of America. In testimony whereof the president and trustees of said village have hereunto set their hands and caused the seal of said village to be impressed thereon the 8th day of February, one thousand nine hundred and eighteen."

GOLD STAR IS PLACED ON A CHURCH SERVICE FLAG

Congregation Honors Memory of Young Aviator Killed in Action

PITTSBURGH, PENNSLYVANIA.—A unique service has been held at the Church of the Ascension. It was on the occasion of the placing of a gold star on the service flag of the Church, in memory of Philip Benney, a member of the congregation, who joined the Lafayette Escadrille in 1916, and was killed in action in France about two months ago.

Mr. Benney was the first of the seventy young men from this parish who have gone into the service of their country to give up his life in its behalf. Patriotic hymns were sung, and a troop of twenty-six Boy Scouts belonging to the Church carried the flag up the aisle to the chancel, where it was slowly unrolled, and the gold star appeared in the midst. The prayer of dedication was read by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown, and Col. S. H. Church, a friend of the lamented young man, made a short address of dedication.

Later the Rev. Dr. Brown delivered a sermon on "Immortality", and during the service he also read from one of the last letters of Mr. Benney to his mother, telling of one of his last flights. While on one of his flights his machine was attacked by several German planes. He managed to return within the lines, but was badly wounded, and died in a few hours. Delegations were present from the Veterans of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War, from the soldiers studying at the Carnegie Technical School, and of boys from the Shadyside Academy, of which Mr. Benney was a graduate. The Church was filled to its utmost capacity by a sympathetic and appreciative congregation.

TAKES A STAND AGAINST DOUBLE MORAL STANDARD

Social Service Committee Will Urge Law for Health Certificates

RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA.—The sixth annual meeting of the North Carolina Conference for Social Service met here March 5 and 6. The address of the Governor of the State, a Churchman, and that of Mrs. Clarence Johnson, a Churchwoman of Raleigh, were among the best of the Conference.

They both dealt with the same subject, the Governor condemning the double moral standard—that is, one for women and another for men—while Mrs. Johnson boldly advocated that the State Legislature pass a law requiring all persons applying for marriage to present a health certificate. Mrs. Johnson said the State and the Church should thus protect and safeguard the race. She reminded her hearers that Dean Sumner (now Bishop Sumner) was the first clergyman who took this stand, and that he was criticised and abused for it.

Before the Conference adjourned a committee was appointed, with Mrs. Johnson as chairman, to act with the State Board of Health and State Board of Public Welfare in urging the next Legislature to pass a new eugenic marriage law for North Carolina.

UNION SERVICES HELD DURING MONTH OF MARCH

Fargo Cathedral Unites With Four Other Denominations

FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA.—In response to the call of the General Wart-time Commission of the various churches in America, the churches of Fargo are observing the month of March as a period of prayer and intercession. Each Friday evening the various communions unite in a union service.

The first of these was held in Gethsemane cathedral on March 1 when a large congregation was present from all over the city and a number of ministers from the different churches took part in the prayers, scripture reading and addresses. The full vested choir marched in, with the cross and the flag, singing Onward Christian Soldiers, which was immediately followed by The Star Spangled Banner, the Dean then led the Apostles' Creed, the Presbyterian minister offered prayer, the Lutheran minister read the lesson, addresses were made by a layman and the Methodist minister, various patriotic and helpful hymns were sung, an offering was taken for Armenian and Syrian Relief, after which all knelt and sang as a prayer hymn those beautiful words of Bishop Bickersteth "Peace, perfect peace, in this dark work of sin".

It was a truly helpful and inspiring service without jar or friction, indicating that there are times and occasions when the Christian people of a community can helpfully get together for a great cause. Similar services will be held each Friday evening for the entire community in the Lutheran, Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian churches.

Bishop Lloyd Well

NEW YORK CITY.—A cable from Monrovia received at the Church Missions House on Tuesday, March 5, indicated that both Bishop Lloyd and Archdeacon Schofield were well.

FEDERAL COUNCIL SENDS CALL TO THE CHURCHES

Urges the Observance of Holy Week by All Christians

NEW YORK CITY.—A call entitled "Righteousness and Truth" has been sent to all clergymen by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, urging a careful observance of Holy Week, as follows:

To the Churches:

In a day when the world is tossed as a boat in the sea, it becomes us to seek God, who measures the waters in the hollow of His hand. Called to serve our own generation, our highest service should begin in lowliest bowing before Almighty God our Father.

Since no Easter like that we now approach ever dawned upon the world before, it is manifestly wise that in a new purpose we give the week preceding to a fellowship of Prayer and Intercession. Seeking Him whose unabated love keeps us from being consumed, let us prepare our hearts as guest chambers made ready for the Lord. In united prayer we shall know each other better, in drawing near to Christ we shall draw nearer to each other the whole world round, in praying for one another the hurt of our own heart may be healed.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA, FRANK MASON NORTH,
President.
CHARLES S. MACFARLAND,
General Secretary.

Following the letter is a suggested program of topics for the week.

FRENCH CHURCHES PROTEST

Protestants, Roman Catholics and Jews Keep "Alsace-Lorraine Day"

PARIS.—Sunday, March 3, was observed in France as "Alsace-Lorraine Day". In every place of worship—Protestant, Roman Catholic or Jewish—the Solemn Protest of the Deputies of Alsace and Lorraine, presented to the National Assembly in Bordeaux on March 1, 1871, by Jules Grosjean, Deputy of the Haut-Rhin Department, was read and commented upon.

This historic document runs thus:

"Before any peace negotiations have been entered upon, the representatives of Alsace and Lorraine have laid upon the table of the National Assembly a declaration setting forth, in the most explicit terms, on behalf of those provinces, their will and their right to remain French.

"Forced, in spite of all justice, to yield to alien domination, we have a last duty to fulfill.

"We declare, once again, to be null and void a compact which gives us away without our consent.

"The vindication of our rights remains open forever, to each and all of us, in the form and to the utmost limits prescribed by our conscience.

"As we are about to leave this house, in which our dignity forbids us to tarry longer, and notwithstanding the bitterness of our sorrow, the last thought that wells up from the depths of our hearts is one of gratitude towards those who for six months have not ceased to defend us, and of undying attachment to the country from which we are being wrested by violence.

"Our best wishes will follow you, and we will wait, with perfect trust in the future, for the time when a regenerate France takes up once more the threads of her mighty destiny.

"Your brothers of Alsace and Lorraine, now separated from our common family, will preserve for France, while she is absent from their homes, their filial affection, until the day comes when she shall return to fill her accustomed place by our firesides."

The French people remain unanimous in asserting the injustice of the German annexations of forty-seven years ago, and the necessity for the rescinding of that measure and the restitution of all the departments now under German rule to their mother-country.

Finds "Gate of Heaven" Is Effectively Barred

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Reading an editorial on "Barred Doors" reminds me of an experience in the Middle West. Having to spend a number of hours in this town between trains I found a large parish church.

Over the door were carved these words: "This is none other than the gate of Heaven."

I found all doors locked, however, and on one a card bearing the information: "The key will be found at the rectory next door."

Circumstances may compel the locking of the door sometimes, but not always. Where should one find a better place to spend time in prayer and meditation, the noise and confusion of the busy world hushed?

AVIATOR'S FUNERAL HELD

Ensign Walker Weed Gave His Life for His Friend

MONTCLAIR, NEW JERSEY.—On March 2, at St. Luke's church, Montclair, the funeral of Ensign Walker Weed was held, both of the bishops taking part in the service with the Rev. Luke White, rector. The young soldier was married on February 2 in the same church and went at once to the aviation camp at Cape May. He and his associate, Bennett of Newberryport, in flying, met with an accident and the machine in falling caught fire. Weed rushed into the ocean and put out the fire which threatened his life, supposing his companion would do the same. Turning back, he saw Bennett under the wreckage of the machine and rushed to his help, rescuing him while losing his own life by breathing in the flames. Bennett, however, lived but a few days.

Ensign Weed at the age of twenty-four was the first of the one hundred soldiers from St. Luke's to lose his life. The Church, crowded with people, testified to the sorrow and sympathy of the whole community. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend."

WILLIAM R. STIRLING DIES SUDDENLY IN CHICAGO

A Leader in the Brotherhood and Board of Missions

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The sudden death on March 3 of Mr. William R. Stirling of Chicago deprives the Church in the Middle West of one of her staunchest and most useful laymen.

Of distinguished Scotch ancestry, Mr. Stirling came to this country in his youth and soon found a leading place among the vigorous young business men who did so much in the reconstruction of Chicago after the fire of 1871. For a number of years he was the vice-president of the Illinois Steel Company. For twenty years or more he had been a member of the firm of Peabody, Houghteling & Company.

More than thirty years ago he joined with his friend, the late James L. Houghteling, in shaping the national organization of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. For a time he was its president, resigning after a year or two to take the post of secretary under Mr. Houghteling's lead as president.

Twenty years or more ago Mr. Stirling was elected a member of the Chicago diocesan board of missions. He soon found that most of the other members of the board, to say nothing of the people of the diocese, were quite as uninformed about diocesan needs and opportunities as himself. It was characteristic of him, therefore, to give up, as he did, most of the Saturday half-holidays and Sundays of the following Summer in visiting the mission stations of the diocese. Then, with his facts at his fingers' ends and with charts illustrating what he had learned, he went before the well-to-do congregations on the Sundays of the following Winter, and told in his straightforward, incisive way what he had learned. The result was the doubling within a year of the diocesan mission fund.

In 1910 he was elected a member of the Board of Missions to represent what is now the province of the Middle West. He brought to this work the same constructive energy that he displayed in business and in local enterprises. His accurate business training and his Scotch thoroughness made him one of the most valuable members the Board has ever had. His deep sense of responsibility as a trustee for the Church's mission made him keen to know all the facts about proposed expenditures, and to be informed of the use made and the results secured through grants once made.

He took an important part in the national campaigns of the Laymen's Missionary Movement as a representative of the Church. His direct, practical, vigorous speaking appealed strongly to business men. He gave many Sundays every year to what to him was always the congenial task of enlisting the co-operation of congregations in the Church's world-wide work.

His association with the national affairs of the Church did not interfere with, but rather increased his usefulness in his home parishes. Owing chiefly to Mr. Stirling's vigorous lay co-operation with his rector, the general missionary offerings of the Lake Forest parish have been increased more than eightfold in the last eight years.

The burial service was held at St. Peter's church, Chicago, on the afternoon of March 5.

FATHER GIVES TOY GARDEN TO MISSION TEACHERS

Wants Daughter to Go Where Friend Received New Life

WUSIH, CHINA.—It is bitterly cold weather in Wusih now; so cold that when our next-door American neighbors came in to drink a cup of tea this afternoon they shut the front door very quickly and Mrs. Dyer said: "I tried to see what that new thing is on your front porch, but Mr. Dyer pushed me in, and said, 'You can look at that next Summer'."

The new thing on our front porch is a Chinese gift from a man who wants Mr. Mosher to help him get his daughter in our mission school for girls in Soochow. The gift is hard to describe, but the reason the man wants his daughter to be educated in Epiphany school is easy to understand. The gift is really a toy mountain of clay formed into ridges and hills with houses and pagodas on them, and begonia plants growing on it; and the whole rests in a large earthen bowl with water in it, at present the water being solid ice.

The man who gave it considers it an ornament to any home, like a cottage organ or wax flowers. He was accompanied by an old Christian friend of ours, a very zealous Churchman, Mr. Dzung, a silversmith. He has told the man who brought the strange gift what was done for his daughter by Christian missions. She was much older than his other children and was married before her father became a Christian. When I first knew her she was married to a man named Lieu, had a little son, and was ruled by a fierce mother-in-law. Poor Mrs. Lieu had a tumor, but nothing would persuade the mother-in-law to let it be removed by our Dr. Lee in St. Andrew's Hospital here. Her own family, of course, had no control.

Her father, however, had influenced her husband towards Christianity and when the husband died a little later of consumption he was a faithful believer, and was baptized in spite of his mother. Mrs. Lieu was absolutely ignorant, miserable in health, and there was no outlook but to be the slave of her mother-in-law forever. Her father, Mr. Dzung, being an unusually strong character, was urged by us to get her away to Mrs. Standring's school for Bible-women in Soochow where, as she was a widow, she might learn enough to help a little in Christian work. I wish you could see her now! Nothing but God's love could have wrought such a miracle. After being in the school a little while her body was operated upon by good Dr. Wilkinson in his Presbyterian hospital in Soochow. He gave her the best of care, cured her, and charged for nothing but her food, for which her father paid part. Mrs. Standring took her back in the school, and the new strength that came from the removal of the tumor helped the mind that had seemed so hopelessly stupid.

I saw her this week. She is a clean, healthy, rosy, young woman, and has the most radiantly joyful face I have ever seen.

But—as any globe-trotter will tell you, "Missions don't do any good; they are so unpractical."

Death of Madeleine Harding

NEW YORK CITY.—Madeleine Huntington Harding, the oldest daughter of the Rev. John R. Harding, D.D., secretary of the Province of New York and New Jersey, died here on Sunday, March 10, after an illness of several weeks. Miss Harding was a graduate of the Cathedral School in Washington. For several years after leaving school she was more or less of an invalid, but for the last two or three years she has been able to engage in Church work. She was on the staff of the chapel of the Intercession. She took part in several of the St. Agnes' mystery plays, only a year ago playing the part of Hope in Conquering and to Conquer.

CAMPAIGN FOR GIRLS' WORK

G. F. S. and C. M. H. Subject of Addresses on Sunday

NEW YORK CITY.—The Church's War Work for Girls Campaign which was opened with the notable meeting addressed by the Archbishop of York on March 6 has continued to arouse interest during the week. On Sunday last prominence was given to the work of the Church Mission of Help and Girls' Friendly Society in a number of churches in the diocese. At the cathedral there was a special service at which the Rev. H. Percy Silver of West Point gave a stirring address and made a most touching appeal for the generous support of all work which was needed to keep up "our second army", the great army of workers at home.

Outside New York City services and meetings in the interest of this work have been held in St. John's, Yonkers; St. George's and Church of Good Shepherd, Newburgh; Grace church, White Plains; Christ church, Tarrytown, and others are being arranged for next week. During the first three days of work in raising funds after the opening meeting $6,000 had been reported at headquarters. The report included only the first returns of a part of the workers.

CHAPLAIN WITH HIS GRACE

The Rev. F. A. Iremonger Was the Head of Oxford House

NEW YORK CITY.—Traveling with the Archbishop is his chaplain, the Rev. Frederic Athewold Iremonger, the rector of Quaeky, Hampshire. Mr. Iremonger was known to many Americans before coming to this country by his beautiful book of meditations on the 130th Psalm, Before the Morning Watch (Longmans), which was reviewed in the Lent number of THE CHURCHMAN. Mr. Iremonger studied at Keble College, Oxford, and Wells Theological College, receiving his B.A. in 1901 and his M.A. in 1905. After his ordination as deacon he became curate of All Saints', Poplar. From 1911 to 1916 he was the head of Oxford House, Bethnal Green, and vicar of St. James the Great, Bethnal Green.

Edwin A. Stevens Dies

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—Mr. Edwin Augustus Stevens, treasurer of the Diocese of Newark, died at Washington, District of Columbia, on Friday, March 8, in the sixtieth year of his age.

Colonel Stevens' conspicuous services in his parish, to the Diocese of Newark, to the American Church, to his city, the State of New Jersey, and to the National Government will be remembered by all.

SPRINGFIELD

Synod Meeting—The Bishop has appointed Wednesday and Thursday, May 1 and 2, as the time of the meeting of the forty-first annual Synod of the diocese, and the place Trinity church, Lincoln, the Ven John C. White, rector. Archdeacon White is already making active preparations for the meeting. This is the only time but one that the Synod has met outside of the see city.

An invitation to meet next year in Champaign has already been filed with the secretary of the Synod. It has been long felt by many of the clergy that it would be wise and helpful to have the Synod meet in some of the stronger parishes outside of Springfield and thus relieve the Springfield parishes of the expense of entertaining it every year. Lincoln feels well able to take care of the Synod and already Judge S. A Foley has opened his home and offered a reception to the Synod on the second evening of the meeting. The Woman's Auxiliary will also meet at the same time and place.

"Over the Top"—The diocese went "over the top" in the War Commission Offering the amount so far received being $1,328.28 about $200 more than its apportionment for this purpose. Some of the smaller missions did as well in proportion as the larger parishes.

In Service—Another of the clergy is likely soon to be at the front. The Rev Arthur G. Wilson of St. Barnabas', Havana was in the draft and declined to be exempted and has successfully passed the physical examination and been accepted. He expects soon to be called to go.

HANKOW

Red Cross—Red Cross work brings many together here these days. Each Tuesday the ladies of Boone compound work in a room given for that purpose. This room is disinfected before the workers come. All manner of curious bandages are made. Other Americans in the city and even some of the wives of our Chinese faculty have joined us here. The efficient way in which the work is bought, cut out and finished will be an object lesson to all, especially the Chinese, in the management of parish aid and Auxiliary societies.

MISSISSIPPI

A Successful Canvass—The splendid report of the individual canvass, made by the Rev. Charles E. Woodson, rector of Christ church, Vicksburg, may be of some interest to the readers of THE CHURHCHMAN.

He reported that 101 new contributors had been secured by the committee of forty who went out in automobiles on Sunday afternoon, and an increase in pledges over last year of $1,603.60.

The result of the canvass is plainly seen in the people being brought into closer touch with each other and in increase in church attendance.

The Sunday-school of this parish has not only been built up, but the rector has presented in his three Confirmation classes ighty-seven candidates, the greater portion eing adults, men, and more men are being rought out to the services.

Council to Meet—The Council of the Woman's Auxiliary will hold its annual session in Christ church April 16-18. The branches of the Woman's Auxiliary in the two parishes of Vicksburg are planning to entertain the Council jointly and an interesting program is being arranged. Our juniors expect to give the little dramatic play "Manana" during the Council. As that was the study course of the Juniors last year it will be especially appropriate. Bishop Trattor will preach the Council sermon.

MARY MAGANOS.

NEVADA

Woman's Auxiliary—The Woman's Auxiliary is going forward steadily in Nevada. Mrs. George Biller, a secretary from the central office in New York, is spending ten days in Nevada. She addressed the Trinity branch, Reno, also the Juniors and the Sunday school. Later she went to Fallon and talked to some of the women in the Church there and first steps were taken toward the organization of a branch. Thence she went to the central part of the State and addressed groups of women in Battle Mountain, Winnemucca, Elko and Ely.

Carson and Virginia—The Rev. Harold Hitchcock Kelley, B.A., has been called as rector to St. Peter's church, Carson, and appointed vicar of St. Paul's, Virginia City, Grace, Silver City and All Saints', Dayton. He held his first services on Sunday, March 3.

GEORGE WILLIAMS.

NEW YORK

St. Thomas' Festival Chorus—On Wednesday, March 20, Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius" will be sung by the St. Thomas' Festival Chorus, and the church choir, assisted by the choir of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the New York Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Reed Miller, Madame Nevada Van der Veer and Mr. Robert Maitland. They expect to realize a large sum, which will be divided between the Red Cross (through St. Thomas' Auxiliary) and the War Commission of the Church. Subscription cards may be secured from A. H. Addams, 1 West Fifty-third street.

The George Stuart Baker—A typical soldier of the Church Militant was Dr. George Stuart Baker, for twenty-three years pastor and superintendent of St. Luke's Hospital in New York City, and eighteen years its chaplain emeritus at his death on February 1. Born in Medford, Mass., in 1838, the Civil War found him making his way commercially in Charleston, S. C., and a member of its long famous cadet corps, the Washington Light Infantry. With this he served through nearly four years, taking part in the actions around Fort Sumter and the battle of Secessionville. Toward the close of the war he was captured and for a time confined at Elmira. Paroled while very ill through the intervention of President Lincoln, he again tried to make his way in the South, but presently felt a call to the ministry and, after studies at the Union Seminary in New York, a vocation to the priesthood. Ordained deacon in 1869 by Bishop Coxe and advanced to the priesthood in 1870, he served various churches in Rochester and Batavia till in 1877 he was called to the spiritual and temporal charge of St. Luke's Hospital, New York, where he had been assistant to the chaplain as a student. His connection with Dr. Muhlenberg brought him in touch also with Sister Catherine and the Shelter she had founded in 1872 for wage-earning girls in temporary need or distress. After the incorporation of this institution in 1880 he was of its first Board of Trustees and succeeded Dr. William F. Morgan as its president in 1888, an office the duties of which he continued to discharge with unflagging faithfulness through growing infirmities to the day of his death. He was chaplain of the Confederate Veterans in New York and their corporate presence at his funeral honored his memory. He died a good soldier and servant of the Church, faithful to his life's end.

At St. Luke's Home—The eighty beneficiaries domiciled at St. Luke's Home for Aged Gentlewomen have laid aside their Red Cross knitting for a few weeks and are devoting themselves to sewing, according to their annual custom, to produce a great variety of plain and fancy needlecraft which in a couple of months will be sent to Bishop Rowe, of Alaska, to be employed by him in his work in that locality. This Lenten Guild of workers is under the direction of Mrs. D. Olyphant Haynes, who is one of the representatives of St. Agnes' Chapel, Trinity parish, on the Board of Managers, of St. Luke's Home.

Here and There—On March 21 the annual quiet day of the Woman's Auxiliary will be conducted by the Rev. Frank Heartfield at the Church of Zion and St. Timothy, beginning at 10:30.

On Tuesday afternoons during Lent Dr. Lubeck is giving a series of lectures in the parish house of Zion and St. Timothy at 3.30 on the topic "The Enduring Word".

Father Hughson, O.H.C., conducted a Quiet Day on March 9 at Trinity Mission House, 211 Fulton Street, under the auspices of the Sisters of St. Mary. Father Huntington, O.H.C., held an evening of devotion for the associates and members of the New York G. F. S. at the Church of the Transfiguration on March 7.

St. Philip's Church—I have been making some pilgrimages to New York churches lately. Last Sunday the head worker of one of our settlements went with me to church. We wanted to avoid the class churches THE CHURCHMAN has been deploring lately, and she said to me, "Have you ever been to St. Philip's?" That is how we happened to wend our way from Washington Square to West 134th Street.

St. Philip's is a congregation entirely made up of Negro communicants, so perhaps it is a class church, but not in the sense we objected to. It is situated in the heart of the colored district of New York and numbers over fifteen hundred members. The building has been erected recently, and is an especially cheerful, airy and beautiful one. There are no rented pews, and a spirit of friendliness and homogeneity seems to emphasize the family life of this parish. We found almost the last two seats in the church. There were a number of people standing. The service was beautifully sung by choir and congregation with deep reverence. "Pastor in Urbe" could have made no criticism of the church manners of that congregation. Dr. Bishop preached a sermon which held the close attention of his people. His announcements revealed an active parish life. After the service there were two funerals, and the crowd of friends who poured into St. Philips' at the close of Morning Prayer to attend completely blocked the doors.

Rector to Be Instituted—On Tuesday in Holy Week Bishop Burch will institute the Rev. Gustav A. Carstensen, D.D., as rector of the Church of the Holy Rood, and will dedicate several memorial windows.

Teacher Training Committee—The Teacher Training Committee of the Board of Religious Education and the Junior Auxiliary of the Board of Missions will hold a conference about the middle of April in Synod hall. The topic will be, "Win the War; Win the World"; "The Kingdoms of the World, the Kingdoms of Our Lord." At 4:30 the subject will be, change of viewpoint in teaching, necessitated by the War; 5, new emphasis on missions necessitated by the War; 5:45, intercession; 6, supper; 7, simultaneous conferences, mission teaching in the primary grades, mission work in clubs for boys and girls, war service in Church schools, recruiting teachers from the older boys and girls, how to organize a church school for teacher training, diocesan organizations a Church school teacher should know; 8, address, "Preparing Our Children to Think in Terms of the World for Christ".

MARQUETTE

Bishop Harris Has First Confirmation—On Wednesday, February 27, Bishop Harris confirmed the first class of his episcopate in Grace church, Ishpeming. A large class was presented by the rector, the Rev. C. G. Ziegler. The Bishop preached with great emphasis on the relation of the War to moral and spiritual issues.

The arrival in the diocese of Bishop and Mrs. Harris was marked by a reception given in the guild hall of St. Paul's church, Marquette. Preceding the reception a dinner was given at which were gathered a number of the clergy and laymen from various places in the diocese. The Rev. Dr. Ryan of Duluth and Mr. Thomas Wood, a prominent layman of that city, were also guests on this occasion. A number of speeches were made, the Rev. A. J. Wilder of St. Paul's, Marquette, acting as toastmaster. The Bishop Coadjutor responded in an earnset and timely address which was enthusiastically received.

The Rev. Robert LeRoy Harris was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Marquette at St. Mark's church, Toledo. The Archbishop of Algomor, Canada, and seven bishops of the United States took part in the service.

The co-consecrators with Bishop Tuttle were the Rt. Rev. William Andrew Leonard, D.D., bishop of Ohio, and the Rt. Rev. Charles David Williams, bishop of Michigan; the Rt. Rev. John Hazen White, D.D., bishop of Michigan City. The presenters were the Rt. Rev. Frank Du Moulin, D.D., LL.D., bishop coadjutor of Ohio, and the Rt. Rev. Theodore Irving Reese, D.D., bishop coadjutor of Southern Ohio.

The certificate of election was read by the Very Rev. Carl G. Ziegler, president of the Convention Electing, diocese of Marquette. Walter A. Hodge, senior warden of St.

Mark's, in his office as deputy to the General Convention from the diocese of Ohio, presented the diocesan testimonial.

The Evidences of Ordination were read by the Rev. William Foster Peirce, D.D., L.H.D., president of Kenyon College. The Rev. Joseph A. Ten Broeck, chairman of the Board of Missions of the diocese of Marquette, read the Grounds of Election; the Rev. Jacob Streibert, D.D., professor of Hebrew and New Testament History, Bexley Hall, the Certificate of Compliance, and the Rev. George Gunnell, member of the Standing Committee of the diocese of Ohio, the Consent of the Standing Committee. This was followed by the Consent of the Bishops.

After the candidate had taken the oath of conformity and submitted to the examination, the Most Rev. George Thorneloe, D.D., D.C.L., archbishop of Ontario, and Bishop of Algomar, Canada, acted as precentor for the Litany.

The attending Presbyters in the ceremonies were the Rev. Bates G. Burt, director of the Y. M. C. A., Camp Custer, and the Rev. Harry St. Clair Hathaway, rector of St. John's church, Sandusky, Ohio. The Rev. John Ernest Carhartt, secretary to the Bishop Coadjutor of Ohio, was master of ceremonies. His assistants were the Rev. George Parkin Atwater, rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio; the Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, rector of Christ church, Lima, and the Rev. Walter Fuller Tunks, rector of St. Paul's church, Muskegon, Mich. JAMES E. CROSBIE.

MISSOURI

A Vestryman's Record—What a remarkable record it is that one man should have continued on the vestry of one parish for more than sixty years! Grace church parish, Kirkwood, tenderly laid at rest, on Monday, March 4, Henry W. Hough, vestryman of Grace parish for more than sixty years, and senior warden of the parish for the past thirty-seven years. Mr. Hough was born in St. Louis, in one of the first brick houses built west of the Mississippi River, a house only recently torn down. Sixty years ago he moved to Kirkwood, and, actively engaged in the real estate business, he did much toward developing Kirkwood into the beautiful suburb that it has become, twelve miles from the city of St. Louis. Always interested and helpful in all good works and ways, a churchman of the old school, glad of the privileges and responsibilities which were his in the house of the Lord, carrying his religion into the street with his business suit, and into the home where four sons and five daughters were raised, who survive him with his widow, he died at four-score years and ten beloved by the parish and the community and mourned by many loving friends and neighbors. HARRINGTON ROGERS.

LEXINGTON

Rebuilding Fund Growing—The Rebuilding Fund of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, the Rev. Richard Wilkinson, D.D., rector, destroyed by fire on January 20, is rapidly increasing. In addition to the insurance money, $10,000 of the $50,000 needed has been raised. The bravery and loyalty of the congregation is manifested by its branch of the Woman's Auxiliary sending Bishop Burton $5 for his Discretionary Fund, when its church is in ashes. Such loyalty to the diocese, and consciousness of duty towards others, is a mark of their faith and dependence upon God.

NEW MEXICO

A Live Parish—St. Clement's church, El Paso, has largely overpaid its missionary appropriation, besides having given generous contributions to other causes like the Red Cross and the War Fund. Toward the latter this parish gave one-quarter of the amount apportioned to the district. Meantime a class of fifty has been confirmed since last October and another large class will be ready at Easter. Amongst those confirmed were several Army officers, a Methodist minister, and a Y. M. C. A. secretary. This parish, under the Rev. Fuller Swift, its rector, is making large headway with its opportunities.

Parish Improvements — From Marfa, Texas, news comes that since Chaplain William Brander of the Army has taken charge of the mission in Marfa this congregation has expended $1,600 in improvements upon its property.

Service Flag—On Sunday, February 24, the rector of the Church of the Holy Faith, Santa Fe, on behalf of the men enlisted from this parish, accepted and blessed a service flag bearing twenty-six stars. This parish reports only 214 communicants in the last Journal.

Largest Enlistment—We have heard it said that the largest percentage of enlistments in proportion to the population in the United States was registered in Ft. Sumner, New Mexico.

Bishop at State University—Bishop Howden has recently been invited to repeat before the faculty and student body of the State University an address made a few weeks since before "The La Junta" of Las Vegas, which has been the occasion of much favorable comment on the part of the secular press of the State.

The Bishop spoke on "The Relation of the War to Philosophy, Government and Religion". Bishop Howden has been delivering Missionary addresses in the East but returns shortly to begin his Spring visitations. WALTER S. TROWBRIDGE.

PHILADELPHIA

Church Blamed for War—Bishop Darst of East Carolina, preaching at the Garrick Theater, said: "Men are saying that the Church has broken down. That is absolutely untrue. The Church has not failed, but we have failed. We have played with religion. We have not played fair. Six days in the week we neglected our religious obligations, and on the seventh we went to Church and repented of our sins of commission and omission. We have not let God use us as a force for the uplift and regeneration of humanity. We have not played fair with God."

800,000 Churchmen Pledged to Get "Dry" Rule—The Inter-Church Federation, representing the seven hundred Protestant Churches in Philadelphia, at a recent meeting declared in favor of candidates for the governorship who stand for the ratification of the Federal amendment for prohibition. Bishop Garland and Dr. Carl Grammer of St. Stephen's church represent the Episcop church on the board of the Inter-Chur Federation.

A Good Religious Ad—In Saturday Morning Ledger the following headed t Church advertisements last week: "Whe Do You Spend Sunday Evenings? Ha You Attended One of the Enlisted Me Own Services?"

"No—Well, then, come along folks; jo the happy throng wending their way t ward Cooper Battalion, Twenty-third a Christian, Mr. Edward J. Cattell, lay preac er. Choir of enlisted men. Orchestra thirty pieces."

Memorial Service at Old Swedes' Chur —A memorial service for Mrs. Snyder Simes, widow of the late rector of Glo Dei (Old Swedes') church, was held Sunday, March 3. Had Dr. and Mrs. Sim lived this would have been their fiftieth y of service in the parish.

The parish has lately been left the lar part of an estate of $80,000 by the will Mr. Benjamin R. Simes, who died on F ruary 21. Mr. Simes left trust funds the parish toward the general mission apportionment, and for the Sunday sch After leaving $5,000 each to the Home Rest for the Aged of the Church, and to Domestic and Foreign Missionary Soci and several sums to relatives, the rest of estate was left to the parish.

Prayer Books for Soldiers—The Y. C. A. in France has asked for 100,000 co of the war Prayer Book issued by Bishop White Prayer Book Society. So 60,000 copies have been published, and demand is growing.

The Rev. John A. Goodfellow's For sixth Anniversary—The Rev. John Goodfellow preached his forty-sixth an versary sermon as rector of the Church the Good Shepherd, Kensington, on Sun March 3. During his diaconate Mr. Go fellow built St. John's church, Camden J. In three months hall was vacated, a lot taken up on gro rent for $7,000, and a frame chapel erec The ground rent was liquidated after $13 had been paid for principal and interest. 1899 the beautiful stone chapel was erec and in 1913 the frame chapel was der ished to make room for the commod seventeen-room stone parish house. In an adjoining property was purchased by late Isaac Schlichter, a vestryman, and sented to the Church as a parish house nex. In 1908 a rectory was purchased $5,000. The entire property of the pa with endowments, is valued at $100,000, is free from debt. Mr. Goodfellow baptized 2,400, prepared 1,200 for Confi tion, married 850, buried 1,800. The rector, Rev. Benjamin F. Bishop Perry Visits Military Camps—The Right Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D.D., of the War Commission, paid Chicago a flying visit during the week past on his way East from Oklahoma. The bishop, however, found time during his brief visit to visit the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, the French War Shop in Chicago, and Camp Grant at Rockford. Mrs. Perry accompanied the bishop on his round of visits.

Old Christ Church in the Balance—The many friends of the late Rt. Rev. Charles Edward Cheney, D.D., will no doubt be interested to learn that at Eastertide the question of the future of Old Christ church, of which Dr. Cheney was rector for more than half a century, will be decided. Bishop Cheney came to Chicago soon after his ordination to become the rector of Christ church, and early in the seventies with his congregation joined Bishop Cummins in the organization of the Reformed Episcopal church, being consecrated a bishop of that church by Bishop Cummins. In common with many others, Christ church has seen the gradual encroachment of the business district upon the one time exclusive residence district of Chicago. Consequently but a small portion of the congregation remains. The Rev. Samuel M. Gibson, D.D., for many years associate rector, and after the death of Bishop Cheney rector of Christ church, has resigned to accept the position of associate pastor at the Fourth Presbyterian church of Chicago. He has been received into the Presbytery of Chicago. Meanwhile the Rev. James Todd is conducting the services at Christ church pending the final decision at Easter.

PITTSBURGH

Laymen's Missionary League—The twenty-ninth anniversary of the Laymen's Missionary League took place on St. Matthias' Day. The Corporate Communion in its behalf was celebrated by the bishop of the diocese at eight o'clock, in St. Peter's church, Pittsburgh, followed by a breakfast for the clergy, members of the league, and invited guests.

The anniversary service was held at eleven o'clock at Calvary church, when Bishop Whitehead publicly licensed the twelve Lay Evangelists and nineteen Lay Readers engaged in the work of the league, and the sermon was preached by the rector of the Church, the Rev. E. J. van Etten. The chaplain, the Rev. Dr. J. R. Wightman, presented the report of work for the year, from which we glean the following items of interest:

Five missions are supplied regularly with services, and vacant parishes and missions are furnished with lay readers frequently in the interim between regular pastorates. Two thousand dollars is needed to carry on this work for the current year.

WEST VIRGINIA

A Long Ministry—Twenty-nine years ago a young priest of the Church became rector of St. Luke's church, Wheeling, West Virginia. Today the same man ministers to that congregation. Sunday was the twenty-ninth anniversary of the Rev. Jacob Brittingham's coming to St. Luke's church. This is doubtless the most unusual pastorate of any church of any denomination in the State.

Dr. Brittingham's rectorate has been remarkable, not alone for the long period of time which it covers, but also for the good works of this most beloved clergyman. During the twenty-nine years good-will has existed between the rector and his congregation.

No minister in the history of Wheeling has a stronger hold on the affections of all the people. He has been the minister of all regardless of denomination. He is probably known to more people than any other minister in the State. He has always been foremost in all movements for the civil and moral betterment of the city, the good friend and wise counselor of all, loved and admired by almost everybody in Wheeling. Dr. Brittingham was the first person to receive holy orders from the hands of the sainted Bishop Peterkin. His many friends join in prayers that God will grant him long life and show him His salvation.

BOSTON

City Mission Changes—The Rev. Charles H. McCurdy has recently resigned as vicar of Grace church, South Boston, and gone to the diocese of Michigan as rector of St. James' church, Birmingham.

Mr. George S. Selfridge, for many years treasurer of the City Mission, has resigned, to take effect on the election of his successor.

Mr. Charles E. Mason resigned as secretary of the City Mission some time ago and was succeeded by Mr. Philip E. Coyle, who had been for a number of years closely associated with City Mission affairs.

Within the last six months, four out of the five vicars of the City Mission parishes have resigned and less than a year ago the rector of St. Matthew's church, South Boston, which is partly under City Mission auspices, resigned to accept the post of vicar of St. Thomas' chapel, New York City. One of the City Mission churches—the Redeemer, South Boston—has had three vicars within two years. At the present time St. Matthew's, South Boston; Grace church, South Boston, and St. Mary's, East Boston, are all without settled parish priests, and St. Stephen's, Boston, will be without a vicar when Mr. Lauderburn's resignation—announced in last week's letter—goes into effect.

Various radical changes in organization have been talked of for a long time in relation to all these mission. The consolidation of two or more of the South Boston churches has been advocated on account of far-reaching population changes, although there is locally great opposition to any such proposal. Both Grace church and St. Matthew's have a long and loyal parish tradition and still have a considerable number of capable and eager workers. Another alternative for changed administration to meet the same difficulty of depleted Anglo-Saxon population is the establishment of some sort of "Associate Mission" whereby a group of young, unmarried priests should live together in a central location with an experienced directing head, and take charge of two or three or more of the City Mission parishes. This method has been advocated by some in close touch with the existing situation. Sentiment for either one of these proposals, however, seems not yet to have crystallized either positively or negatively.

St. Stephen's, Boston, has for several years contemplated moving from its present location into the region nearer Dartmouth street—one of the centers of Boston's great lodging-house district. It is very generally felt that this is a wise and statesmanlike plan which, if worked out carefully and supported with adequate funds and a sufficient experienced personnel, would go far toward meeting the really crying need of systematic pastoral work and definite evangelization among the immense lodging-house population of Boston. The plans to this end have been already pretty carefully and fully worked out and it is reasonable to expect that after the war this will be one of the first large and wholesome changes in the Church life of Boston.

Opportunities for non-Anglo-Saxon work in Boston are also clearly evident to all who know at all intimately the facts of various neighborhoods, but—with the exception of the existing work at Christ church in the North End—no definite plans are yet in evidence that the Church proposes to meet the challenge that such radical population changes present. St. Mary's, East Boston, affords perhaps the most striking example of immediate opportunity, where there are some 3,000 entirely unchurched Italians living compactly within an area of less than a square mile. The entire Italian colony there comprises over 10,000 and the Italian parish of the Roman church, in charge of the Franciscans, is doing admirable work for those that they can reach. A considerable part of this colony knows the Episcopal church and what it stands for and have given tangible evidence for several years that they would welcome our religious ministrations. In the South End there is also a large number of Italians among whom our Church has a clear opportunity for effective service. In the parish of Grace church, South Boston, the Poles and Lithuanians present both a problem and an opportunity that we are peculiarly fitted to solve and grasp, if we will.

The German and the Church—It has developed recently that numbers of loyal German families who have formerly been identified with other Christian bodies where they have been a part of a straight German congregation have been seeking fellowship with us and the ministrations of our Church. This has presented a problem of seriousness and delicacy, but is apparently being solved effectively and happily by the caution and tact of the parish priest and the co-operation with him of the officials of the Federal Department of Justice who are able to give to the inquiring priest authentic information as to the character and patriotism of almost any given family or individual who may be seeking the privileges of association with one of our parishes. By this means it is occasionally discovered that a tentative seeker after fellowship has probable ulterior motives and is definitely under suspicion by the Government as a German would-be propagandist, but the majority of those that are looking now and again to us for religious ministration have been found to be sincere and entirely loyal.

The Archbishop's Welcome—The Archbishop of York has been preaching to great congregations and speaking to crowded audiences ever since his arrival a week ago. A great throng of eager people crowded to hear him at Harvard on Sunday morning last, and in the afternoon Trinity church, Boston, was filled to overflowing before the hour of service arrived. The same story was repeated at the Cathedral in the evening. On each occasion the archbishop spoke a ringing message of heroic religion and patriotism. He has evidently been accepted here as the peculiarly popular delegate of Great Britain to her daughter nation at this time of co-operative conflict against the powers of darkness.

On Monday evening in Symphony Hall, Boston, the archbishop's Boston visit was brought to a climax in the great popular patriotic meeting in his honor. The great auditorium was packed and His Grace was given a characteristically American ovation. On Tuesday, Bishop Lawrence gave a luncheon in his honor to which all the clergy of the diocese were invited.

BALTIMORE

Lenten Services—The noonday services for business people at St. Paul's and the Church of the Messiah are being largely attended and are fully up to the high standard of former years. The list of speakers includes many of our most eminent clergy. Amongst the speakers at St. Paul's have been Canon McComb, the Rev. Robert Johnson of Philadelphia, the Rev. William H. Garth of Long Island, and the Rev. Craig Stewart of Chicago. The preacher this week is Bishop Fiske of Central New York, who is visiting his old friends and his former parish and is speaking upon some of the problems of faith growing out of the war. At the Messiah some of the speakers have been Bishop DuMoulin, Bishop Murray, Father Huntington and Canon McComb.

A Parochial Mission—A remarkable mission has just been held at the Church of the Epiphany, Baltimore, the Rev. Carroll E. Harding, rector, by the Rev. J. Atwood Stansfield of New York. The congregations were large and deeply interested from the beginning. At the close the Church was crowded. Many outsiders attended and were deeply impressed by the services and sermons. The work with the children was one of the best features and held their close attention to the end, in fact they would gladly have gone on indefinitely. It was a genuine religious revival for all the people, who are now planning a continuance of real effort for Church extension.

Another Rector Goes to the Battle Front—Following closely upon the announcement that the Rev. Philip Cook, rector of St. Michael and All Angels, will soon go to France to engage in religious work amongst the American soldiers, comes the news that the Rev. Edward Dering Evans, rector of St. Luke's, has offered his services to the Bishop of London as chaplain in the British Army. The bishop has promised the Allies one hundred chaplains for work in the trenches, and Father Evans expects to be one of them. Before coming to Baltimore he was a chaplain in a New Zealand regiment. Being refused an American chaplaincy, he has now offered himself for service in his native country. He is taking this step with the approval of Bishop Murra and the consent of his vestry, which h given him leave of absence for six month from April 1. His parish will make a fi act of Lenten self-denial in giving up the rector.

icensed Towns Decreased—By the vote t the town meetings in Vermont on Tues-ay, March 5, the licensed towns were re-uced to ten. Last year eighteen towns oted for license, but in five of these no censes were granted, all being very small owns.

The most conspicuous victories for no cense were in Burlington and St. Albans. utland, Bennington and Barre still remain nder the license law.

Last year's majorities for license, how-ver, were materially reduced in some laces. Barre's majority of 187 last year as cut to 42; Colchester's majority fell to 3. Shelburne's majority of 89 dropped to 6, and Vergennes gave only eight majority or license this year against twenty-three ast year.

The woman vote was an interesting factor nd there was much speculation as to what eir activities might result in.

A good proportion of the women took ad-antage of their right. Burlington and Col-hester led in the percentage of women re-gistrants voting, with about 90 per cent.

A Prophet Bishop—Since Dr. Woods was appointed bishop of Peterboro the Church has slowly realized that it has a prophet, in the ancient sense of the term, among its leaders. Dr. Woods is of what may be described as liberal evangelical views, though he is strictly just to the Catholic party, and finds himself very much in harmony with those of them who hold advanced views on social questions. For it is in this region that his prophetic gift is chiefly apparent. My readers may remember a note which appeared in this column describing his successful meetings of employers and employed. I am now indebted to the Church Times for the phrase "one of the prophets of today". It was used apropos of the bishop's great speech at the close of Canterbury Convocation. He gave a searching analysis of the labor situation, and its inevitable reaction on the nation. There is need of clear thinking on the part of employers and employed, he said, but for a variety of reasons, apathy, inertia, strain, food shortage, things are not being thought out. Was there ever a situation which called for those spiritual forces which our Lord waits to supply through the faith and obedience of His own society? The Church is waking up, and is "applauding sentiments which would have shocked it five years ago". And we must not be content with generalities: the New Testament must have something definite to say. Dr. Woods finds it in the parallel of the Incarnation "God thinking Himself into man's point of view" followed by the wondrous action. It is thinking himself into the other man's point of view which is demanded from every Churchman at the present time.

The Revision of Values—I suppose that in America, as in England, much of the current thought turns on the discussion of what are technically described as "values". The expression has become the catchword of the modern novel. So Dr. Woods catches it up, and calls for a thorough revision of values. Money, for instance, has had an "absurd importance attached to it". Also, industry is a value for the State, rather than for the individual. We in this country have His Majesty's army, navy, civil service (including the post office), then why should not we also have a "national merchant, navy, national mines, national railways"? Is it unthinkable, asks Dr. Woods, that we shall be just as proud of the services rendered to the State in peace as we have been in war? There is a limitation of profits in war, why not in peace? Excess profits should go to the community. We need a new social conscience; a new attitude to life. "A true Catholicism glories in the grandeur of art and music and skill of every kind, not as a private possession, but as a corporate offering to God; a true Protestantism is concerned to protest against all that hinders the true development of each man's personality, whether the hindrance comes from false doctrines in economics or religion." Industrial undertakings should not be private ventures, but a public offering for the honor of God, and the welfare of our fellows.

Dr. Woods is not afraid of the shout of "Socialism" which he anticipates. "I have never been a professed socialist—but we are being urged along some such path, not merely by the spirit of the age, but by the Spirit of Him who is the King of the ages." And the significance of the situation is that these things were said, not by an agitator in the Park, but by a bishop to his brother bishops. They were deeply impressed by the speech of one of the youngest of the episcopate, and considered it too important to be discussed in the little time available. On the motion of the Bishop of London, the subject will be given first place at the next group of sessions.

Revision of the Canon—The Upper House of Canterbury had not been wasting its time. It had done at least one bit of good work, in that it had at last agreed to the recommendation of the Lower House for the revision of the canon. It will be remembered that the Bishop of Oxford had recently to insist that one of his clergy should adhere to the present order, on account of the previous decision of the Upper House, though the bishop's own sympathies are strongly in favor of the change. The result of the largest vote, which was carried by thirteen to seven votes, is that the Prayer of Humble Access is to be said immediately before the Communion of the priest and people, and that the Prayer of Consecration is to be extended to include the Prayer of Oblation, including the form of introduction with which you in America are familiar.

Of course, after this decision we ought all to be making the alteration next Sunday. But we cannot legally do any such thing: Parliament must first have its say, and when that may be, nobody can tell. But in the present temper of the clergy, it will not be surprising if a good many of them act on the decision of Convocation forthwith. The laity will in certain cases demand it.

Building the Bridge—It was known that Canon Cyril Hepher of Winchester had been preaching on week days at the "King's Weigh House church, London", a building belonging to the Congregationalists. It is an interesting church, where the minister, Mr. Orchard, is leading his people along strongly Catholic lines. The appointments of the Church, and the liturgy in use, are very much like those of our own Communion. Canon Hepher is well known for his advocacy of the "fellowship of silence" as an integral part of worship, and during this Lent he is conducting a service on these lines at King's Weigh House every fortnight. In the intervening weeks, the congregation assembles in one of our own Churches, Grosvenor Chapel, Mayfair, so that "church and chapel" are being well mixed up. Canon Hepher is doing this with the formal consent and approval of the Bishops of London and Winchester. It is an interesting experiment in bridge-building.

Difficult Travel—Several rectors in the diocese have written to the Bishop Coadjutor asking for a postponement of the bishop's visitation owing to the most unusual difficulty of travel on the country roads.

The Archbishop of York

(Abridged)

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I have just read the program arranged for the Archbishop of York during his visit to the United States.

I notice that there is no appointment made for him south of the Potomac or the Ohio. It strikes me that this was a serious tactical blunder on the part of the committee. St. Louis and Chicago are honored with a visit, merely on account of their physical bigness. Each of them is essentially un-American, largely populated by people of foreign birth or ancestry, to whom a visit of a dignitary of the Church of England would be a matter of no concern.

Per contra, Virginia and her historic capital are ignored; although she was the first-born child of the colonies, and has preserved in its purity the blood of the original settlers.

Virginia, which, like a pure vestal virgin, has preserved and guarded one of the most sacred shrines of liberty, St. John's church, Richmond, in which was delivered by Patrick Henry his immortal oration—this old State, the mother of States and statesmen in the glorious past of our history, is at such a time ignored. Somebody for some reason has blundered. Somebody has failed to see things in their proper proportion.

It ought not to be too late to remedy the oversight: not to call it a slight. The Archbishop of York should be given the opportunity and privilege of standing in old St. John's church, Richmond. I will go even further and say that the Archbishop should be given the privilege of visiting Yorktown (doubtless named for his see city), where the Americans, true sons of their mother country, with the aid of their valued allies, the French, gave the last grand knockout to attempted autocracy in England.

It should enable him to go home with a brave heart, assured that they, and the French and we will put the finishing touches on what was done at Yorktown in 1781, and so rid the whole earth of war lords and their pestiferous brood of war breeders.

The program should be amended and the Archbishop be permitted the privilege of visiting Virginia.

At the Foot of the Cross

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

It was on Good Friday of last year that our country declared war on Germany and her Allies, and by so doing identified herself as a vindicator of justice, righteousness and peace.

To my mind the day was very significant, for on no better day of the year could a Christian race be called upon to bear such a cross, fortified as her people were, or should have been, by the forty days of Lent, through which period they had been so near to the Saviour of the world in His sufferings for the human race.

What, I ask, is next Good Friday going to mean to our people? I firmly believe that what this country needs now is a day wholly to be spent at the foot of the cross, and why cannot that day be Good Friday? Many of our churches have given up their week-day services this Lent, in order materially to help the Government in the conservation of fuel. This is a very serious matter to many of us, but rightly or wrongly we have consented to do it. Is the Government now ready to recognize the power of the Church in this conflict? and is it now prepared to give us an opportunity of really doing our part with their hearty co-operation?

Surely there is influence enough behind our great Church to persuade the President to proclaim this coming Good Friday a national and legal holiday, for this year at any rate, so that Christian people all over this land may be given the opportunity of attending the Three Hours Service, or such other services as the various Churches may wish to provide. Let it be given out from Washington that the day is not to be a mere holiday, but a day of real intercession at the foot of the Cross.

Will not some of our good bishops and prominent priests and laymen move in this matter and at once?

The Churchman and the Y.M.C.A.

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Under the general heading of Chronicle and Comment in THE CHURCHMAN for February 23 appear two articles which a sense of humor alone would seem to have forbidden to stand upon the same page. One is a presentation of the value of common Christian Courtesy, and the other is an uncommonly discourteous sneer at the Y. M. C. A. for not permitting men of the Episcopal Church to play cards in the Army huts.

The bare fact that the Y. M. C. A., on the basis of its wise and efficient service in this and other wars, has earned the generous support that has been accorded to it by men of all persuasions, should put its war work beyond the petty criticism of those who apparently contributed to the fund without knowing what the huts were for. If the "Rarefied moral atmosphere of the hospitality these huts offer to our soldiers" is "needlessly offensive" to them, why is it that from officers and men of all types and ranks, no less than from press correspondents and chaplains, there comes back to us only an increasing chorus of praise and gratitude for the Red Triangle and what it stands for over there? If "an Episcopalian accepts the hospitality of the Y. M. C. A." it would seem that ordinary appreciation of what is offered him should,—and as a matter of fact does,—make him ready to respect the regulations which, according to the experience of his hosts, have proved to be for the best good of the majority.

Just here I would like to ask the chronicler who is responsible for this comment on Y. M. C. A. restrictions to imagine himself for a moment in the position of a Baptist or Methodist member of the Commission on Faith and Order, whose attention has been called to the following remarkable statement: "If the Y. M. C. A. rules were made under old-fashioned Baptist or Methodist ideas of moral rectitude, they ought to have been changed before the Y. M. C. A. presented its organization to do war work for all the Churches." If such a statement had appeared among letters to the editor, as the opinion of one petulant gentleman, it might be passed over as of small moment; but when it appears in the editorial columns of a publication which is supposed to represent, in large measure, the attitude of the Episcopal Church, at a time when that Church has solemnly pledged itself to a special effort towards Christian Unity, it would seem that it must either be withdrawn or do serious harm to a cause in which the value of Christian Courtesy is being put to the test.

LUCY C. STURGIS.

Boston, Massachusetts.

(Note—In implying that the old-fashioned standards of certain Christian communions were rather rigid, "the petulant gentleman" who wrote the item in THE CHURCHMAN on the Y. M. C. A. and smoking intended, we are sure, to cast no reflection upon the present attitude of our friends the Baptists and Methodists towards these venial weaknesses. They are as cheerfully immoral these days as regards smoking, dancing and card-playing as is the most ardent Episcopalian. But we must regretfully acknowledge that the phrase "needlessly offensive" was needlessly discourteous.—Editor.)

National Prohibition

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Mr. Empringham, in your issue of March 2, speaks of "national prohibition in some form". The form adopted by Congress in the Act of August 10, 1917, is a prohibition of the manufacture of spirituous liquors during the War. The same act permits the manufacture of wine and beer, imposes a tax upon them for the support of government, and authorizes the President to limit the percentage of alcohol. He has limited this in beer to 2¾ per cent. The President himself on the 3d of July asked that the original prohibition of the manufacture of wine and beer be stricken from the bill and it was.

But this is not the form of national prohibition favored by the "Church Temperance Society". That recommends the adoption of an amendment to the United States Constitution prohibiting the manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within the United States for beverage purposes.

Mr. Empringham's letter treats beer as one of these liquors. In fact, beer is a nourishing food. In the process of manufacture the material for yeast cakes is produced, and the remainder is used for feed for cattle. So far from beer's destroying efficiency, it promotes this quality, if used in moderation. Science does not declare it to be a poison or a narcotic, habit-forming drug. Experience shows it to be the contrary.

And as to wine. If your correspondent will read his Prayer Book he will find that wine is declared to be a gift of God. Christ Himself made it at Cana. Yet Mr. Empringham advocates a law which would send Him to prison for that act.

ROMANTIC MINISTRY ENDS

Dr. Hewitt Accomplishes Remarkable Work in Long Career

Coldwater, Michigan.—The Rev. John Hewitt, rector of St. Mark's, Coldwater, Michigan, died suddenly on Tuesday, February 19, at the rectory. He was a Mason of high degree, at one time he was grand prelate of the Grand Commandery in Pennsylvania. He had taken the thirty-third degree in Masonry. The funeral services were impressive, as the Masons, Elks and Knight Templars took part and went to the cemetery as well. All the ministers in town were there. Rich and poor, Jew and Gentile, black and white, religious and irreligious, paid their respects to the much-loved rector of St. Mark's. One man who had never been inside of a church broke his custom to attend the burial services. In the morning there was celebration of the Holy Eucharist, and at 2:30 p. m. the services took place in the church. The Rev. Lewis P. Franklin of Newark, Ohio, a friend of long standing to the Hewitts, read the Sentences, the Lesson and made the address. In the absence of the Bishop, now in war work in France, the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent of Grand Rapids read the Creed and Prayers and gave the Blessing. Out-of-town clergy attending were the Rev. W. F. Bachman of Albion, Michigan; the Rev. C. E. Bishop of Sturgis, and the Rev. D. C. Huntington of Grand Rapids.

The work of Dr. Hewitt at his advanced age was a constant rebuke and rebuttal of the current idea that a clergyman has passed his time of fruitfulness because he is beyond the meridan of life.

His life reads like a romance. He was the tenth father and son in the family to take up the work of ministry. He built ten churches. He placed ten men in the ministry, and had he lived to attend the next Convention, it would have been his tenth General Convention

APPEAL
SEVENTH YEAR

The ALL NIGHT MISSION, now in the fifth year of its career of service, during which it has sheltered over 200,000 men, fed over 150,000 and helped over 14,000 to a new start in life, and has made 800 visits to prisons, 900 visits to hospitals, and conducted 2,000 services, is in need of funds.

This is a unique and practical rescue mission for men which never closes NIGHT OR DAY, where the weary, wandering souls to whom all doors are closed may find sympathetic friends to talk and pray with, free shelter, clothing, food and drinking water, NIGHT OR DAY.

Through Mr. Dudley Tyng Upjohn, its President and Treasurer, the Mission asks for support to continue and extend its work. Contributions may be sent to 8 Bowery or P. O. Box 81, New York City.

This work is endorsed by the Rt. Rev. Charles S. Burch, D.D., Bishop Suffragan of New York.

On the subject "The Checker-board of Europe", the lecturer reviewed the entire war situation dwelling by request largely upon conditions in the Balkans and in Russia.

The annual Stires Prize Debate was held on the evening of February 27 between representatives from the two literary societies at the college. The donor of the prizes for this debate is the Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires of St. Thomas' church, New York City. The subject for debate on this occasion was "Resolved, That for purposes of mutual defense, the United States should contract an offensive and defensive alliance with Great Britain, after the War". The judges awarded the decision to the negative, the first speaker's prize being given to one of the members for the affirmative, William V. Mueller, '18.

President Peirce, who is now in France is devoting several months to work at the war front. As representative from the Lake Division of the American Red Cross he is to secure at first hand information about war conditions and methods of Red Cross work. Upon his return to the United States he will speak on the results of his experience in order to further Red Cross effort.

The rector, the Rev. H. Lilien- onsdale, then read a few of the war s and the special war suffrages, after the choir, assisted by the audience, 'The Star Spangled Banner" as the national flag and the service flag were hoisted into place. The rector then read the Honor Roll of thirty-five names to correspond to the 35 stars on the service flag. This was followed by a short address not only on the need of "the world being made safe for democracy", but also of "democracy being made safe for the world". Then all present saluted the flag and the exercises were closed with collects and benediction, and all the hundreds present sang "America". Since the flag was raised, which flies every day on the flagpole in the church grounds, six more stars have been added, making forty-one now in service from St. George's church, Astoria, Long Island.

Our School Service Bureau

FOR YEARS we have maintained for the benefit of readers of The Churchman a School Service Bureau, which has aided parents materially in selecting the right school.

Years of experience have given us a knowledge of good schools which school-seekers will find valuable, and it is entirely at the service of our readers.

In seeking advice about schools we ask our readers to give the following information:

The age and sex of the child.
The maximum amount you are able to pay.
The state or section of the country preferred.
If any special training is required.

With such information at hand, we shall be glad to suggest schools to meet the conditions.

There is no charge whatever either to the school or school-seeker for this service.

For Country

A SERVICE FLAG has been hung up in St. John's church, Wytheville, Virginia, the Rev. F. H. Craighill, rector, with thirty-six stars on it. Of these men thirty-four are volunteers, sixteen of whom are officers, five others are "non-coms". Of these eight are now "somewhere in France". For a small town congregation this is an unusual number of men in the service. This flag is a very handsome one of silk given by the congregation at large. They have had a big United States flag over the chancel since the beginning of the War.

SUMMERFIELD BALDWIN, 3RD, one of the communicants of the Church of the Advent, Boston, now with the American Ambulance in France, has recently been decorated for bravery with the French "Croix de Guerre".

THE REV. HARRY MASTERSON, JR., of Houston, Texas, has gone to France in the Red Cross field service.

THE REV. ROBERT EVANS BROWNING of Silver City, New Mexico, has received a commission as chaplain in the National Army and has been assigned to duty with the Third Provisional Ordnance Battalion at Camp Jackson, Columbia, South Carolina. He has been granted an indefinite leave of absence from his work in Grant county, New Mexico, and Bishop Howden will secure some one to fill the vacancy.

ON SUNDAY, MARCH 3, in St. John's church, Globe, Arizona, a beautiful silk Service Flag, bearing twenty-one stars, was blessed by the rector, the Rev. Mr F. M. Johnson, Jr. One of these stars was red for a communicant who enlisted in the Canadian Engineers. The flag was the work of Miss von Nettleblatt, and was the gift of St. John's Guild to the church. Among the twenty-one who have entered the service is the lay-reader of the church and a member of the vestry. The flag was unveiled by Master Theodore Coleman, one of the choir boys and flag-bearer of the church. He is also a first-class scout of the Boy Scouts of America. The rector of the church is a major of infantry in the U. S. R. and is at present commanding the Globe Home Guard.

ARIAN DEC. WARD, the author of the Holy Week Meditation, is well own to Church people as the secretary the Conference for Church Work held rly in Cambridge, Massachusetts. This ditation was originally given by Miss rd to a group of women in Boston.

She taught for one year at Faith's School, then at Poughkeepsie, v at Saratoga. Upon her return to New rk she did a great deal of work for the B. R. E. and spent some time studying Union Seminary and Columbia. In 1914 became librarian of the Church Mis- ns House, and last Spring was appointed member of the resident faculty at St. th's.

English reader writes to THE CHURCH- N as follows:

I am a subscriber to the New York URCHMAN, and I am just writing you a e to tell you that the beautiful prayer for relatives of your fighting 'Boys', which eared in your issue of the 25th ult., and ich I ventured to cut out of the paper l hand to the canon to read among our ercessions last night in the Cathedral.

There was a congregation of between and 800 and I am sure that all were illed with the words so expressive as se are of human needs. As the father three sons in khaki, and of a daughter rsing abroad under the Red Cross, I l that this prayer voices admirably what feel and desire. Thank you so much it.

All Church news in New York has ecial interest for me, as in years gone through the late Dr. Morgan Dix and ers I have experienced so much kindness.

A Terrible Question

The Church of Ireland Gazette is conducting in its columns a sort of open confessional of grievances. The layman is permitted to say what he thinks he would do if he were a clergyman, and the clergyman is permitted to talk back and say what he would do if he were a layman.

When the layman had his innings, one "Rosa Dartle" wrote:

> Since I see that the clergy are to reply to lay criticisms may I, a lay woman, ask a few questions?
> Why does promotion in the Church ministry entail more social importance? For instance, once a man becomes a bishop it is taken for granted, I think, generally, that when visiting a parish, if not entertained by the rector, one of the chief social lights must entertain so great a man as a bishop. Imagine the horror of the community if a shopkeeper, however godly, had the effrontery to ask his bishop to stay with him. Also imagine the horror of the bishop's wife!
> In the vernacular of baseball Rosa certainly made a home run.

The Business of the World is Based Upon Confidence

Advertising value has as its foundation—CONFIDENCE.

The confidence of readers of this publication is many times the value of its circulation.

THE CHURCHMAN is the editorial voice, the forum and the newspaper of Episcopalians everywhere, based upon seventy-four years of leadership. It is a necessary factor in the home life of its readers, and the confidence placed in its counsel is extended to its advertising columns.

Our Cosmic Sins

Warning and encouragement are the key notes of the stirring Lenten pastoral of Bishop Reese of Georgia from which are quoted these paragraphs:

"The upheaval of this awful War has laid bare and has shaken the foundations of civilization. It has brought the Church of God face to face with the gravest questions of its responsibility to mankind. . . .

"My brethren, what are the ultimate causes of this War? What can re-establish man's civilized order on such a basis as will make righteousness, justice and peace abide ing blessings to mankind? . . .

"The final causes of most wars are prevalent among the peoples of all nations. The are human causes, moral, spiritual defects of character, degradation of ideals, perversions of will, the active energizing, dominating powers of evil in human life.

". . . The only hope for mankind to adjust his will to the eternal realities of truth and duty, to sanctify his affections, to uplift his ideals, to cleanse his imagination and to convert his heart to the God of love and holiness. Why cannot, why will we not see that? Why will we persist in experiments which the experience of the past has utterly discredited and which have brought only disappointment and misery and ruin to nations and peoples? When has men's knowledge of physical things or the greed of power or the contentment of prosperity and wealth ever promoted the permanent peace and happiness of mankind? The history of the world is the history of fallen empires and ruined civilizations. And who has brought these failures? Will anybody can anybody, deny that they have been caused by irresponsible power and wealth by selfish indulgence and luxury, by godless pride, by sensuous vice and religion perverted and prostituted to enforce these unholy ambitions and enslave their victims? These have wrought ruin and misery among men and turned God's earth into an antiroom of Hell.

"The seeds of these cosmic sins are latent and active in us. Our Nation and people stand before God not innocent of this willfulness. Our souls are anaemic, our religion is invertebrate, our churches are losing influence, our business is materialized, our homes are unreligious if not irreligious, our children are growing up undisciplined and without reverence. The clamorous assertion of our rights has drowned the voice of duty and conscience. Our education is secularized; our universities are oftentimes the seed plots of faithless and irreverent criticisms; our philosophies are divorced from true and reasonable religion, the spiritual fountain head.

". . . We must be converted and become as little children. We must have a truer, deeper, purer religion. We must live more in God and for God. We must become Christian in spirit and in truth."

Stations of the Cross

THIS year we shall need no pictorial symbols of the atoning agony of the Christ to touch the heart and stir the imagination of Christendom. Suffering has irned into the soul of the world that elemental truth of fe that for man's helpless ignorance as well as for his n, somebody must tread the wine press alone. Belgium, oland, France, Serbia, Armenia, Gallipoli and Russia re Stations of the Cross. In all these desolate, wardden zones the Christ in man has been hanging upon ie Cross.

There is a vacancy in the hearts of men, sending them Calvary, which is not fully explained by their gratitude or the atoning deed of the Christ; neither is it explained y their admiration of the heroism of that finished deed. alvary is infinitely more to us than a fine example. The od Who suffers there is, above all, the God of consolaon. All man's crucifixion in pain and sorrow is illumined y the flashes of hope and faith which shine through the orld from that Cross on the Hill.

Men need sustaining in the face of the heart-breaking icts of life. Calvary shows us heroism; but we need not have gone to the Christ for that. Men, too, have shown ourage sufficient for any task. The frailest of them are owing it today. Millions of soldiers are willing to suf-r crucifixion for their country. The hero can be a hero ithout being conscious of God, but his heroism is the ost sublimely pitiable fact in the whole range of being. is the God of consolation that we long for, the God ho in our humiliation and agony covenants with us for ictory and seals the promise with faith.

We recall many years ago spending part of Holy eek in Lourdes. One who has seen it can never forget ie quiet little town nestling in the hills of southern rance with the sleepy river winding among the streets, ironged by so many hundreds of pilgrims in quest of a elping God. Nature and man have worked together iere to create a spot where faith seems easy and God ery near. It was at sunset on the hill where the Stations f the Cross have been set overlooking the town. The ver, the hills, the town with its spires were all aglow ith the myriad tints of the fading day, and for one brief oment, as sometimes happens at such an hour, the world emed to pause and listen. The pilgrims nearly all of iem had left the hilltop, but at one of the Stations of the ross there was a woman heavily draped in black, standg wistful, wrapped in awe with unutterable longing in er eyes. She was leading a young man. She was a idow and her son was blind. In the stillness of that y's dying hour one seemed to see enacted the drama of ie Atonement. The sorrows of men and women, the indness of men and women, looking to the Cross on hich hangs the Christ for some saving word of light and mfort.

But something saved the group from the pathos of espair. There was more than the woman's anguish, ore than the blindness of the helpless man at her side iat made the scene seem almost as sacred as the soil of alvary, for by her face one could see that the God of nsolation had spoken to her with the infinite tenderness the Master's voice: "I know the story of human life, ie black and purple threads woven into the garments my others wear. But first comes Calvary, then the risen fe. Transfigure it all as I am doing for the world! Make your pain, of your blindness something that will pull the world one inch up to God! Forge into beauty with the grace I give you the iron that is binding your life! The Cross is the only way out of darkness up to God. Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people!"

The Vanishing Candidate

A GLOOMY report on theological students, apparently justified by the facts, has been made by the Rev. Paul Micou, secretary of the collegiate department of the G. B. R. E. These are the facts which Mr. Micou presents: calculations show that if the War goes on two more years we shall have only sixty-four men studying in our twelve seminaries. Nine students will occupy the time of the fourteen professors in Chelsea Square, and the other seminaries will have five men each. The draft has invaded the seminaries. It is invading the senior class of the colleges from which seminaries get their candidates. The new draft regulations place most of the juniors in Class I. The chances are that three-fourths will be called to the colors this spring. The cause for alarm is, as the General Board sees it, that we shall face the future opportunities of the Church, to say nothing of its present bare necessities, with the ranks of the ministry depleted and an insufficient number coming forward from the seminaries. The outlook for the foreign field is exceedingly gloomy. The minimum of ordained men called for by the Board of Missions is eighteen. Where are they to come from?

Even before the War, the danger of a depleted ministry was giving great concern to those conversant with the facts. We were ordaining barely enough men to hold our own. In the quarter-century ending 1913 our communicants increased four times as fast as did our clergy. The General Board tells us that the ratio of communicants to the clergy in our Church has increased twice as fast as the average for seven other leading communions. We have nearly twice as many missionary stations and parishes as we have clergy to man them. Such is the alarming forecast made from a competent survey of present conditions. What can we do about it?

We publish in our news columns the methods recommended by the General Board whereby men qualified for the ministry may be secured. Clergy, Sunday school superintendents, the directors of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and college professors will, we hope, take to heart the stern problem. But we doubt whether they will solve the matter. We cannot wholly attribute to the War the influences that are depleting the ranks of the ministry. Can we honestly say that there was much enthusiasm among our college men for entering our seminaries even before the War was thought of? Many a young man thinking of the ministry, many another in our seminaries, curates in our big city churches, welcomed as a glad release into freedom the call to go to the front. We know this because we have talked with these men. The pulsing enthusiasm and idealism in their hearts was not finding the outlet which they had dreamed of in the romantic days when they decided to dedicate their lives to God. Being curates in a city parish or students at the seminary didn't always reveal to them the vistas of service which had formed some of their expansive dreams. Their restless idealism was cramped. In the War they seemed to see promise of elbowroom for their zeal for sacrifice. War unloosed for action the pent up romance of their souls. Its call to sacrifice was the glamour they had looked for in the ministry.

This is said in no defense of the detestable business of war; but it is mentioned, in passing, to make us question whether even without the War things had not come to such a pass in our seminaries and churches that we should have had to face a depleted or inferior ministry. The best men were not being drawn into the ranks of the ministry. So the calamity of one professor for each student is not a war disaster. It seemed to be coming anyway.

But the War may do more for the Church than cutting down its candidates for the ministry. It may, who knows, reinstate religion in the centre of our common life where it rightly belongs. If it should do so, we need no longer worry about candidates for the ministry. They will come. Let the Church touch the chord of romance that is always ready to vibrate in the soul of youth and the youth will respond. He always has. The chivalry, the romance, the love of sacrifice is there. Somehow of late the Church has not won it to her cause.

We must trust the future. We believe that the world that is to be after this War is going to be a world of new and finer enthusiasm, a world of romance with more selflessness and less sordidness. Through its domain there will blow the winds of a finer freedom than we have ever known. Such a world will furnish congenial soil for religion. The Church it will create need not beg men to enter the ministry; they cannot resist its call. The Church, like the rest of the waiting world, can now perhaps do little other than stand expectant on the threshold of the new era and trust the Christ to care for His own.

Consolidating Parishes

WHEN we heard that the Old First church, the Madison Avenue church and the University Place church, the three Presbyterian churches most intimately bound up with the life of "old New York", had announced their intention to consolidate, to unite their services in the beautiful Gothic meeting-house of the Old First on Lower Fifth avenue, and to establish with their joint resources a great centre of institutional work in Greenwich Village, we turned to an editorial in THE CHURCHMAN written in October, 1890. At that time the brilliant young pastor of the Old First, the Rev. Mr. Harlan, after a brief ministry of four years, had resigned because there was no longer sufficient financial support to maintain that historic church in the Washington Square district recently deserted by the former residences. THE CHURCHMAN greatly deplored the "old, old story of the folly and wickedness of crowding superfluous denominational churches into wealthy neighborhoods" which results so often in abandoning the church when centres of population shift. Dr. Duffield succeeded Mr. Harlan, and through his efforts a modern endowment was established for the Old First. Meanwhile the Madison Avenue and the University Place churches were facing the same situation; three churches, with inadequate endowments, depleted congregations, and increased responsibilities towards their new neighbors.

Through the generosity and commonsense of the three congregations and of their three pastors, all of them venerable figures in the religious life of the city, a strong centre of Presbyterian life undoubtedly will soon be established at a strategic point, with ample resources and with a sufficient body of worshipers to insure vigorous and useful parish life.

Following the announcement of this probable consolidation, we hear that two Baptist churches in New York, the Collegiate Baptist church and the Covenant and Calvary Baptist church are likely to unite.

It is fitting that the Episcopal Church be very modest in offering its felicitations and counsel in these matters. We, too, have suffered woefully from statesmanship in the disposition of our churches. We have taken counsel of sentiment rather than common sense in maintaining in deserted neighborhoods three or four churches without any real parish. There is something very beautiful in the fine loyalty that has led a little group of parishioners to cling to their venerable houses of worship long after the needs of the neighborhood justify their existence. With urgent demands of the Church at home and abroad, would it not be better to surrender some of these cherished traditions and combine churches? The pride and sentiment that persists in the struggle for existence are pardonably human; but shall we ever be fitted to make the sacrifice of personal preference which Christian unity among different Communions will require of us unless we are ready in our own Communion to make some sacrifices in the interest of the larger good?

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Congratulations to the War Commission

AS we go to press a telegram from Bishop Perry announces that the $500,000 which the War Commission asked of the Church is assured. "We are unable to announce the total offering for the Church War Fund" it says. "On March 15 cash and pledges in hand and figures informally reported by many dioceses amount to over $500,000. Full receipts will be published soon."

This is indeed good news. Congratulations to the War Commission!

The Archbishop on Church Music

AFTER the service at the Cathedral on Sunday morning the Archbishop spoke a word, quite informally to the Cathedral choir in the vestry. He said that, during his ministerial career, he had had opportunities of hearing the singing of such well-known choirs as Leeds Parish Church, Magdalen College, Oxford, and above all St Paul's Cathedral in London, which they knew to be associated with the name of Dr. Stainer, whose Amen they had sung that morning. He expressed a particular gratification at having heard the Palestrina music which they had just sung in the Cathedral, and pointed out the danger of church music becoming merely sentimental. Such music as that of Palestrina gave just that touch of severity which was necessary, if the highest type of church music were to be attained.

The Third Collect for Good Friday

IT is obvious that no one is satisfied with the third Collect for Good Friday as it stands in the Prayer Book. The prayer proposed in substitution by the Joint Commission on Common Prayer somehow failed in the confusion to get through the House of Bishops. Last Good Friday a good many clergymen yielded to the temptation of taking the will for the deed; they read the beautiful prayer which we trust will ultimately find its way into our Prayer Book and which we publish below.

This year there are especial circumstances which make it hard to say the third Collect for Good Friday. We can scarcely conceive of our chaplain reading it in the camp where Jewish soldiers are among his hearers. It jars upon our ears to hear it read in any church where the congregation knows of the splendid work our Jewish fellow-citizens are doing for the Red Cross. Only the other day in New York City the Jews contributed over $15,000 to the great Catholic War Fund. Must we go on much longer linking the name Jew with that of Turk and infidels? With Armenia's crucifixion vivid in our memories the word Turk has a more revolting connotation than it has had for centuries. When it comes to a question of rubrics and Christian courtesy the legalist must we suppose, stand by the rubric.

Of course, we recognize that the juxtaposition of the words "Jew" and "Turk" does not imply that they are on a moral level. If the Jews were suddenly to start praying for Episcopalians, Turks and traitors, we should have no right, it is true, to draw any inference as to what place in the ethical scale the Episcopalian is assigned. But the matter would certainly cause discussion. It was a Jew the American Ambassador, let us remember, who pleaded in Constantinople with Christian Germany to use its influence with the Turks to spare Christian Armenia. The German Ambassador threatened to have Mr. Morgenthau recalled for his zeal. The latter's reply was: "If it is to go down into history that a Jew was deprived of his office for having interceded to save a Christian Nation, I should like to be that Jew."

The proposed prayer:

"O merciful God, Who hast made all men, and hatest nothing that Thou hast made, nor desireth the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be converted and live; Have mercy upon all who know Thee not as revealed in the Gospel of Thy Son; and take from them all ignorance, hardness of heart, and contempt of Thy Word; and so fetch them home, blessed Lord, to Thy fold, that they may be made one flock under one shepherd, Jesus Christ our Lord, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end.—Amen."

Litanies

IN The Church and the Furnace, containing essays written at the Front by seventeen Church of England chaplains, one of the most thought-provoking books issued thus far during the War, the Rev. E. Milnor-White in the essay on Worship and Services has said a word that ought to be of practical use to our clergy in their Holy Week services. The writer urges a wider use of popular litanies such as The Words of the Cross in our Hymnal, where the devotion is wholly or mainly evangelical "and the old familiar story breathes its meaning through our petition and relates itself to our needs big and little; the sight of God is constant through the speaking of our hopes and confessions; nay, God, Christ, constitutes our very devotion so that it all becomes an act of adoration and recollection and submission of self. Thus while the whole act proceeds from the heart and soul as well as from the mind of each of us, it also proceeds from the known desires and heart of Jesus, our Lord."

Our Lent services are so often monotonous; they make too high a draft upon the intelligence and they are not devotional. Consequently they do not appeal to what is childlike in all of us. Can we blame our tired working people for avoiding our night services? We have much to learn from the Roman Church in this regard. There are some churches in our own Communion that know what can be done with litanies. People love a tune and they love to sing responses on their knees. If the Church is to make a serious effort to reach the plain people, we shall have to take some starch out of our services and give a larger place to pure devotion.

On Singing

PEOPLE love to sing—provided they know the tune, or it might be more accurate to say provided they think they know the tune. How the congregations at our noonday services make the rafters shake when "Rock of Ages" or "Onward Christian Soldiers" is given out. The organist may shake his head sadly at both the type and quality of the music. But the Master must rejoice at the heartiness of the worship accorded Him.

This psychological fact, the love for singing that is instinct with most human beings, is one that is too little reckoned with by those who arrange services. Popular evangelists have never failed to make use of it. The half hour of hymn singing before Billy Sunday begins his sermon is probably more than half responsible for the success of the meeting.

We know of a certain city parish where the Lent Wednesday night service is preceded by fifteen minutes of singing. The choirmaster takes charge and, because of his enthusiasm and patience, that fifteen minutes sets the pace for the evening; the tired, sleepy men and women are roused to worship, their emotions are stirred and an atmosphere is created which makes them receptive to the teaching and devotional mood of the intercessions which follow.

Straws of Hope

IT is generally conceded that necessity is likely to become the mother of invention. We wonder, in grasping at straws of hope after reading Mr. Micou's alarming statistics on the seminaries and the ministry, whether some of these disturbing facts may not work together for good.

If there are not ministers enough to go round, not only in our own Communion but in others also, we must not forget that there are not enough parishioners, either. It is true that a group of Church people maintaining their parish church may have difficulty in finding a rector and curates; but in contemplating this gloomy fact we must not forget that the rector and curates when on the ground ready for duty cannot always find people who want their ministrations. Depleted Church attendance has made necessary an exhausting competition for congregations. In business, if customers fail, the shop closes. Congregations fail, but the churches keep open. Would it be a disaster if a considerable percentage of them did close? The question sounds cruel, but much of the popular enthusiasm for Church unity arises from just this kind of statistics or the wastefulness of the present system of competition; three churches are trying to exist where one could care for the people.

If the churches could get together, churches of different communions, we should have even now enough clergy and to spare. Perhaps parishioners would not get the coddling and pastoral attention they now receive. It is rather humiliating both to the laity and the clergy that so much coddling as now exists should be necessary. It could be forgone if the competition for parishioners should cease.

At any rate there might be a wholesome consolidation within each communion. It would not be hard to point out neighborhoods in New York City, for example, where three churches could become one with mutual advantage. This is true in many a city.

Women Protective Officers

IN his address to the Girls' Friendly Society and the Church Mission of Help, which was printed in full in the last issue, the Archbishop of York spoke with enthusiasm of the work done in London and in munition areas by the women-patrols, and "urged the two societies if opportunity presented to offer some of their members to do this most difficult and necessary work".

THE CHURCHMAN has followed with interest the splendid work these English women police officers have accomplished, and last Autumn warmly recommended the action of the New York Mayor's Committee of Women on National Defense in urging the appointment of women protective officers for the City of New York. Although as yet the city has made no provision for their support, several women privately supported have been doing a fine work in the districts where the need for them was the most acute. The Churchwomen's Club of New York pays the salary of the officer working on Staten Island.

THE CHURCHMAN hopes as soon as space will permit to publish an account of this work drawn from the experiences of a member of the staff who has worked closely with several of these officers.

Is This How We Feel?

TWENTY-SIX thousand one hundred and twenty-nine dollars and thirty cents less than the gifts of a year ago for a like period—this is the report of the treasurer of the Board of Missions issued on March 1. Including the gifts to the "One Day's Income Plan" the total receipts on the apportionment are $232,591, as against $258,720.30 for a like period in 1917.

Diocesan officers of the Woman's Auxiliary are anxiously taking counsel together over the report that comes in from parish after parish that Red Cross work is "making quite a difference with the Church work".

Does this express the measure of our Christianity?

We know it doesn't. No Christian wants missions to starve. He knows that the future of the world pivots absolutely upon teaching the Gospel of Christ. The War makes this clear. All the programs of reconstruction now in the air make it clear. If any organization in the Church can speak with sure conviction of its vocation, that organization is the Board of Missions.

MODERN PICTURES FROM THE OLD BOOK

A Lenten Series on Jesus' Parables

By THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

The Young Man Who Went Wrong

Scene Third: Home!

"And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!

"I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee,

"And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants.

"And he arose and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

"And the son said unto him, Father I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son.

"But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet:

"And bring hither the fatted calf and let us kill it; and let us eat and be merry:

"For this my son was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found. And they began to be merry."—St. Luke xv, 17-24.

THIS text divides itself very simply. It tells us first of the son coming to meet the father, and then of the father running to meet the son.

The former involved four things: Realization: "When he came to himself he said . . . I perish with hunger. . . . I have sinned." Resolution: "I will arise." Repentance: "And he arose and came to his father." Consecration to service: "Make me as one of thy hired servants." Four stages.

"I have sinned." I like that. There is no camouflage there; nothing fictitious. I read nothing of, "Yes, it is true that I have been a little wild—but—" Just plain speech; the speech of real conviction; "I have sinned."

Long before this his sin had found him out. Sooner or later it always does. But that is never enough. No hope there; only despair. That is simply the pagan Nemesis, which mercilessly tracks the culprit to his complete destruction. Here is a man who has found out his sin. Now there is hope. And there could never be any hope for him until he had; none for him; none for you. "I have sinned!" That is the first step.

And here is the second: Resolution to leave it. "I will—arise!" Have you ever noticed how frequently Jesus, before he performed one of his miracles, asked the man to be healed, "Wilt thou be made whole?" To one he said, "Take up thy bed and walk." Why he had not walked for years. But the first thing the Lord demanded of him if he would receive help was that he should exercise his will power. And when he did what he could, he found strength in making the effort. "He took up his bed and walked."

This is always one of the first steps in actual reform; and the Bible is full of it. Jesus was a wonderful psychologist. He knew the laws of mind. And so in this story of one on the way home, he represents him at the very beginning, saying "I WILL!" The time at last had come when the boy realized that there was only one place in all the universe where he could find help and restoration to his manhood, and that was in the bosom of his father. And therefore there was no such impotent patter as we sometimes hear, "O, if I only could!" He said, "I WILL!" When Alexander the Great was asked how he had won his battles, he answered, "By never wavering". In this parable is a man who not only feels that something must be done. He does it.

"He arose and came to his father." He turned his face toward his father and his back toward the swine. That is repentance, and there is no repentance without it. Repentance is to right about face. Repentance is to not do so any more; or in the rough and ready words of the Rev. Sam Jones, which are more pungent than polite but absolutely true, "Repentance is to quit your meanness". For while the son brought home with him nothing good—only rags and hunger and poverty—he brought home with him nothing bad. He left that in the Far Country. He could not go toward his father without going from his sin. Neither can you. But it need not take long. It does not take long to turn round. Then followed a desire to serve. It always does, else the repentance is not real. "Make me as one of thy hired servants."

But how can I describe the marvelous picture of the father's welcome home! Many times, at morning and at sundown, he had stood with tear-dimmed eyes, gazing up the road longing for the wanderer's return. At last, one evening he stands there looking along the way in which, long ago, he had seen him depart. He remembers just how he looked, and he wonders, with a great ache in his heart, what has become of him. O how he pities him; yes, and wayward though he was, how he loves him!

And on this evening, just as the sun is going down, in the dim distance, he sees a worn and tired and dust-covered traveler. Weak from want and weariness he comes slowly, leaning heavily upon the stick with which he supports his faltering steps.

Others would not know him. But he knows him. And he cries, "There's my boy!" And, forgetting his old age, throwing to the winds any sense of dignity, he runs to meet him. No word of reproach or chiding. He falls on his neck and kisses away the tears of penitence which begin to course down the young man's cheek, and he cries, "My son was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found!"

The son did not come to the father. He meant to come. He started to come. But the most he could do was to come toward the father; and that is the word in the Greek. The father came to him. "When he was yet a great way off, the father saw him, and had compassion on him and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him." When you, sorrowing and sinful, start to go to God, God starts to come to you. And He comes more swiftly than you can. The son walked. The father "ran".

And the boy, raising his eyes, begins the prayer which he had already rehearsed, "O my father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight and am no more worthy to be called thy son". And the father cuts his prayer in two. Read the account and you will find that that prayer was never finished. He never had a chance to ask that he might be only a servant.

Now they are coming up the familiar walk of the old home where he had played in his childhood, and the attendants come out, and the father cries, "Away with these rags! Put on the best robe. Put sandals on his washed and way-worn feet. Put the ring on his hand, such as only free men wear. Kill the fatted calf and let us make merry; for my boy has come back!" You notice that he gave him the very best of everything he had; and that is God's way with the penitent.

O, there is no being in the universe so sorry for you when you go wrong as God; neither father nor mother nor wife nor anyone. None so ready to welcome you back. Then, if you have been a wanderer, come, in prayer and penitence, to your Father. Do not wait any longer. Come saying, "I have sinned, and I am sorry and I want to be thy child again". That will be enough. And the everlasting arms will encircle you. And the everlasting love will uphold you; and that love will bring you home.

*Will the gentleman who wrote me from Toronto, concerning the sermon, To Love Greatly Is to Live Greatly, kindly send me again his address? I wish to reply to his gracious letter, which unfortunately has been mislaid. —G. T. D.

Divine Benevolence and Human Sorrow

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

IN a previous article we took note of the fact that in recent years attention has been concentrated on the problem of human suffering as constituting an indictment of the goodness of God. It was one of the principal themes of the Victorian poets, for instance, thereby reflecting the mind of the latter half of the nineteenth century. The very phrase "Nature red in tooth and claw", which has passed into popular speech as the summation of man's doubt of divine benevolence in face of cosmic cruelty, is Tennyson's. Where he got it is plain enough; it was the outcome of Darwinism, or rather of the new and more thorough acquaintance with the processes of creation which marked the explosive rise of modern science in the period in question. We suddenly learned that these processes were anything but "very good" as our fathers had been taught to believe, and that the world

> Where every prospect pleases had no real existence save in the pious imagination. The formula "the survival of the fittest", which chiefly characterized this new epoch, had a sinister ring; if this indeed were the explanation of the origin of species then little or no room was left for belief in heavenly governance of things earthly. Evolution, that blessed word, was made to explain everything whereas it explains nothing. Pessimism and agnosticism, which almost imply each other—the latter term the invention of the most typical man of science of the age—became militant and aggressive in regard to revealed religion. There was no sadder story, said Professor Huxley, than the story of the long drawn-out anguish of sentient life upon this planet. From its very beginning, so far as science could trace them, it had been much the same—battle, terror, rage and slaughter, tragic waste and foul disease, not to speak of the thousand other ills that attend the struggle for existence.

Haeckel's "Riddle of the Universe", which ran into a circulation of millions and was devoured by the youth of three continents, was but one example out of many of the new challenge to Christianity on humanitarian grounds. It represented the reasoning of the biologist turned philosopher and has done incalculable harm, but not more perhaps than would have been done anyhow. People at large were bound to awaken to the discovery that this earth was not and never had been, so far as we could learn its past, the dwelling place of peace and joy; it had been the scene of misery and death all along, and, whether or not men were to blame for this through some aboriginal moral calamity, it was clear that human and sub-human had to suffer alike—no, not quite alike, for the higher any creature rose in the scale of being the more was it exposed to the assaults of pain and sorrow. The nobler we are, the more deeply we feel; the more developed the finer faculties of our nature, the more susceptible we become to griefs of which the lower animals know nothing. Hence the angry and scornful repudiation of the central Christian tenet of a God of love and righteousness who was ultimately responsible for this bewildering medley of a world. Men like Swinburne and James Thomson interpreted the feelings of thousands when in the spirit of Lucretius they championed the cause of humanity against God. In the "City of Dreadful Night" this protest found pungent expression:

> Who is most wretched in this dolorous place?
> I think myself, yet I would rather be > My miserable self than He, than He
> Who formed such creatures to His own disgrace,
> No, not for all thy power, furl'd and unfurl'd,
> For all the Temples to thy glory built,
> Would I assume the ignominious guilt
> Of having made such men in such a world.

In other words, God is unthinkable, for if He existed His is the crime of having allowed creation to welter in blood and strife through unnumbered ages.

Once more the same cry is being heard, the cry of despairing nescience, the agonized protest of the soul against things as they are. The careless optimism of luxurious years has been mocked by horrific events; the unfaith whose root was self-indulgence has been eclipsed by an unfaith born of loss of vision. Haeckel has voiced it again in declaring some months ago that if there were a single intelligent being left on earth who could believe in the overruling providence of God after the nightmare of the present world-struggle, he must be a curious and isolated phenomenon. Bleeding hearts innumerable would fain prove him wrong, but how? Potentates prate of God as on their side in this devilish business, but there is little or no sign that their professed belief affects the practice of statesmanship anywhere. In talking of the issue of the War do we seriously think of God as the principal factor to be reckoned with; dare we?

Here is the real crux of the matter. True faith does not challenge God in this way, yet never for a moment does it lose sight of His will as the one deciding force in every clash of events, great or small, though his ultimate ends be hidden from us. Behind the Kaiser and von Hindenburg, behind the Russian revolution and the American entry into the War, behind British aims for a just peace, behind all the turmoil and upheaval of the age "standeth God within the shadow keeping watch above His own". His thoughts are not our thoughts, nor His ways our ways. He has a purpose in the permission of all this lust of destruction which we are not yet fitted to grace. "He maketh even the wrath of men to praise Him." What justification is there for assuming that it is God's business to keep the world clear of pain; why should that be made the test of divine benevolence? Granted that in an ideal world there will be no pain, it still remains true that in a world where souls are being grown, a world which is the scene of discipline and probation, pain is the necessary accompaniment of every spiritual throe. We cannot escape it; as has been finely said, the sign of the cross is over all creation—no heightening of life without pain. It is futile to charge deity with having blundered because we suffer, or to say that earthly suffering is a proof that there is no heaven to care what becomes of us. History demonstrates the exact contrary; the greater the demand upon our moral resources the higher the reach of the soul; without pain there could speedily be moral death but there certainly could not be, until the goal of all spiritual effort is attained, the manifestation of divinest life. The will of God cannot be other than accordant with the essential nature of things, and it is in the essential nature of things —not simply by tragic accident or blind fate—that sacrifice should be the condition of self-realization and that through the fires of sorrow and the waters of affliction we pass to everlasting joys.

"FOR the proudly guarded lips,
Streets where men nor strive nor cry,
For the armies and the ships,
Youth and laughing chivalry.
For the things that shall be won,
Clean and splendid from the flame,
For the brave new life begun,
Blessed Thy holy Name!

They shall see who are unborn,
That remote, resplendent thing,
Of the which, forespent and torn,
All the world is travailing.
Lift your hearts above the years,
Thank our Lord not once or twice,
For the horror and the tears,
Bitterness and sacrifice."—J. S.

A Symposium: "On Training the Clergy"

THE CHURCHMAN has asked some of our educators to state their opinion of Dr. Peters' suggestion, in his recent article on theological education, that the theological school and the university be brought into a closer affiliation than now exists. We are glad to present in this issue of THE CHURCHMAN the views of Dean Hodges, President Lowell and Dean Fosbroke.—The Editors.

Dean Hodges

The theological school belongs with the law school and the medical school. They were all developed out of informal methods of private instruction, and they all represent alike a sense of the need of technical training.

I am in such sympathy with Dr. Peters' main contention that I hesitate to criticise any detail of it, but I do not believe that it would be good for the progress of medicine to change the medical schools into "halls or colleges", in the neighborhood of universities, "with a view to the training not only of the (doctors) but of the laymen"; and so with the law schools; and so with the divinity schools. I fear that the effect would be to lower the standard of instruction. It was said of a lord chancellor that he knew a little of everything—even of law. The theological graduates of these university annexes might know a little of everything—even of theology.

It is a great help to a divinity school to be beside a university; we know that here in Cambridge, by daily experience; but the time which is required for specialized professional training leaves little opportunity for courses whose purpose is general culture. Such courses must be taken before the technical study begins. A university may provide for instruction in general history, in philosophy, in ethics, especially social ethics, and in educational methods; and may thus relieve the theological school of the necessity to maintain chairs in these departments. Most advantageous is a combination of theological schools, where such may be had, thus enabling students to avail themselves of the services of a number of scholars. Even so, we find in Cambridge, with all our university opportunities, and with unusual privileges of combination with other professional schools, that the chief emphasis must be placed upon the purpose to provide within the school itself all the essential instruction needed to prepare men for the ministry. The professional school profits much by being connected with a university, but it ought to be more independently equipped for technical training than Dr. Peters seems to desire.

President Lowell

You ask me to express an opinion upon the affiliation of theological schools with universities, and I comply gladly, for the subject is both interesting and important. It will be remembered that one of the principal objects of the founders of the oldest university in North America was the training of an educated clergy, "to advance Learning and perpetuate it to Posterity; dreading to leave an illiterate Ministry to the Churches when our present Ministers shall lie in the Dust".

No one would venture to doubt that, in accordance with the tradition inherited from the mediaeval universities, the Christian ministry should be regarded as one of the learned professions; and therefore, as in the case of other learned professions, the training for it is appropriately given in the atmosphere of learning to be found in a university. With the expanding sphere of knowledge, the fluidity of thought, and the restless activity that mark our era this is, perhaps, even more important than ever before. The training of the clergyman should fit him to carry on his work in the existing social and intellectual condition of the world. He should be familiar with ethical and economic problems, and with the current of the scholarly thought of his day. If he does not understand these problems he will appear ignorant and unconvincing to those of his hearers who do understand them; and if unversed in the prevailing trend of ideas he will be an imperfect guide to his flock, unable to prepare them against the sophistries into which a superficial contact with modern thought is sure to lead the more unstable among them. This is no idle fear. It is a fact, often seen clearly in the pew if not always in the pulpit.

To separate schools of theology from universities injures the former by giving the impression that their students must be protected from the fierce light that pulsates in a great centre of learning; and it injures the university by giving the impression that scholarship is in some way inconsistent with religion.

People who feel the force of these arguments may, nevertheless, point out that in fact the clergy of each denomination is engaged in a distinct profession, which does not exist in the case of law, medicine, or engineering. It is certainly true that a clergyman has open to him a career only in his own church, and that may or may not be an objection to a single university school which attempts to train students for different churches; but it is not a reason for objecting to the affiliation with a university of schools connected with the various Christian bodies. The effect of bringing the theological schools of different religious organizations together is to discover that the supposed divergence in the opinions of their instructors is not so wide as is commonly supposed—surely no great injury to any of them, and still less to Christian religion.

Of the subjects taught in a university, which are, or ought to be, taught in a school of theology, some have obviously no sectarian bearing. Such are Hebrew, Greek and Social Welfare. Others like Exegesis, Jewish and Christian History and Homiletics ought to have no denominational tendency if properly taught; and do not in our best divinity schools and universities. If a university aimed at inculcating an identity of thought among its students the case would be different. Its object, however, is not to produce men with uniform opinions, but to stimulate the habit of careful and accurate thought, the love of learning and a desire to discover truth. It so happens that at Harvard, besides our Divinity School which is unsectarian, we have now affiliations with Andover Theological Seminary, which is Congregationalist; with the Episcopal Theological School, with the Boston University School of Theology, which is Methodist, and with the Newton Theological School, which is Baptist; and there has been no attempt, or suggestion of an attempt, to influence the administration, discipline or tenets of any of these institutions, or to draw them in any way toward a single pattern or tone of thought.

Dean Fosbroke

I hardly know what to say about your suggestion that I should write about Dr. Peters' idea of linking up the divinity school with the university. In principle, my mind goes entirely with his, and I find myself wishing again and again that this seminary were close to Columbia. But practically we are committed by our title deeds to our present site, to say nothing of the large sums of money involved in our present buildings. Add to this the hallowed associations of the long tradition which cannot be lightly set aside and the difficulty of even contemplating a change is overwhelming. Of course, something may be said for the present situation. Here in New York, at any rate, there is and can be very little segregation of the students. Many of them are taking courses at the University. Nor will it ever be possible for a university to take over, as Dr. Peters seems to think, much of the actual preparation for the ministry. Dislike the term professional as we may in connection with the ministry, there must always be a special and peculiar approach to the subject matter for those who are dedicating their whole lives to its propagation. Dr. Peters would admit, I am sure, that courses in the Bible, which should meet the need of college students, would by no means be adequate for those who expect to find in the Bible the very source and inspiration of their life's work and their power to help others. Splendid too as in prospect might be the effect of the contact between theological students and the rest of the university, it is not (Continued on page 392

The Upper Room

By THE REV. WM. AUSTIN SMITH

THE eyes of Christendom will be turned on Maundy Thursday towards that Upper Chamber in Jerusalem. It is a familiar place to Christians; for since we were little children we have been accustomed to see that room through the eyes of Da Vinci. That Upper Chamber makes heaven and earth seem very close together today. The intimacy of the Son of Man with His disciples, the calm before the storm of tomorrow, the Master's Intercessory Prayer, the Sacrament of friendship—there if anywhere on earth we find communion with God. In one sense it was the first Holy Communion in the world.

There is a world old family custom of having strong boxes where we keep secure from thief and fire our keepsakes and precious possessions. Into those strong boxes are put the things of which we cannot afford to risk the loss. They belong among our dearest heirlooms. Life would go badly with us, were harm to come to the precious things which we guard there under lock and key.

So must every life have its secure upper room in the soul where we may guard certain treasures that we reckon among our spiritual necessaries. It goes badly with life when harm comes to the sacred things we put there.

Very briefly, as we meet for our Communion on Thursday of Holy Week, let us say over to ourselves the things which belong in that Upper Room whose windows look out towards heaven.

I

In the first place, there is one thing that we must not have there—I mean controversy.

Whenever we think of the last Thursday night that Christ spent with His disciples, we feel a refreshing peacefulness possessing the place and the hour: there was no controversy; it was a time of communion. And yet no institution in history has given rise to more bitter words than that simple act when Jesus with His disciples at the table, took bread and brake it and said: "This do in remembrance of me".

Think of the thousands of volumes that have been written upon the meaning of that simple act, the edicts of councils, the splitting of Christendom into warring sects. But there is no room for any rancour in the Upper Chamber; these difficulties must all be settled outside the door. You cannot commune with God while you are battling with your brother over knotty problems of the religious life. If our spiritual life is to be kept wholesome, there must be some clear, light upper room in the soul where the air is never tainted by controversy.

Arguing about religion is not religion. We must sometimes do battle for the Faith. We have our doubts always; but there has got to be a shrine somewhere in our lives where we shut the door upon argument and where doubt does not enter. Inside that door, we say: I believe". There we find our trysting place with God.

When I think of that Upper Chamber, I see a Towel, see a Table and I see a Chalice. One word about each of these; for they symbolize three precious convictions that we must guard in that Upper Room where the air we breathe and the thoughts we think bring power and peace into our life.

II

When the Master on that last Thursday night girded himself with a towel and washed the feet of His friends, He must have known that He was performing a solemnly symbolic act. We are told that the King of Spain and it is a custom the Emperor of Russia once shared) follows in outward form today the Master's example. With splendid ceremony and kingly pomp he stoops to bathe the feet of some poor pensioners of the crown. Yet that, as it seems to me, does not mean very much. But if any man today, be he king or servant, believes in his innermost heart that the most kingly thing that he can do with his life is to help people, to be of use in the world, then I know that the spirit of the Master has entered his soul.

Being a Christian is a tremendous thing! The more we live, the larger seem to us its obligations. There is at least one offering that we must, as Christians, bring to God—we must have helped somebody, we must be of use in the world. Let the cynic tonight, the egotist, the self-centered and complacent open the door that leads into the Upper Room. Christ will give them the towel of humble service.

III

And then I see a table where friends meet. How large a part friendship has played in saving the world! Life is getting saved today by what Jesus let friendship mean.

We show our best to our friends; but we also, sometimes, show our worst. They are likely to know us pretty much as we are. The little circle of men and women with whom we live day by day under the same roof, in neighboring streets, in society, are those who feel the sting of our littleness. Our envy, if we have it, they know; our selfishness, they feel; whatever smallness we shelter in our hearts, bruises and soils life within that little circle of human beings whom God gave us to live with.

It is a terrible thing ever to disappoint the love that somebody bears us; it is a form of murder never punished by the law.

You recall that terrible poem written in prison by a man of genius. The poem was suggested by the execution of a fellow prisoner who had killed the woman whom he loved. But its bitter power was inspired by the tragic experiences of the poet's life.

"And all men kill the thing they love—
By all let this be known—
Some do it by a bitter look,
Some with a flattering word—
The coward does it with a kiss,
The brave man with a sword.

"Some kill their love when they are young,
And some when they are old,
Some strangle with the hands of lust,
Some with the hands of gold.

"Some love too little, some too long,
Some sell and others buy,
Some do their deeds with many tears,
And some without a sigh.
For each man kills the thing he loves."

It would be cynical for us to believe that last line; yet many and many a man has truly killed the thing he loves—spoiled the life of somebody near and dear to him; disappointed the love of those who honored him; took a vision of his early life with the face of Christ shining in it and dragged it in the dust. Yet all the while what he really loves is the things that are pure and beautiful. Oh, the pity, the tragic pity of killing what we love!

When Jesus in that solemn moment on Thursday night said: "This do in remembrance of me", He had no bitter fear that any act of His or word or thought would soil the memory of that friendship.

Life means service; it means the going out to help the wretched and the lost; but it also means so living day by day with our friends that we create clean memories as we go along. No creed that we say or service that we can do, compensate for the lost opportunities of creating a little heaven around us as we live. Modern life seems destined to leave little time for the leisurely courtesies, the quiet hours for living richly with those we love. We are, all of us, so very, very busy.

A Holy Week Meditation

By MARIAN DeC. WARD

IN these days much is being said and written about prayer. Prayer in all its aspects is examined, questioned and discussed—its parts, its difficulties, its uses and its effects being considered separately and analytically. Let us, for a few moments, think of it as a whole, especially as an offering. Our offering to the Father, in the Son, by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Every prayer should be a complete offering, an offering of the entire self, to be used by God in relation to the object or subject of our prayer. For instance, if we pray for our friends our prayer should be not only a complete offering of them to God, but also of our own self to be used by Him for them. We need not fear to offer so much. God knows what part of our offering to use for one friend and what to reserve for others. He will not claim for each one more than is right—more time, or strength, or thought, or love. He knows infinitely better than we do what proportion of our gift is needed for any one person. Nor need we feel any feverish eagerness to do it all ourselves. Often and often He does not, in His wisdom, will us to give or to do for our friends all that we would gladly spend on them. We pray, and rightly, that we may "do all such good works as Thou hast prepared for us to walk in". There are many other good works, but they are not prepared by God for us, and we may not in nervous haste try to walk in them. He will accept from us that which He needs, and He will find in us far more than we are conscious of possessing or of offering. And His taking is His giving. "All that we have, He takes: all that He has, He gives." Where God is, there can be no loss.

And what is true of intercessory prayer—prayer for a friend, for missions, for peace, for unity, and so forth—is equally true of other forms of prayer. Every confession of sin should include, although not necessarily express, confession also of sinfulness; every petition for self should imply complete self-surrender; all praise should mean giving thanks with every member that we have. Does not the beautiful old story of Abraham and Isaac help us here? Abraham offered his all: God accepted the spirit of the offering and took that part which He required, which was Abraham's obedience and faith, but gave Isaac back into his father's arms. And because Abraham's offering was so complete, God could in him bless all nations of the earth and make him the human ancestor of the Divine Christ. As to God's own giving, of that we can only say with St. Paul, "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?"

But how can we, unworthy as we are, make any offering to the Most High God—to Him Who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity? No man may see God and live. How can we hope to draw near to Him, to offer Him our prayers, so ignorant, so halting, so impure? There is only one answer to that question, only one way in which it is possible, and that way is Christ. In Him alone can we venture to approach the throne of the Transcendent God—the God of a love so burning, so intense, that we, with our little ideas of love as a good-natured, kindly affection, cannot grasp its reality. We speak of our Lord as praying often. Indeed, He prayed often: we may truly say of Him that His frequent and fervent prayers were the natural and essential expression of a life that was itself a prayer, with the Cross as its culmination and the Resurrection—perhaps better the Ascension—as its doxology. In one of Father Waggett's most helpful addresses he calls Lent a long prayer—Holy Week a long prayer—Good Friday the climax of a meditation. Bu with Christ His whole life was the prayer, so marvelousl epitomized in the High Priestly Prayer at the Last Sup per. And the whole prayer of His life was an offerin to the Father, so that He could say at the end, "It is fi ished". Our Lord's Amen to the prayer of His earth life.

The sacrifice was made on the Cross, once for all; th offering of the life continues, offered eternally by ou great High Priest, Who, by His own blood entered once into the Holy Place and Who now liveth to mak intercession for us. And it is in His offering of lif His intercession for us, that our poor prayers are mad worthy to be presented at the throne of God amid th worship of all the heavenly throng—angels and arch angels and all the company of heaven. They are still ou prayers. They do not lose their identity any more tha we shall lose ours when, saved by His Blood, His Lif we too enter into the heavenly places. But they a cleansed and made fit for the Father, Whose loving hea so yearns for the prayers of His children who turn Him. So the offering is made, and so it is accepted.

But something else is necessary, something in us th responds to the love of God. We can only do our part b the power of the Holy Spirit, "whereby we cry Abb Father". "The Spirit also helpeth our infirmity; for w know not how to pray as we ought, but the Spirit Hi self maketh intercession for us, with groanings whi cannot be uttered." Could there be a more marvelo description of the work of the Holy Spirit for us? a not only for us but in us? "If any man have not t Spirit of Christ, he is none of His," says St. Paul. E the Spirit desires to dwell in our hearts, to rule our affe tions, to control our wills, and we are helpless withc Him. Not to be without wills, but to have the will o with God's Will: a strong, consecrated will, working w God, merged in His Will, is our need. It is as necessa to consecrate the will as to consecrate time, or money, any other gift. "Our wills are ours to make them Thin and it is through the Holy Spirit that they can be sanc fied and made His. We should do well if we pray oftener to the Holy Spirit. It would deepen in us sense of His Personal Nature at a time when to so ma He seems to be only a gracious influence, and more th that, it would help to release the power of the Godhe working through the Spirit upon the hearts of men.

It is a little dangerous to press too far the distinctio between the functions of the Three Persons in Blessed Trinity. We teach children in the Catechism say, "First, I learn to believe in God the Father, W hath made me and all the world; secondly, in God Son, Who hath redeemed me and all mankind; third in God the Holy Ghost, Who sanctified me and all people of God". It is perfectly true. But while we lieve that the Father created the world, we also know the Son that without Him was not anything made t was made, and of the Holy Ghost we rightly speak the Lord and Giver of Life. And this is because Three Persons are the One God. Where the Son is, th is the Father, and there the Holy Spirit. And yet, can say with all reverence that the Father listens to prayer, Jesus Christ prays for us, and the Holy Sp prays in us. If we yield our hearts unreservedly to action of the Holy Spirit, by His power in us we sh pray in Christ's Name such prayers as our Heave Father loves to hear.

To the Church, of course, Holy Communion is highest example of prayer as an offering, and the Eas Communion is our most glorious opportunity. The l prayer of Lent, the intensive prayer of Holy Week, climax of Good Friday, lead us along the sacred way the wonderful glory of Easter Day. "It is Christ t died, yea rather, that is risen again, Who is even at Right Hand of God, Who also maketh intercession us." His perfect offering of His own life gathers up

Note.—This little "meditation" was originally given as part of a devotional service and was preceded by other exercises. In making use of it alone the following brief introductory service may be found suitable: I Thessalonians v 16, 17, 18; Nicene Creed; St. John xvii; Collect, Trinity Sunday; Collect, The Annunciation; Collect, Seventh Sunday after Trinity.

fferings—our prayers, our study, our work, our gifts, ur lives, body, soul and spirit—and presents them with lis before the throne of God. And let us remember once gain that God's taking is God's giving. In His accept- nce of our offerings He bestows upon us that very recious gift which we receive in Holy Communion, that, [e dwelling in us and we in Him, we may be made per- ect in Him. So only it can be done, and so it is done. 'hanks be to God!

Words do not follow us there. No human language vails. There are two phases of prayer in which language ails us. One is the approach of the little child to God; ie simple faith, the unquestioning confidence that He will ear and act, the sense of His loving presence, felt so ng before any technical name can be given to it, but hich must surely have been in our Lord's mind when [e said, "Except ye become as little children". And the ther is when we reach out beyond words and phrases ito the heavenly places in Christ in Communion—that anscendent communion which is a foretaste of heaven self. Here again, and more manifestly, human language ails us. But there is a heavenly language, in which our eacher is God the Holy Ghost, and of that language we ready know the one supreme Word—Jesus.

Let us hold this Word in our hearts as we kneel to- ether in His presence.

(All Kneeling)

Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and today, and for- er.

Thou shalt call His Name Jesus, for He shall save is people from their sins.

For there is none other Name under heaven given nong men, whereby we must be saved.

Jesus said, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no an cometh unto the Father but by Me.

And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me.

Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man ar My voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, id will sup with him, and he with Me.

Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

For through Him we have access by one Spirit unto e Father.

Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith.

Praying For Our Enemies

By HOPE LAWRENCE

HOLY Week has come, when we enter into the sufferings of Christ, the misunderstanding of His mission and life by men, His friends and His enemies.

He taught us to pray for our enemies even in the last hours on the Cross, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do".

Are we using one of the most powerful means we have to bring about victory and peace on a sure foundation? Are we praying for our enemies, a change of mind and heart? Until they change can we hope for a lasting peace?

As I have been traveling in the United States and Canada and attending different churches I have heard in only one or two churches a direct prayer for our enemies. May we not in Holy Week and afterwards make a special effort to do so?

For our Enemies: "Blessed Lord, who hast taught us to love our enemies and to do good to those that hate us, teach us to pray as Thou hast commanded for those who despitefully use us. Have mercy upon them even as we pray Thee to have mercy upon us. Forgive their sins and turn their hearts to Thee, and grant to them and to us such purity of motive, such mutual understanding and zeal for justice that righteousness and peace may be established on sure foundations. All which we ask in Thy name, wherein alone true brotherhood is found, who art, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end." Amen.

The Upper Room

few months in which to save the world. Yet His life is a continuous record of beautiful friendships and tender associations. He found time in which to live in gentle dignity. When He had gone, they thought of Him, not as God, but as a wonderful friend.

So let us keep a table in the Upper Room of our souls, where friendship gathers the memories that we want linked to our names when we are gone.

IV

Lastly, there is the Chalice, symbolizing communion with God. Tennyson once said that when he was fretting over trifles and when life was in danger of losing its proportion, he would go out and look up at the stars.

Communicants need not be reminded that life must have its Upper Room where, in quiet, we can steady the tumult in our hearts by the contemplation of certain spiritual truths. There is not an hour in the day—be it an hour of trouble, of anxiety or ecstatic happiness—when we can afford to forget God's love, God's gift of immortality, God's ownership of the world.

To behold the bigness of these mysteries is like looking up at the stars. At the Table of Our Lord we find these truths incarnate.

The Towel, the Table, the Chalice—service, fellowship, communion with God, these will make our Upper Room seem like a room in heaven.

Prayer for the Dedication of a Service Flag

ALMIGHTY GOD, Who telleth the number of the stars, and calleth them all by their names; accept at our hands, we pray Thee, this flag, as the pledge of our devotion to the cause of liberty, and as the sign of the constancy and valor of our sons; that it may ever remind us of the sacrifice by which alone the world can be redeemed, and which was manifested in Thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

"SO nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When Duty whispers low, 'Thou must',
The youth replies, 'I can'!"

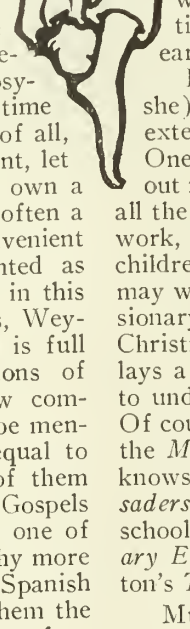
Lenten Reading

By Adelaide Teague Case



THE science of religious education is a mushroom growth. Yesterday Sunday school teachers were expected to read little or nothing besides their Bibles and the "lesson leaflets" or "quarterlies". But now, when religious educators are claiming for themselves the whole field of human knowledge and experience, a new danger appears—that our Church school teachers (of course no one says Sunday school any more!) having become experts in philanthropy and sociology, in psychology and pedagogy, will become at the same time totally ignorant of the Holy Scriptures. So, first of all, for reading both in Lent and before and after Lent, let us take the Bible itself. Every teacher ought to own a copy of Moulton's Modern Reader's Bible. It is often a help to study a book at a time in one of the convenient small volumes, with running commentaries printed as foot notes; The New Century Bible is published in this form. Distasteful as it sometimes is to our ears, Weymouth's The New Testament in Modern Speech is full of suggestions for new and vital interpretations of familiar passages. Kent's Historical Bible, now completed through the New Testament, need hardly be mentioned. Most Church school teachers are not equal to the Hebrew of the Old Testament, but many of them are able to find fresh inspiration in reading the Gospels and Epistles in Greek, in Latin, or better still in one of our modern languages. I have often wondered why more people do not take their French or German or Spanish testaments to Church with them and follow in them the reading of the lessons—to which I suspect most of us pay but scant attention.

Books of Bible stories are apt to be dangerous. Only a very few can be recommended without hesitation. Perhaps the best ones for the Sunday school teacher are Dean Hodges' The Garden of Eden and When the King Came. No one who is to teach the story of the Good Samaritan, for instance, is so richly prepared for her class as she who has been able to read Dean Hodges' version of it.

Teachers of primary and kindergarten grades ought to be familiar with the art of story telling. There are no better handbooks than St. John's Stories and Story Telling and Sarah Cone Bryant's How to Tell Stories to Children. They help us to know a good story when we see it, to choose the right stories for children of different ages, and to know and use the rules—and tricks—of the trade. Other books on story telling which contain some excellent material are Cowles' The Art of Story Telling, Some Great Stories and How to Tell Them, by Richard Wyche, president of the National Story Tellers' League, and Miss Marie Shedlock's two recent books. If the story teller is able to start a library of her own, she will be sure that it contains such standard collections as The Jungle Books, Hawthorne's Wonder Book, some of Howard Pyle's stories, and Laura E. Richards' Golden Windows and The Silver Crown. She ought also to know well the admirable school readers for moral and religious education edited by Professor Sneath and Dean Hodges in two graded sets, The Golden Rule Series and The King's Highway Series. What child could resist The Golden Ladder Book, for instance, or The Golden Key Book, The Way of the Green Pastures, and The Way of the Stars!

Surely nothing helps us to come so near to the interests of our children as to know and love the very same stories that they know and love. Heaven speed the day when our Sunday school teachers will spend at least one of their week-day afternoons a month in the children's rooms of our public libraries, companioning with the eternal friends of childhood! If, in addition to this, we feel drawn to read some books on child psychology, we can not do better than begin with Kirkpatrick's new but already standard work, The Individual in the Making. It is full of concrete illustrations and while it is sufficiently theoretical, it is at the same time less difficult for the average teacher than his earlier book, The Fundamentals of Child Study.

Before she knows it (alas! one instinctively says she) the Church school teacher finds her interests extending far beyond the sphere of her class sessions. One can not teach the Christian Nurture Series without more or less unconsciously becoming eager to know all the opportunities for Christian service, for missionary work, for recreational activities, that are open to the children of the Church. The members of our Communion may well be proud of our realization of the value of missionary education as a part of the equipment of every Christian, demonstrated in "The New Junior Plan". This lays a solemn obligation on every Church school teacher to understand and to take part in the Church's Mission. Of course she subscribes to The Spirit of Missions and to the Missionary Magazine of the Young Churchman and knows The Junior Book and The Making of Modern Crusaders. Two other new books on missions and the Church school deserve to be widely read: Diffendorfer's Missionary Education in Home and School and Gertrude Hutton's The Missionary Education of Juniors.

Much needs yet to be done to suggest constructive programs for the Church school's contribution to social service work. This whole field remains largely untouched. Mr. Hutchins in his Graded Social Service in the Sunday School has made a brave attempt. He is a pioneer breaking ground in a region where he is sure to have many followers.

The whole subject of recreation is quite as vital and somewhat less difficult. From time immemorial our Sunday schools have had their Christmas parties and annual picnics. And where is the teacher who will not vouch for the religious value of the class party, the kind of party where the tail is pinned on the donkey, and ice cream and cake are consumed in large quantities! Undirected class conversation invariably turns to the movies. Clearly we must know how our children play in order to help them to live their whole lives as children of God. Gates' book, Recreation and the Church, will be found most illuminative and comprehensive. One might here mention that very significant study by Jane Addams, The Spirit of Youth and the City Streets; also Johnson's Education by Plays and Games, and Cowter's The Play Movement and its Significance. A number of games that can be used at parties and in the playground are found in Jessie Bancroft's Games for the Playground, Home, School, and Gymnasium.

There will always be some teachers who are interested in the whole field of religious education. The bi-monthly magazine, Religious Education, will keep them in constant touch with practically all the main currents of thought. Professor Athearn in his Religious Education and American Democracy and Dr. Winchester in Religious Education and Democracy give an unusually clear survey of the field. We can be grateful to the latter for clearing up so completely the whole matter of the "Gary plan". Undoubtedly the most notable book on religious education published recently is Dr. Coe's The Social Theory of Religious Education.

Church Usage

By PASTOR IN URBE

VI—At a Funeral

AT a funeral a rector will naturally wish to do all that is possible to comfort the bereaved. To this end he will gladly do everything which the laws and established customs of the Church allow him to do in meeting the desires of those who ask him to do this or that. At the same time, the long experience of the Church is quite likely to know what will best minister to the sustaining of the human spirit in its bitter hour, and the mourner will wisely follow the rector's advice. For example, the minister should not be asked to read any hymns or poem not contained in the hymnal. At such a time the familiar words are sure to give the deepest comfort.

When possible a funeral should be in the church. The church and the clergyman are absolutely free at such a time, and all that they can do is too little: the mourner need have no sense of obligation, except that of gratitude, for the consolation which the Church of Christ would bring to every afflicted household. Besides the dignity which is added by a service in the church, there is the protection of the formal place: a funeral in church intrudes less upon the grief of the relatives than a funeral in a house.

No arrangements should be made till the rector has been consulted. He has many duties; and though his first duty at such a moment is the ministry to the sorrowing family, it is right that he be allowed to confer upon the exact hour which will permit him to do all the work which the week may demand of him. He will also talk over the hymns (if there be any) which will be suitable, and make any suggestions which may help. The great hymns are always best. [If there is any necessary charge for the music, this should be announced by someone to the family, with exactness, so that there be no unexpected bills afterwards. It is easier in the country than in the city to have volunteer choirs for such times. In cities an endowment for free music at funerals would be a gracious provision.]

When flowers are sent to the church they should be put in suitable places, not by a florist, but by a person appointed by the rector. Any suspicion of what is called "a floral display" must be avoided. The best disposition of the various wreaths and other formal designs is to mass them near the choir steps upon the floor of the nave. Loose flowers may be placed in the church vases and strewn upon the steps of the sanctuary; and afterwards these loose flowers may be sent to some institution, in memoriam. For this reason loose flowers are a more beautiful symbol of friendship than the conventional wreaths and other symbols. The most appropriate covering for the coffin is a pall. Many parishes possess a pall. This beautiful piece of cloth, used for rich and poor alike, suggests the dignity of death.

The coffin is closed before the service begins. If the funeral is in the house, it should be closed before the people begin to assemble; if the funeral is in the church, it should be closed for the last time before the coffin is carried from the house. The invariable rule of the Church that the coffin cannot remain open during the service is, first of all, for the sake of the mourners. The service is intended to carry the mind away from the physical to the spiritual. The spirit, we know, has left the body, and is still alive. The Church would help us use our reverent imagination in trusting the departed soul to the mercy and love of the heavenly Father. To this end, when the service shall have begun, we must not look upon the body which the spirit has deserted; we must close our eyes and see, as in a vision, what God is doing for our beloved, with all the tenderness and care revealed in Jesus Christ as He met the widow of Nain, as He stood at the tomb of Lazarus.

The processional is the saying of the Sentences as the coffin is borne into the church. If the sexton wears a surger's gown he may lead this procession; and if there are what are called "honorary pall-bearers" they may follow him; and immediately before the coffin will be the officiating clergyman who is saying the Sentences. [It is better in most instances that the actual pall-bearers should be experts trained to what is often a difficult task which needs men accustomed to act together. If the sexton is not the undertaker, the undertaker should not come beyond the church-porch, and the sexton, who is a familiar and often loved figure associated with the church, should do all that is necessary in guiding the pall-bearers and mourners. Thus the sense of professionalism will be reduced to the minimum, and the reverent customs of the parish will never be disturbed.]

At the funeral of a layman the coffin is placed at the foot of the choir steps, with the feet towards the chancel; at the funeral of a clergyman, the coffin rests in the choir, midway between the stalls, the head being towards the sanctuary. The simple reason for this ancient ordering is that the layman's place is in the nave facing the chancel, and the clergyman's in the chancel facing the people. In the procession, entering and departing, it is customary that the coffin should be borne so that the feet will be first. [These are slight details, but they have a meaning, and are worth explaining.]

The Psalm (the second is generally preferred) should follow the Sentences without much delay; that is, as soon as the chief mourners have entered their pews. If the Psalm is not sung, it is probably better that the clergyman should read it all, without waiting for the response of the people. A feeble response is always disheartening, and people are not always ready. The Lesson should be announced as any Lesson is announced, because the usual and the conventional is a comfort to nerves already near snapping. For the same reason it is better to read the Lesson from the lectern.

In cold weather it is right to think of the chief mourners, and to have the Committal Service in the church. Then only a few prayers will be said at the grave. Most people like to have the Creed said, but it may be omitted if the request is made to omit it. A hymn after the Lesson, another after the Creed and Prayers, and a final hymn as a recessional, are the only hymns which can properly be sung. If the Committal Service is said in the church, the congregation will stand. It is simpler if the clergyman himself casts the earth upon the coffin, though the sexton may do it, or some intimate friend. It should always be done by some one who cares. All should join in saying the Lord's Prayer, for there is strength in the wall of prayer which loving voices seem to be building around the defenseless and agonized mourners.

If the family remain at the grave while the earth is being filled in, the clergyman may read comforting psalms or hymns to cover the sounds of earth, and to take the thoughts away from the temporal to the eternal. Circumstances will generally tell him whether the reading or the silence is better. In either case those whom he is serving will be sure that he is doing the utmost he knows how to do, that he may in any wise help. When the day is harsh, and when frail people are standing about the grave, he may, as soon as the formal service is finished, urge them to go away, because the service is over. In such cases it is well that every one should understand beforehand that a trusted friend or relative is going to stay to see that all is done with reverence and order. Thus there will be every assurance, and those who are already weakened by anxiety and grief will not be exposed to unnecessary risks. In any but Summer weather the men among the mourners should be told to keep their hats on their heads: all must do this for the sake of those who are older or infirm.

A Christian funeral is the expression not only of hope and of confidence; by its forethought and consideration it is also the expression of compassion and of love.

The Archbishop's Address to Students

By A SEMINARY STUDENT

AMID the cares and demands of our mission in this country it is a most welcome arrangement that enables us to turn aside for a service such as this, and pause for a moment to draw refreshment from a closer communion with Him from Whom our strength flows.

The people in America have not yet begun to realize what the War means, nor the tremendous changes that it has wrought in the world. When the sun set on July 31, 1914, it set never to rise again on the same world. The crisis through which we are now passing is comparable only to such great changes as the collapse of the Roman Empire, the French Revolution, or the Reformation and the Renaissance; but whether they are comparable to the present situation is extremely doubtful.

And yet, great as the effects of the War have been on England and the relations of the nations, still greater have been the effects on the English Church and religion in general. This college has witnessed for a hundred years the going and coming of those who have taken their part in the ministry of the Church, and the Province of York has the labors of a thousand years of the priests of God behind it; but not one in that long succession of God's servants has had to face a problem similar to that awaiting you young men here who are about to enter upon the work of the Lord's harvest. Nor need we go back into the dim past to appreciate the complete change that has come over the world: never could we of but a generation ago imagine when we presented ourselves for Holy Orders that anything like the present calamity was awaiting us. You of this day have something greater to do than any of those who have gone before. Yours is the greatest of responsibilities, but also the greatest of opportunities.

Dear brothers and sons, upon you rests the task of stating anew the philosophy of religion in its relation to the universe. It is much easier to present the questions that press for solution than to answer them, but the answers must be found. It will not avail to fall back on the time-worn shibboleths of the past, nor yet on the even more dangerous shibboleths of the present. A new world is being born and the old stock explanations fail to satisfy. It is a time of testing, of proving all things for the removal of "those things that are shaken, as of those things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain". Through such a time the Church cannot pass unchanged.

You in America cannot yet appreciate the feelings that arise in our hearts as we see week by week the thousands and tens of thousands of our noblest, our dearest and best march out of England to the great venture overseas —never to return. Millions of wives and mothers are knocking eagerly at the doors of the other world. Never was that other world so near. Millions of men are asking the way to God. Never were guides more needed.

Again, in all the nations there is an increasing realization of brotherhood among the workers, a spirit of fellowship in a number of ways as vital as that which the Church is striving to attain. The labor movement is destined to be a powerful new factor in the government of peoples, and it is resolved to win for its adherents the proper and decent conditions of living that the modern world affords. Humanity has been stirred to the depths of its being and yearns with eager heart and expectant hope for the dawning of the era of goodwill. In all these new hopes as in the great catastrophe there is a veritable coming of the Son of Man. That means that He is giving to us a new vision of Himself, the Living Christ. Our eyes must be quick to see and interpret His gift. I can only indicate the direction in which it seems to me we must look. In the striving forward towards the new life at the cost of untold anguish we must discern One Who moves among us as Hero and Leader, sharing our pain and anguish, one with us in all our hope and aspiration. Now is the supreme opportunity for the Church to show forth its faith in the Real Presence of our Lord. I do not wish at this time to dwell on the mysteries of the Sacrament of the Altar, but rather on the correlative truth of the Real Presence of Christ in humanity. This is part of that new vision of the Saviour which your day must find and bear witness to. At the shadowy beginnings of the history of God's chosen people, when Joshua was about to enter the promised land, he was vouchsafed a vision of the Captain of Jehovah's host who was to lead the way; and St. John in describing the consummation of the ages in that last book of the Bible pictures our Lord as seated on a white horse leading His armies to the final battle. So it must always be. It is the present, living, abiding Christ who leads His people forth to victory.

Bear with me for a moment longer. We older men of the passing generation shall not live to see the fruition of the new age, nor could we bear its burdens. The War oppresses us with the thought of what we might be when we behold what we are. To you young men is the promise of the future. You must be prepared to step into the places of the leaders of a bygone day: to you the present crisis is a call from what you are to what you ought to be. The change can be wrought only in the power of Him of Whose life we all partake. Your Captain calls on you for whole-hearted and large-minded consecration and effort. In His service nothing is too small for the best of your labors, the best of your love, the best of your life.

In connection with the Symposium on Theological Education, we are specially fortunate to be able to present to our readers the substance of an address by the Archbishop of York to the faculty and students of the General Seminary during his recent visit. This report was made by Mr. Bonnlander, a member of the Senior Class at the Seminary, several days after the address was given; its accuracy therefore is eloquent testimony to the profound impression which His Grace made upon the student body.—The Editors.

The Spirits in Prison

By CHARLES LEWIS SLATTERY

I WENT down to the Valley of Despair;
I saw the clouds beat in upon the gale;
And then I heard the gruesome, shiv'ring wail
Of countless beings who, with eyes a-stare,
Beat on their breasts, flung wide their angry hair,
And cried in bitterness, "O hear our tale!
We live, we work, we suffer, and—we fail;
Can God be dead,—or did He never care?"

Then flash'd there in among the noisy throng
A Face magnificent with stately calm;
Hands were outstretched, and, in either palm,
I saw the cruel sign of ancient wrong.
"I fail'd", He said, "I know your deep distress:
But—righteous failure is divine success!"

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

BUT 64 SEMINARY STUDENTS IN ALL SCHOOLS IN 1919-20

General Seminary Will Have But 9 Men to Take Time of 14 Professors

New York City.—If it were proved that two more years of war would leave us only sixty theological students, would the Church at last view with alarm her scarcity of candidates for Holy Orders? Calculations show that in 1919-20 there will be sixty-four men studying in our twelve seminaries. Dividing equally, and granting the General Seminary by courtesy the remainder, nine students will occupy the time of fourteen professors at Chelsea Square, and the other seminaries will have five each to use their fine equipment and endowments.

Our seminaries lead all communions in War service. We would not have our seminary students fail to take part in the most tragic moments of mankind. Rather are we proud that the 23 per cent. of loss this year is higher than that of any other communion.

Statistics are fallible, and on them no one ventures actual prophecies. But it is hard to deny the probabilities shown by the figures collected by the General Board of Religious Education. Their validity rests entirely on the effect of the next draft upon the seminary Junior classes. This is only a matter of estimate at present.

Juniors to Be Drafted

Juniors are liable to draft. Middlers and Seniors are not, for they were in seminaries when the draft law went into effect. The new draft regulations place most of the Juniors in Class I. This multiplies many times the likelihood of their being called to the colors this spring. The chances are that three-fourths will be so summoned.

Furthermore, with the draft operating on our postulants in the colleges as they come of age it is hardly likely that more than one-fourth of this year's Juniors will enter the seminaries each fall during wartime.

Last year's enrolment in the seminaries was 396 (an increase of 45 over the preceding year). This year the seminaries have 305 students, a loss of 23 per cent. As indicated above, the draft will probably take away 63, which is three-quarters of the 85 Juniors. From the remaining total must be subtracted all the Seniors, who number 99, and probably one-half of the 51 special students, or 26. This leaves 117 students to be carried over to next year.

According to our assumptions the fall of 1918 will show only 21 new students entering (or one-fourth of this year's Junior class). Thus the total enrolment of 1918-19 will be 138.

The present middle class numbers 70, and they, with the rémaininig 25 "specials", leave the seminaries in June, 1919. This leaves only 43 students to be carried over into 1919-20.

Add to this number the 21 new students we have assumed to be the normal number entering in war time, and 64 will be the total enrolment for 1919-20.

Putting the calculations on a percentage basis, it is found that the total number of theological students in 1917-18 is 77 per cent. of the ante-bellum enrolment; in 1918-19 it will be 35 per cent.; and in 1919-20 it will drop to 16 per cent.

The G. B. R. E. would put the task of making up this loss on the shoulders of bishops, priests, Sunday school superintendents, teachers, directors of Brotherhoods of St. Andrew, leaders of boys' work, college professors and lay workers in all organizations and suggests certain appeals.

"There are four classes to whom the appeal should especially be directed. 1. Older men, who can be pried loose from their professions, and with such training as they need sent into the vocation of the ministry. There are always a few such men as 'specials' in the seminaries. They are the only men who can stop the gap in the line of ordinations.

"2. The soldiers, whose hearts are open to hear the call of the world's spiritual need, just as they have already responded to the call of moral and social need. The Civil War has shown us that we can expect much from this source.

"3. College students, who are not of draft age. The Government will not call these underclassmen save in case of great necessity. For this our ministers in college towns and the Y. M. C. A. college secretaries are mainly responsible.

"4. High school boys, who make vocational decisions to a degree that is not fully recognized. The pressure will be almost overwhelming to make the boy choose a business or a mechanical training course, and to go to work as soon as school days are over. Every Church worker that touches the boy of right calibre must urge him to take a cultural course and enter college. The needs of the Church must be clearly laid before him."

SNOWBOUND FOR 26 HOURS BISHOP HAS TRAIN SERVICES

Undaunted by Blizzard, Coadjutor of Marquette Has Congregation

Marquette, Michigan.—Snowbound for twenty-six hours in a drift near Loomis last Sunday Bishop Harris, coadjutor of the diocese of Marquette, who was on his way to Menominee to hold services, refused to waste Sunday. Gathering together the passengers on the train he held services in a coach while the blizzard howled wildly outside. It was the most unique service in the Bishop's experience and probably the most extraordinary in the history of the Upper Peninsula.

The train crew kept the cars well heated and the passengers well fed so that there was no suffering despite the long wait.

At 10:30 Sunday morning, when under routine circumstances he would be entering the pulpit, the Bishop donned his vestments and proceeded with services as though he were at his home church. The impromptu congregation appeared greatly to appreciate the sermon and joined heartily in the singing.

MANY AMERICAN CITIES ARE HEARING THE ARCHBISHOP

Students and Citizens Everywhere Are Moved by His Words

Speaking, as he has well said, from the heart of England to the heart of America, the Archbishop of York is everywhere arousing the greatest enthusiasm on the part of his hearers. He has spoken to the students at Brown University and at Yale; he has addressed large meetings in Boston, Cleveland and Chicago, and speaks this week in St. Louis and Cincinnati.

By Bishop Lawrence

Boston, Massachusetts.—The Archbishop of York has come to Boston and gone. His purpose in coming to this country is to bind the two Nations together in closer bonds of sympathy and power against the common enemy, to tell us something of Great Britain's experiences and sacrifices, in order that we may be prepared to meet the coming battle, and to receive our sympathy and support, which he may carry back to hearten his own people.

During his visit to Massachusetts Bay he furthered these purposes with great force and success. I have heard from all sides only one voice, which is that of grateful appreciation of his coming and of his eloquent words.

He was here three days and a half. His first speech on arrival Saturday evening was at a dinner of the Tavern Club, a company composed of a number of the ablest and brightest citizens of Boston; on Sunday he spoke to the students and officers of Harvard University, and to great congregations in Trinity church, Boston, and the Cathedral of St. Paul. On Monday he spoke to the ministers of all denominations, with representative laymen; in the evening to a meeting of citizens in Symphony Hall, where he had the support of the Governor and Senator Lodge, and where the audience joined in patriotic song under the leadership of a great military band from Camp Devens and a chorus of 150 sailors. On Tuesday he spoke to a noonday meeting of citizens in Faneuil Hall; to the clergy and lay officers of the diocese at a luncheon at the Boston City Club; then at the Institute of Technology, first to several hundred men of the Naval Aviation, and then to hundreds of the students of the Institute of Technology, running out from there to Wellesley to speak to a great body of young women at Wellesley College.

In each and every instance the halls and churches were packed to the doors and outside. Besides these speeches he was interviewed by reporters. Through all these experiences, and facing these very varied audiences, he was sympathetic, tactful, patient, resourceful and strong.

The touching, solemn and invigorating way in which he told of Great Britain's sudden entrance into the War, in which he, through the suggestion of figures and incidents, described her sacrifices and her grim determination to "carry on", led us to

SYNAGOGUE, SALVATION ARMY AND SEVEN CHURCHES ALLIED

Have Parts in Common Service of Worship at Episcopal Church

WILLIAMSPORT, PENNSYLVANIA.—A service of common worship for the people of Williamsport, to use the words in which it was announced, was held at Trinity church on Sunday afternoon, March 10. In this service, at which there was "standing room only", representatives of seven Christian churches, the Salvation Army and the Jewish synagogue took part.

The various parts of this inspiring service were taken as follows:

Invocation, the Rev. Chas. Noyes Tyndell, rector of Christ Episcopal church; psalm, the Rev. Emil Ellinger, rabbi of Beth Hashalom synagogue; lesson, the Rev. W. F. Inspiring Union Services

WYTHEVILLE, VIRGINIA.—All of the six Protestant churches of Wytheville have been having union services on Sunday nights in the various churches in rotation, which have proved both a great success and blessing with congregations limited only by the capacity of the churches. No minister has preached in his own church. The rector of St. John's has officiated in two of the other churches and at his turn he has had two of the other ministers to officiate at St. John's.

"LET GOD SORT THEM OUT"

Says Chaplain Who Buries Soldiers of Every Faith Side by Side

NEW YORK CITY.—"What are you religious men going to do when the boys come home—those boys who have missed death, but who have come so close to the eternal mystery? Those boys and we chaplains are tired of your squabbles in the name of Jesus Christ. We are not going to tolerate longer the old divisions between men and the old fights between sects which have divided communities."

This statement was made by the Rev. Lauchlan MacLean Watt, known as the "Piping Parson", in an address before the Canadian Club of New York at the Biltmore Hotel last week.

The speaker, who is a Scotch Highlander and minister of the famous St. Stephen's church, in Edinburgh, was chaplain of the Black Watch and Gordon Highlanders divisions and went through some of the most terrible battles in France with these battalions and saw both commands virtually cut to pieces.

Declaring that "in death and facing death there is no difference in religion", the chaplain told of his work on the field of battle alongside a Jesuit priest, and declared that neither's peculiar faith had been tainted by that of the other. "We bury Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Roman Catholic side by side, and leave it to God to sort them out".

We Like This!

To the Editors of THE CHURCHMAN:

After reading in your issue of March 9 the criticism under the headline, "We Receive a Bouquet", I wonder from what part of the Middle West your critic hails. If he has been reading THE CHURCHMAN for the past fifteen years, as I have done ("It may have improved since he read it last!"), he will find a great deal more general Church news from all parts of the country being published right now than ever before; and I avail myself of this opportunity to congratulate THE CHURCHMAN on the "news of the Church", its contributors, and, last but not least, its splendid editorials and general make-up.

HARVARD ATHLETE SAW THE GERMANS BOMB HOSPITALS

"I Saw Nurses Faithful Even When Shots Crashed Into the Ruins"

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—The following letter giving a vivid description of modern warfare was received by the Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, rector of Grace church, Lawrence, from one of his young parishioners, William Bingham, a Harvard athlete:

"Paris.

"My dear Mr. Moulton: Since I left America I have had some real experiences. By this time you know, perhaps, that I was in the last offensive at Verdun, and I saw some real hell on earth. During the first seventy-two hours of the offensive I slept eight, and never have I derived so much satisfaction out of life as I did then. To be sent out after someone who has been bombed, and feel that perhaps you can get him back alive, is a fight worth fighting, and many such experiences I had during those first few days.

"The shells you become accustomed to after the first one comes. You have an idea when succeeding ones will follow, because in these long range shots they seldom change the range once they have their target, which is usually a cross road. But the shrill of a descending bomb, combined with the whirling whine of an enemy aeroplane above, is a sound you never grow accustomed to, and when Mr. Boche adds a little mitrailleuse for good luck you feel that you never want to stay in the same place twice. But you might as well be a fatalist, for you never know where he will drop the next one.

"Before I came over here I was inclined to discredit the stories I heard about German atrocities, especially in connection with hospitals. Near the front, of course, there are no lights at night. Although the roads are crowded with a moving mass of men, shells, guns, wagons, automobiles and what not, you never see a light. The same is true with the hospitals. They have a double tent and the dim lights they employ do not penetrate the double canvas. Near the hospitals, also, is always a huge red cross on a white background, which on moonlight nights will reveal to the enemy aviator that the tents surrounding are hospital tents. But these mean nothing to the Germans.

"During the first three nights they dropped bombs into the tents where we were evacuating to, and killed wounded men. The first night out I was stopped twice on the road and told to pull up under a tree because an enemy plane was overhead, and once I was near Vadalamcaut and saw the awful things you must have read. The sight I shall never forget. I had three men in my car, who were gassed, and was on my way to a hospital at Fleury. I saw these bombs dropping on what I thought was Vadalamcaut and when I was stopped near the place I went over near the first barrack. Men, almost terrified with fright, running around in night shirts; others trying to crawl under trees; and nurses, faithful even when the mitrailleuse crashed its staccato shots into the ruins, presented a sight you would have to see to appreciate. It was hell on earth.

"I like to see a man hit back when he is hit, but you cannot hit back when, like a thief in the night, he steals over under the cover of darkness and drops bombs and mitrailleuse on helpless people. Perhaps what riles you most of all is when you meet a prisoner and he has printed on his belt, hat, etc., "Gott Mit Uns." If God is with them in this warfare, you have lost one member from your fold, for this is not the God I have learned to love at my mother's knee.

"Sincerely yours,

"BILL BINGHAM."

JERUSALEM NEEDS HELP NOW

Provincial Synod of New York Recommended Good Friday Offerings

NEW YORK CITY.—The Provincial Synod at its last meeting in New York adopted by a unanimous vote a strong resolution commending the work of the Jerusalem and the East Mission, and recommending that in every parish and mission in this province an offering be made (on Good Friday if possible) for the work of the J. and E. M., now under the direction of the Right Rev. Bishop Mac Innes, the Anglican bishop in Jerusalem. The interest in it is growing in the American church and last year our contributions reached the sum of $6,246.27.

Now that the ancient "city of our solemnities" has been wrested from Turkish misrule and oppression, and the Anglican bishop in Jerusalem is once more at his post, he finds a tremendous task of reconstruction awaiting him. His cathedral, schools, hospitals, etc., need all the help that America can give.

"Now is the time for aid," says one familiar with the needs. "Jerusalem is in a deplorable state. The Bishop's immediate care is to relieve the unfortunate people of Palestine, most of whom are in a starving condition. Added to the horrors of the situation, contagious diseases are spreading and even shelter and clothing have to be provided for the thousands whose homes have been destroyed by the Turks."

Checks from Good Friday offerings should be sent to the Rev. John H. McKenzie, D.D. (honorary secretary and treasurer for the United States), Howe School, Howe, Indiana.

RICHMOND CLUB A SUCCESS

Was the First Organization of Its Kind in the United States

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.—At a special called meeting of the Soldiers, Sailors and Marines' Club, conducted by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew of Richmond, reports were made by the chairmen of several committees showing gratifying success in contributing to the aid, comfort and enjoyment of the enlisted men in service of the Government.

Many a dejected boy whose pathway had been darkened by the shadow of misfortune or disappointment left the club bright and joyful through the Brotherhood's assistance.

Though this club is supported by the Episcopal Churches of Richmond, no distinction or difference is made, the Government's uniform being the badge of admittance. Three large writing and reading rooms, supplied with attractive letter paper, envelopes, smokes, games, fruit, music—all furnished gratis.

This was the first club organized in the United States for soldiers and sailors.

LIVED IN TOWN WHERE 3,000 PEOPLE HAVE BEEN GASSED

Mr. Thomas Travis Knows Why Churches Should Help Loan

NEW YORK CITY.—The roar of the big guns on the western front is no strange sound to the ears of Mr. Thomas Travis, the well-known writer, who spent several months there. And, having been there, he has no illusions as to the meaning of the Liberty Loans. In an interview given to THE CHURCHMAN the other day, on the part the Church should have in the next Liberty Loan campaign, he said:

"I am thinking of a town on the firing line of France. For months I lived on the edge of this town. And every day and every night shells are hailing on it. Three thousand folk, mostly old people and children, were gassed there. And it lies waste today—a few stray cats prowl among its ruins, batteries of grim guns lurk in its walls, airplanes soar over it—but always, day and night, the work of destruction goes on. Its inhabitants are either dead, crippled or scattered. It will take fifty years of peace to build that town up again; and fifty times fifty years will not blot out the sum of misery its folk have suffered.

"And that town is only one of hundreds along the French front alone. The mountain of human misery there is literally incalculable. And while you are eating, sleeping, arguing or talking every day—every hour of every day and night this work of destruction, this Misery Machine, is working.

"Those who have not merely visited the front, but lived there, worked there, fought there, know this without shadow of doubt: that Misery Machine will go on turning out its product till it is smashed by armed force of men who will challenge death in the attempt to smash it.

"Our boys are the Legions of Victory: all France knows this fact. With our lads rests the decision as to whether this Misery Machine will be thoroughly smashed so it cannot work again, or merely stopped for a time.

"Now, you as a Church cannot go to the front to smash that Misery Machine; but you can help furnish the driving power of the human ram that is smashing it. You can back up your boys who are challenging death every day in the task of smashing the Misery Machine. You can help furnish the extra vim and smack that will make our laddies the actual legions of final, sure victory. And the Church can do this through active support of the Third Liberty Loan, which starts on April 6.

CHURCHES IN FRANCE UNITE

Fourteen French and American Bodies Have Committee

PARIS.—For the first time in Huguenot history, all the Protestant churches of France have come together in one United Committee, representing fourteen French Protestant organizations. This committee co-operates with the United Committee on Christian Service for Relief in France and Belgium, of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. In this way, French and American Protestantism are brought into closest relationship, both for the present and the future.

IN SPITE OF LAMENESS, SHE ASSUMES NEW MISSION POST

Dr. Glenton, After Operation, Becomes Resident at Raleigh

Many people will recall Dr. Mary Glenton as "somewhere" in the mission field—long ago, it may be, in St. Peter's Hospital, Helena, Montana; then for a year in the Negro work in Columbia, South Carolina; again at Anvik on the Yukon; later for years at Wuchang, on the Yangtse; invalided home trying again at the Settlement, La Grange, in the diocese of Atlanta.

An infected joint necessitated her leaving there, and after struggling a while to help in a children's home in Michigan, she went for treatment to the hospital of her training in Chicago. There it was found necessary to amputate a leg, but with all her old courage and cheerfulness, she is accustoming herself to the makeshift which takes its place.

And at St. Agnes' Hospital, Raleigh, North Carolina, where she went in the late Winter for a visit, Mrs. Hunter writes:

"Dr. Glenton is really to be with us. She is improving steadily in her walking, though she feels it is very, very slow. She is able now to walk up and down stairs and make the rounds of the wards once every day. She is to do a good deal in the way of drug room work, saving, she thinks, many dollars by compounding ointments and medicines herself. She has not been idle at all since she came, and her cheerful spirit does us all good.

"Our new superintendent of nurses, Mrs. Lottie R. Jackson, R. N., retains the old position as head nurse as well as the new one of superintendent. I regret that we are facing a deficit in the hospital treasury. We have not enough money to pay a quarter of our February bills. This has not happened before in months, if in years."

Bishop's Chair for Denver Cathedral

New York City.—A beautiful carved oak bishop's throne has been on exhibit in the studios of Messrs. J. and R. Lamb this past week. It is a memorial to the former rector of St. John's cathedral, Denver, the Rev. Horace B. Hitchings, D.D. A portrait statue of Dr. Hitchings is included in the niche in the upper canopy together with statues of the Rev. G. M. Randal, D.D., late missionary bishop of Colorado, and the Rt. Rev. E. S. Spalding, late missionary bishop of Utah.

LARGEST CLASS IN HISTORY

Connecticut Parish Breaks Record of Diocese with 138

Waterbury, Connecticut.—The largest class ever confirmed in the history of the diocese of Connecticut was that confirmed Sunday morning at St. John's church by the Rt. Rev. Chauncey B. Brewster, bishop of the diocese. The class numbered 138 people, including twenty-four pupils from Westover School. In the class were men and women of mature years, and young girls and boys. The church was packed to its capacity, and the ceremony of confirmation impressed all who saw it. The class was so large that the choir marched through the church into the vestibule, leaving the choir stalls vacant for the class during the Confirmation itself.

Bishop Brewster also conducted two other services here Sunday. One was at St. John's church in the afternoon, when Miss Mary R. Romaine was set aside as a deaconess of the Church, and the other at Trinity Episcopal church in the evening when sixteen people were confirmed. Miss Romaine has, as Dr. Lewis said at the morning service, "filled the position for which she was set aside by many years of faithful and devoted service". She has been parish visitor at St. John's for a number of years.

MEN IN WESTERN CHURCH MAKE SURGICAL DRESSINGS

Meet Regularly in Fargo Cathedral Under Eight Lieutenants

Fargo, North Dakota.—An interesting movement among the men of the Cathedral parish was started some weeks ago when a number of the men got together and decided they would organize a surgical dressings class among the men.

When You Send News

OUR friends who favor us with news stories for the columns of The Churchman should observe the following rules in preparing copy:

1—Write on one side of the paper only.

2—Use paper approximately 8x10 inches in size.

3—Leave a two-inch margin at the top on the first page; leave a one-inch margin on the sides and bottom of all pages.

4—Use typewriter, whenever possible, and double-space the lines. This is of the utmost importance.

5—When writing longhand leave a half-inch space between the lines.

6—In sending "Personals" the same rules should be observed. Do not send "Personals" as a part of letters addressed to any department of The Churchman. Copy for publication should always be sent on separate sheets of paper.

7—These same rules apply in preparing letters to the Editor.

A captain was appointed and under him eight lieutenants, each in charge of the men at a long table. The men meet regularly every Thursday evening and, under the direction of Red Cross supervisors, who are also women of the Cathedral parish, are doing good service in making bandages and dressings for our boys at the front. A very brief service by the dean closes the evening's work. There is much enthusiasm among the men.

Wakpala, South Dakota.—The Indians are taking a touching interest in the Red Cross this year, and bring their subscriptions and dues to the church to send in.

Coming to America

New York City.—A cable from the Rev. S. N. Watson, rector of Holy Trinity church, Paris, announces that he will be in America in April, and should be addressed at the Church Missions House.

NURSES MARCH TO SERVICE BEFORE GOING TO FRANCE

300 at Old St. Paul's Chapel on Eve of Departure

New York City.—Lower Broadway stood still for a few moments last Thursday at 1 o'clock when more than 300 young women about to leave for France as nurses in the base hospitals marched two by two into old St. Paul's chapel for a farewell service and the blessing of their flags. Of the many services held in the chapel at Broadway and Fulton Street few have been more striking.

The historic edifice was almost filled. As the congregation sang The Battle Hymn of the Republic the flags were carried to the chancel and received by the clergy. They were then dedicated by the Rev. Dr. William Montague Geer, the venerable rector.

The service was a climax to a six months' course in the French language the women have been taking at the chapel under Professor Jacques Bar of Paris. A feature was the singing of The New America. Later special verses written to the tune America, by Dr. Irvin W. Read, director of choruses with the chapel, were sung by the congregation.

Dr. Geer declared he believed the time would come, he hoped soon, when the Government will confer military rank upon its nurses, thus placing them with the nurses of Canada and England.

The vicar told the young women they were going, not to the firing line, but very near it, and that they would be "eyes to the blind", hands and feet to cripples and would smooth many a last pillow. He asked God's blessing upon them and their labors.

CLUB HOUSE IN OPERATION AT CAMP DIX, WRIGHTSTOWN

Camp Dix, Wrightstown, New Jersey.—The Church club-house at Camp Dix is now in full operation and used by large numbers of the soldiers. The Dioceses of New Jersey, Newark, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Western New York have spent about $30,000 upon the three buildings at Camp Dix with their equipment. With a staff of clergy connected therewith, four women from each diocese each month have the management of the canteen. Ground has been given for the administration building of the other churches and the use of the chapel, also for their services. This good example of Christian comity has made for good feeling.

The relation to the work of the Y. M. C. A. in the camp is excellent. This work was planned immediately after the choice of Wrightstown, some eighteen miles southeast of Trenton, was determined upon, and the work was going on for considerable time before the General War Commission organized. It is expected that the Dioceses of Central New York and Albany will have part with those named in the support of the work.

If any one will send to Rev. Karl Block or Edgar L. Cook, St. George's Chapel, Wrightstown, N. J., the name of any one in the camp, giving the regiment and company, or other definite address, the person will be looked up.

feel that we were really entering into the cloud and carnage of battle, but that there was a light beyond. His description of what the incoming of the United States meant to Great Britain kindled in us a renewed spirit of patriotism.

At the same time, however, he with the utmost tact suggested the subtle danger which encompasses men and people with high ideals—"God, we thank Thee that we are not as other Nations are, seeking dominion, avenging ancient insults." His confidence in the integrity of this country and his clarion call to her to be worthy of her history was strong and clear, and his claim that the principles of liberty now so dear to us were our heritage from Great Britain was logically supported; his appeal that Great Britain and the United States, both founded upon those principles of liberty, would build up on broad and deep foundations a new and better civilization, awoke a strong response.

One of his freshest statements, coming as it did right from the midst of the battle, was his insistence upon the necessity now in the midst of war to prepare for a nobler country and a finer civilization when peace comes. He told of how the men on the battle front responded as a matter of course to the thought that they were doing their duty by the country, but that when they were told they were fighting for a better and a purer democracy, wherein the common people will as never before receive the rewards of their labor and common justice, they rose and cheered. The men's hearts are in their homes: their ideals are for the coming days of peace. Their immediate duty is to fight.

One remarkable feature throughout all these addresses was that he did not once break out into what we Americans call, or used to call, oratory. His clear diction, limpid style, direct and conversational method, his logical argument and solid thought, livened by illustration, were supported and reinforced by depth of conviction, consecrated character and patriotic fervor. The tens of thousands who left the halls and churches retold the story to their fellow citizens on the street.

Since the Archbishop has come with these direct duties he was unhampered by social obligations—indeed, in the three and a half days his sight-seeing was confined to fifteen minutes at the State House and an hour at Harvard University. These are days of direct and consecrated purpose, and the denial of social and interesting experiences both on the part of himself and the communities, which take pride in their local interests and beauties, was illustrated in the way in which they were neglected for the high purpose for which he came.

Providence, Rhode Island.—His Grace, the Archbishop of York, spent two days, Friday and Saturday, March 8 and 9, in Providence. On the first evening he addressed in Sayles Hall, Brown University, a large gathering which represented the best life of the city. President Faunce, of Brown, opened the meeting and introduced Bishop Perry, who in turn introduced Mayor Gainer, who acted as chairman and welcomed the Archbishop to the city and state. The address of the Archbishop was a stalwart presentation of the present status of the War, with stress upon the moral issues at stake. He praised Americans as "people who have the power of seeing clearly and holding steadfastly to high ideals". The most prolonged applause of the evening followed his defence of the British navy. "The British navy has kept the seas free for the powers of freedom; it has been impossible for one German battleship or cruiser to be at large on the ocean."

As the Archbishop listened to the strains of "God Save the King", sung by the audience, his eyes filled with tears, and in response to it, he said: "You may imagine how deeply I am touched to hear in New England the strains of that hymn which for the past three and a half years has been sung with a new meaning on sea and land and in every village of Old England. I hope to tell our king on my return of the sincerity and whole-heartedness with which you have sung it."

On the following morning, at St. Stephen's church, the Archbishop officiated at the Holy Communion for the clergy of the diocese. At the close he made an address on the presence of Christ in humanity in this time of war.

New Haven, Connecticut.—On Wednesday, March 13, His Grace, the Archbishop of York, made a brief visit in New Haven. He arrived in the afternoon and spent some time seeing Yale University. In the evening he addressed one of the most remarkable gatherings which has ever assembled in Woolsey Hall.

The great auditorium was taxed to its utmost, it being estimated that fully 4,000 people were present. Bishop Brewster and President Hadley sat on either side of the Archbishop. Besides these the clergy of the city of all denominations were on the platform and also the faculty of the University. A very large number of students in uniform sat in the audience.

After the playing of the Star Spangled Banner on the organ President Hadley, in a brief address, welcomed His Grace to New Haven and to Yale. The Archbishop's address then followed and for over an hour he spoke in a quiet but deeply moving manner.

The address was warmly appreciated and created a very profound impression. At no time did Dr. Lang become oratorical, and yet no speaker has ever left deeper impression on an audience in Woolsey Hall. The directness and intensity of the words spoken, together with the great restraint, stirred the large gathering in a way perhaps that we should not have expected of our audiences on this side of the Atlantic. The evening was brought to a close with the singing of one verse of God Save the King —and one verse of America.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The Archbishop of York, Dr. Lang, visited Cleveland Friday, March 15, and was accorded a welcome amounting to a great demonstration. Prior to his coming the local papers made frequent allusions to his visit always in cordial and sympathetic terms, dwelling particularly upon the Archbishop's ministry to the poor and plain people of East London prior to his elevation to York.

At noon under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce, for many years the leading commercial and civic organization of Cleveland, he addressed more than 4,000 people in the Hippodrome, the largest playhouse in the city, every seat and all available standing room being taken. He was introduced by Mr. Charles A. Otis, president of the Chamber, and for an hour held with increasing attention and interest his great audience. In magnetic presence, dignity of person, poise, speech and manner, the Archbishop reminded many of his late fellow countryman, Sir Henry Irving, who during his lifetime was a great favorite in America.

In the evening the Archbishop was the guest of the Cleveland Church Club, Mr. Francis R. Morison, president; at supper at the Hotel Statler, where he addressed some 600 men, the entire gallery being occupied with women guests. He was introduced by Bishop Leonard, and spoke as to a great convention of Churchmen, to whom he made a noble and exalted appeal for maintenance of the highest Christian ideals in the present world's great conflict.

The Archbishop, with his chaplain, arrived in Cleveland Friday morning and was the guest of Bishop Leonard at his home until he left for Chicago in the evening. Following the noonday address, upon invitation of Bishop Leonard, the Archbishop received for an hour at the episcopal residence the clergy and their wives of the city.

Chicago, Illinois.—Chicago responded to the stirring addresses of the Archbishop of York with the same enthusiasm that has evidently characterized his reception in other cities. On Saturday afternoon the Archbishop had tea with Bishop and Mrs. Anderson, when a group of Church people were asked to meet him. On Monday afternoon he spoke before the Fortnightly Club, and was thoroughly busy during his entire stay in the city.

Sunday morning Dr. Lang was the preacher at the eleven o'clock service at St. Luke's church, Evanston; and in the afternoon at St. James' church. In the evening he spoke to the Sunday Evening Club in Orchestra Hall. On each occasion crowds were turned away.

On Saturday the Archbishop addressed many hundreds of men at the University Club—as many hundreds as could crowd in. In introducing him, Bishop Anderson made the following interesting statement:

"When I visited His Grace three and a half years ago his hair was black—not a gray hair in it. The War has changed it to a snowy white."

While he made no reference to his own part in the struggle, the Archbishop spoke feelingly of the burdens borne by King George V, to whom a toast was drunk.

"There are few persons in England who have had such pluck, spirit, and endurance as King George", he said. "No one knows how heavily the burdens have rested on his heart except those who have the privilege of intimacy."

His tribute to America, her Army and Navy, and her financial resources, and to the new courage the entrance of America into the War had given England, brought round after round of applause.

"The greatest help America has given England", he said, "has been the clear definition of principles to which England has given body and soul".

FAKE CHALDEAN PRIESTS COLLECT FUNDS FOR RELIEF

Amazing Frauds Are Disclosed by Arrests Made in New York

NEW YORK CITY.—One of the most amazing and widespread frauds ever perpetrated under the guise of Christian charity has been brought to light by the arrest in New York City of a band of fake Chaldean priests, who number among their victims high Church officials, mayors of cities, secretaries of state, political officials of all sorts, and even chiefs of police themselves.

Already thirty-five of these "priests" and "deacons" have been deported to Kurdistan and Persia. A large number are still under arrest or on parole, awaiting deportation. And when they sail they take with them, sewed into canvas jackets, anywhere from five to fifteen thousand dollars apiece, because, under our laws, there is no way to deprive them of their spoils.

This swindle, which has been carried on all over the world, has, for the last ten years, centered in the United States. New York City has been headquarters for the gang. One of these men, when arrested, produced from a safe deposit vault $15,000 in gold. Another, who operated through New England, is known to have collected $12,000 in five months.

Their scheme of operation was as follows: A public stenographer in lower New York typed, on forged letterheads, credentials to which were attached forged signatures of Chaldean bishops, with official-looking seals (made in Park Row). So cleverly were these documents prepared that they were the means of collecting thousands of other credentials, given in good faith by persons in authority in the Church or the Government. Before the outbreak of the War these swindlers claimed to be collecting funds for churches and orphanages in Kurdistan. Recently they have taken in huge sums in the name of Armenian and Syrian relief.

As there are still a considerable number of these men at large throughout the country, all persons, and especially clergymen, should be on their guard against contributing, for any cause, to these so-called Chaldean priests.

DEACONESS WILL GO TO NEW SOLDIERS' HOUSE, WASHINGTON

St. John's Parish Has First Church Home of the Kind

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.—Mrs. Rozelle J. Phillips, deaconess at Trinity church, will go to Washington, District of Columbia, to become hostess of St. John's House, newly opened as a rest house for soldiers passing through Washington.

The house is the first of its kind to be put in operation under auspices of the Church. Institutions of a similar nature are operated by the Y. M. C. A.

It is a three-story building at Third and C Streets, Northwest, two blocks from the capitol and near the Botanical Gardens. Its use has been donated to St. John's church as long as it may be necessary for housing soldiers.

There are thirty single rooms and room for an additional sixteen cots. Thirty beds have been installed. The house has been remodeled to meet requirements, visiting soldiers in Washington being consulted as to whether the building should be arranged for single rooms or dormitories. The men asked for rooms.

MEN AT FRONT GIVE HIGH PRAISE TO ONE OF CLERGY

The Rev. M. G. Johnston "Endeared to Hearts of All the Men"

NEW YORK CITY.—The Rev. Mercer G. Johnston is now at the front in charge of a Y. M. C. A. hut with a battalion which made a special request that he be assigned to that position. The request to Mr. J. M. Eddy of the Y. M. C. A. was as follows:

"Hq. 102 M. G. B.

"Mr. J. M. Eddy, Y. M. C. A.: I am very anxious to have Dr. M. G. Johnston with the men of my battalion both in the expected trip to the front and thereafter. The battalion has no chaplain, and so especially needs the assistance of a man like Dr. Johnston. His work with 'C' Company has endeared him to the hearts of all the men, and I can think of no greater good that could be done to souls and bodies of my men than to give us the man we need at the front, Dr. Johnston.—C. T. GALLUP, captain."

Set Your Watches Ahead Saturday Night

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

In reporting on the Daylight Saving Law may I suggest that those who have charge of public worship will be among the first to conform to its provisions. To this end clergymen should remind their congregations that on Sunday, March 31, and thereafter during the Summer services will be one hour earlier by the sun, and advise, in order to be in accord with the new law, that all clocks and watches be set forward on Saturday night before retiring. Then by the readjusted timepieces, services will be held at the usual hours.

It is not within the province of the Federal Government to regulate time except for departments of the United States and for railroads between States, and while the law is binding only in these applications, it is the patriotic duty of everyone to move all tasks one hour earlier by the sun. This can be done most conveniently by setting forward the timepieces. Only in this way can the change go into effect without inconvenience and confusion.

SCHOLARSHIPS AND BOARD FURNISHED FRENCH GIRLS

Fifty American Institutions of Learning Extend This Courtesy

NEW YORK CITY.—Dr. Lyman P. Powell president of Hobart College and chairman of the Committee on War Problems of the Association of American Colleges, announced today that fifty institutions of learning in the United States had offered to furnish scholarships, board and, in some cases, other expenses for young women sent over by the schools and colleges of France. This effort to educate French girls in America is part of the plan of educational reciprocity approved by the Association of American Colleges at a fourth annual meeting last January in Chicago.

Dr. Powell said that two groups of French girls, ten in all, had arrived in this country in pursuance of this plan and that others were coming on every steamer. The last group which arrived early last week has entered the University of Cincinnati.

Dr. Powell said that this branch of the work of his committee had extended so rapidly that a special bureau had been created to handle it with Robert L. Kelly of 19 South La Salle Street, Chicago, as secretary.

ONCE WELL-TO-DO PERSIANS CRAWL AWAY TO DIE UNSEEN

Bulk of People Get Nothing to Eat But Dry Bread

NEW YORK CITY.—Conditions in Persia are vividly portrayed in a letter recently received by the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee from Mr. E. T. Allen, who says that once well-to-do people crawl away out of sight where they die of starvation. Says the writer:

"In the whole of the province of Adzerbaijan, the greatest and richest in all Persia, the crops were less than half an ordinary crop. The bulk of the people we are helping get nothing in the way of food but dry bread.

"An old woman, a good old friend of mine since years before the War and one who was in excellent circumstances, said to me the other day, 'Sahib, the bread won't go down. I soak it in water but it sticks in my throat. I have sold all I had but the vineyard and no one will buy that. I have gone everywhere but no one has money to lend. These people haven't even the satisfaction of being deported by the military and fed while making munitions to be fired against their friends. They would gladly be taken prisoners and deported—if fed.

"They are hungry and dying. Just now a case came interrupting me in my writing. A Jewish woman has entered the room; she says a Syrian (Christian) woman came to her house begging late in the evening. Being late she was allowed to spend the night in a corner of the house and this morning was found dead. The Jewish woman said, 'Will you please send someone to bury her.' Such pleas are frequent now. This morning I was stopped in the yard by an old man who said, 'Sahib, there is a dead man in our yard; please send some one to take him away'. There are more dead than are buried. Men and women once in good circumstances, self-respecting and respected by ers, now hungry, helpless and friendless, wl away out of sight, die unseen and lie buried. This is not fiction; I have seen m."

he meeting was called on behalf of raisfunds for Tent Open Air and Shop mpaign. Mr. Stephen Baker, senior warn of St. James' church, presided.

Dr. Jowett was the central figure of the ning, both because of his own persony and the fact that it was in a sense his ewell before leaving for England. He ched the imagination of the great audie and lifted the whole program of the angelistic Committee to a high spiritual ne by seizing upon the word "tent", with picturesque scriptural connotation.

He pictured the coming under the shelter the tent of our Lord the poor, the brokenrted, the captives, the blind and the ised in all of our great cities. At the se of his address he asked whether we re an evangel ready to help the needy t shall come. Then he urged the preachn of a confident Gospel. "Affirm what yn know of the Christ, don't begin your ssage with a perhaps. We have seen Christ change beasts into men. Let us de to tell the world what we have seen al what we know".

Our Weekly News Letters

NEW YORK

Good Friday Services—His Grace the Archbishop of York will be the preacher at Trinity church at the Three Hours' service. Considerable anxiety is felt in regard to the best way to handle the tremendous crowd which is expected. There will be Passion services from 12 until 3 at the following churches: Ascension, conducted by Dr. Grant; Calvary church, Dr. Sedgwick; Chapel of the Intercession, Dr. Gates; St. Agnes' chapel, Dr. Bellinger; St. George's, Dr. Reiland; St. Ignatius, Dr. McCune; St. James', Dean Fosbroke; St. Thomas's, Dr. Stires; St. Mary the Virgin, Dr. Barry; Trinity chapel, the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton; Transfiguration, Bishop Fiske; Holy Trinity, Dr. Nichols; Holy Communion, Dr. Mottet; Heavenly Rest, the Rev. Dickinson Miller, D.D.; Zion and St. Timothy, Dr. Lubeck. At Grace church from noon until 3 o'clock there will be an address every half hour; Dr. Slattery will preach at noon on Good Friday as well as on other days in Holy Week on certain lessons suggested by the Last Week of our Saviour's Earthly Life. At the cathedral Dean Robbins will preach at 11 o'clock on Good Friday and Bishop Burch at 5 o'clock; there will be no Three Hours' service.

Easter at the Church of the Holy Communion—There has been set on foot in the parish of Holy Communion a movement which is rapidly interesting a number of men. By means of a personally conducted canvass a great body of men residing in the neighborhood who have no church connection are being invited to make their Easter Communions at a special service on Easter Day (9:30 a. m.). None but men are to be there; there is to be no sermon and no choir. A letter has been sent to these men telling them that "On Easter Day, March 31, Jesus will prepare His Table and He wishes all those who would so proudly shake His hand to meet Him there. . . .

"To come acceptably three things are necessary: first, that a man turn his back on that which is not good in his life; second, that he live by the Golden Rule; third, that he try to make each day better than the last.

"There will be a rally of men on Good Friday, March 29, 9 p. m., in the church, to receive what instructions may be required." After this service the men are to be made to feel at home not alone in the church, which is always open and free to all, but also in the Social Service House. Perhaps after Easter these men will come together to organize a club.

Sermons and Meetings—Chaplain John H. Sattig of the 105th U. S. Field Artillery will speak at the regular meeting of the Church Periodical Club on Monday, March 25, at 11 o'clock, at the Parish House of the Church of the Heavenly Rest.

The March meeting of Section "A", New York Diocesan Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, was held in the Church of Zion and St. Timothy March 19.

Dean Fosbroke was the preacher at the noonday services last week at the Church of the Transfiguration, and Fr. Officer at Trinity. Dr. McComas has been giving a very popular series of lectures on Church History on Thursday nights in Lent at Trinity Mission House.

Holy Week Mission—The rector of St. George's church has decided to hold a mission during Holy Week. Services will be held every night except Saturday at eight o'clock. A volunteer choir will lead the singing and there will be an address by Dr. Reiland and others.

The Archbishop's Return—Although the Archbishop of York will preach at the Three Hours' Service on Good Friday at Trinity church, he will be in Washington for Easter and afterwards go to Ottawa for about a week. He will return to New York for a few days before sailing. This will enable him to be present at the meeting of the House of Bishops on the 10th of April.

The Church Club is planning a dinner to the Archbishop that evening. In accordance with the sober war-time spirit, the dinner will be in every way as simple as possible. The menu will be Hooveresque, there will be no flowers nor decorations, and other frills usually associated with such dinners will be dispensed with. Bishop Tuttle, Bishop Greer and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler will speak, but the greater part of the time will be given to the Archbishop. Preceding the dinner, there will be an informal reception. A committee of some forty representative laymen of the diocese, with Mr. Robert Fulton Cutting as chairman has charge of this dinner.

Death of Commodore Miller—Last week there died a man whose loss will be deeply felt in both the Navy and the Church, Commodore Jacob W. Miller. Since 1867 Commodore Miller has been in the Navy. He has recently been instrumental in organizing the Naval Militia. As a vice-president of the Seamen's Church Institute he has done much for the welfare of the sailors of the Merchant Marine. He was widely known and much beloved in New York. His funeral service was at the Church of the Incarnation on Monday, March 11.

St. Martin's Chapel Dedicated—Bishop Greer dedicated the chapel of St. Martin, one of the Seven Chapels of the Cathedral, at 11 o'clock on Tuesday, March 19. Mrs. Zimmerman, one of the Furniss family whose gift the chapel of St. Martin's is, died last week, and her funeral was held at the Church of the Incarnation on Tuesday. On the way from the church to Trinity cemetery, where the interment was, a stop was made at St. Martin's chapel; the chapel was dedicated by the Bishop, and the committal service was held.

The Churchwomen's Club—Dean Robbins will preach to the members of The Churchwomen's Club at the regular afternoon service in the Cathedral on the Feast of the Annunciation. After the service the members of the club will have supper together at a tea house in the neighborhood, and in the evening will hold an informal conference on Church unity in Old Synod Hall. The service and conference are under the auspices of the committee on Christian Fellowship, Mrs. Simkhovitch, chairman. The committee on Civic Education is arranging for classes on civic responsibility, for women's and girls' clubs and guilds in the parishes in town. Speakers on such subjects as "Your vote, and how to use it", "The mechanism of the ballot", "The woman's vote and Child Labor", are sent out by the committee. Classes have already been held in Grace chapel and the Church of the Advocate in the Bronx; and right after Easter classes at the Church of the Ascension, Calvary, St. Mary the Virgin's, St. Michael's, St. Anne's and elsewhere will be started. Miss M. J. Hobart is chairman of this committee.

The Woman's Auxiliary—In all the parishes the usual Lenten sewing and study classes are going forward and there have been many unusual meetings planned. One branch invited seven neighboring parish branches to its regular monthly meeting, when a speaker of unusual interest was to be heard. An evening meeting of exceptional interest was held on February 21. Miss Delafield presided and the presence of many other diocesan officers, who reported as usual, was very gratifying. The speaker was Miss Cady of the hospital of the Good Shepherd, and the gifts for the hospital work placed in an alms-basin at the door amounted to $115. Almost every evening branch was represented, several by large delegations. Of these the largest was that of St. Chrysostom's chapel, numbering thirty. Over one hundred and ten persons were present.

New Rector for the Holy Apostles'—The Rev. Lucius A. Edelblute, vicar of St. George's chapel, Williamsbridge, New York City, has been called to the rectorship of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Ninth Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street, New York City; he has accepted the call and will be in residence after April 1. Mr. Edelblute began his ministry in the nearby parish of St. Peter's on West Twentieth Street, where in 1913 he was Dr. Roche's assistant. After having taught for a year in the Hamilton school he became vicar of St. George's chapel, Williamsbridge, where he has done most efficient work. Mr. Edelblute is a graduate of Kenyon College, and has done graduate work at Columbia and New York Universities.

ERIE

The Cathedral Notes—The Cathedral congregation found themselves in the midst of a financial crisis last Autumn. This was caused largely by the difficulties arising from the War. The Cathedral Chapter informed the congregation of the situation and the response has been very gratifying; nearly every member has increased his or her pledge and the total increase has amounted to over $4,000. The Chapter are at present busy on a campaign for the Easter offering. They are hoping to get an offering of $4,000 at Easter time.

Lenten Services—The attendance at the Lenten services this year has been very gratifying. The numbers are as large as they have ever been in the past, in spite of the fact that many men have little spare time at the luncheon hour nowadays. At the Wednesday evening services the average attendance has been 150 and the clergy —Dr. Aigner, Mr. Woodroofe of Cleveland, Dr. Brown of Pittsburgh and Archdeacon Owen—have given splendid messages.

Missionary Mission—The Missionary mission is in progress at present. The Rev. Horace Stowell was greeted by a large congregation on Mid-Lent Sunday, in spite of the blizzard that came to Erie with him. All the Episcopal churches have joined together for this mission at the cathedral. Mr. Stowell is proving a most earnest and attractive speaker and his thought is just fitted for the needs of the day. All the clergy of the city were with him in the chancel and took part in the service Sunday morning. We are hoping for much good from the mission.

Confirms for Bishop Israel—The Bishop of Pittsburgh has been in Erie and its neighborhood during the past week holding confirmations for Bishop Israel. He was warmly welcomed by the cathedral congregation and spoke at some of the noonday services, for he seems to be able to accomplish work without fatigue that would seem impossible to many younger men.

OKLAHOMA

Ordination—On March 14 in St. Paul's cathedral, Oklahoma City, Bishop Brooke advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Messrs. Charles Elmer Beach, Charles Holding and John Mervin Pettit. The Ven. Creighton Spencer Monneny, archdeacon of Eastern Oklahoma, preached the sermon and the presenting and assisting priests were Dean Bate, the Rev. V. C. Griffith, the Rev. A. B. Nichols and the Rev. John Caughey. The newly ordained priests remain in their former fields—the Rev. Mr. Beach at Fay and adjacent missions, the Rev. Mr. Holding at Shawnee and the Rev. Mr. Pettit at El Reno.

WEST TEXAS

A Helpful Camp Service—An unusually helpful service was conducted on Sunday, March 10, by Bishop Capers at Camp Stanley for the soldiers stationed at the Officers' Training School and at Camp Morse. It consisted of a celebration of the Holy Communion and a sermon by the Bishop. Moved by the powerful appeal of the Bishop and the spirit of the service, decisions were made which were consummated in the administration of Confirmation by the Bishop subsequent to the dismissal of the congregation.

Archdeacon Resigns—Pursuant to the confirmation by the Board of Missions of his election to become field secretary of the province of the Southwest, the Ven. A. W. S. Garden resigned his office as archdeacon of West Texas on March 1. Bishop Capers has appointed the Rev. Lee W. Heaton, who has for some months past been serving as diocesan chaplain to the Army Camps of the diocese, as successor. Archdeacon Heaton will make his headquarters at the offices of the diocese, 424-6 Gunter Building, San Antonio, Texas.

NORTH CAROLINA

New Life at Winston-Salem—After some months of abated interest and effort, due largely to vacant rectorship and lack of permanent supply, St. Paul's parish, Winston-Salem, is showing decided evidence of new life and energy, both material and spiritual. The present rector, the Rev. Phillips S. Gilman, took charge of the work last Summer.

First of all he conducted a stirring parochial mission, carefully planned, purposeful and deeply effective, touching the vitals of personal consecration and responsibility. More than a hundred prayer slips and resolution cards were used during the services, and a large confirmation class resulted. The foundation of a new era was thus laid on spiritual ground.

From that time on every branch of activity in societies, Sunday school and Church services has increased in quantity and improved in quality. The men's club has reorganized and defined its aims. A Rector's Aid Society has been organized for systematic parish visiting. The Sunday school through the efficient co-operation of the superintendent, has evolved a thorough practical system, effecting an ideal of membership, attendance and graded study.

INDIANAPOLIS

Enter Friend—Mr. H. R. Hole, who resigned recently from the ministry of the Friends in Indianapolis, and who has been lay-reader in charge of St. Paul's, Columbus, Indiana, will be ordained Deacon by Bishop McKim at Christ church, Indianapolis, March 14. The See City clergy will all join in the ceremony, the rector of St. Paul's preaching the sermon.

The City Clerical Club, presided over by the new president, the Rev. George B. Babcock, will entertain the Bishop and Mrs. McKim, and the new Deacon and Mrs. Hole at luncheon following the ordination. Mr. Hole will continue for the present in charge of Columbus.

Exit Enemy—The clergy of the diocese are urging on with vigor the work of Armenian relief. The question of German in the grades of the public schools has developed a real issue in Indiana. The chief objections are that not German but French is taught, and all at the expense of time taken from study in English, arithmetic and other necessary studies.

A. L. MURRAY.

BALTIMORE

New Rector at Elkridge—The Rev. Erwin S. Hinks, rector of Christ church, Cambridge, diocese of Easton, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Grace church, Elkridge, and will assume charge on April 1. Most of Mr. Hinks' ministry has been spent in Virginia as rector of important churches at Leesburg and Warrenton, and for three years he was dean of the cathedral at Boise, Idaho, where he had ample opportunity to deal with men in the strenuous conditions then existing.

The work at Camp Mead for the benefit of our own men, but for others as well, has been developing rapidly under the direction of the Bishop. A church is being built at Odenton, where the Rev. S. Tagart Steele, Jr., has his headquarters and which is the centre from which he works now. The Rev. Alan Evans, Jr., is associated with Mr. Steele pending the former's commission as chaplain in the Army. Mr. Evans is a graduate of Harvard and is a noted athlete. He is apparently just the sort of man who ract and influence officers and men at the np. Several of the Churches of this tion have not only contributed able pers in ladies, who at certain times ist at the "hostage house", but any nber of magazines and other desirable ers are being forwarded regularly to e of Mr. Steele, the Washington, Balti- re and Annapolis Electric Road, which is to Odenton and Camp Meade, kindly veying them without charge.

Four of them were dents at Hollins College and were con- ed for the Rev. Mr. Mead of Christ rch. The church was filled and in all it an inspiring service. LEXINGTON ncil to Meet—The Twenty-third san Council of the diocese of Lexing- will meet this year in Calvary church, and, Kentucky, the Rev. G. H. Harri- son, rector. May 28 is the date set. The Cathedral Chapter will meet that afternoon, the Council convening that evening.

Withdraws Acceptance—The Rev. R. E. Abraham of the Holy Cross church, Brooklyn, New York, who had accepted the charge of Paris and Cynthiana, this diocese, has found it necessary to withdraw this acceptance because of continued ill health. The Rev. Mr. Abraham was at one time in charge of St. Mary's church, Middlesboro, and his return to the diocese was looked forward to with much pleasure.

Epidemic at St. John's, Corbin—As an aftermath of the recent floods along the Cumberland river, which accompanied the heavy rains melting our deep snows, our mission school at Corbin, St. John's Collegiate Institute, has been visited with an epidemic of la grippe and tonsilitis. Mr. Ira D. Lang, our chaplain and missioner, half of the faculty and many of the students have been quite sick, greatly retarding the work of the school, though substitutes have been provided.

Services Renewed—The Church at Somerset, this diocese, which has been closed for quite some time, is soon to be opened again. This was once an active mission, but met with heavy reverses when the division point of the Southern Railroad was moved from that point to Danville, removing most of our communicants who were numbered amongst the railroad men. Renewed activities at the shops there, with the incoming of new Church families, have opened up possibilities for work at the mission, which has been placed in charge of the Rev. Henry P. Manning, rector at Danville, thirty-five miles distant. Repairs are now being made to the building in anticipation of the monthly services soon to begin.

Addresses Y. M. C. A.—The Venerable F. B. Wenworth, Winchester, Kentucky, archdeacon of the diocese, has been delivering addresses and sermons to university and college students upon the subject of "Individualism and Socialism". His recent address before the faculty and student body of the Kentucky State University at the Y. M. C. A. in Lexington was commented upon by the public press in the highest terms, pronouncing it as "a modern 'voice in the wilderness' ringing with a message of warning and counsel to a people sadly confused and distraught".

Preaches at Lenten Services—The Rev. Dr. Richard Wilkinson, rector of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, was the preacher during one of the weeks of the noonday Lenten services in Louisville, Kentucky, diocese of Kentucky. Dr. Wilkinson's visit was of unusual interest, he having been pastor of one of the largest Methodist churches in Louisville when in the Methodist Communion. Dr. Wilkinson has only recently taken orders in the ministry of the Episcopal Church.

Declines Call—Almost immediately after the burning of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, the Rev. Dr. Wilkinson, its rector, was approached by representatives of the vestry of a prominent church in another diocese, with a view of extending to him a call to that cure. Dr. Wilkinson, with great loyalty to his congregation, declined to consider the call. Though it may have been manifestly his duty to remain with the congregation under the circumstances, still it was a great personal sacrifice to decide to remain at his post. HENRY P. MANNING.

BOSTON

Vivid Soldier Letters—Grace church, Lawrence, with probably the largest number of men in service of any parish in the diocese, is keeping in the closest sort of touch with each one of the young men. The curate, the Rev. Malcolm Peabody, has been for nine months in France as chaplain of a Base Hospital and with him went a considerable number of the young men of the parish. The rector, the Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, is planning to exchange places with his curate before Summer, going over to France to act as chaplain of the Base Hospital, while Mr. Peabody returns for a season as locum tenens of Grace church.

The following is from Chaplain Peabody to his rector, written last Fall:

"Dear Mr. Moulton: You will be interested to see the name of the preacher on the enclosed slip. Mr. Peabody was the preacher at St. Margaret's, Westminster. The church was quite full. I tried to tell them about the way religion seemed to 'Tommy' these days and they listened well, because it's a great story full of new realization of old things.

"I am sure men have made two discoveries up the line (1) their crying need of a personal Saviour, (2) their own abilities to perceive Him born of their parallel experiences. Now they know not only what the Cross means but they realize it is the only road to life. One gets the road in their minds after a bit and the experience of helping them to discover themselves and their God becomes a very wonderful one. Last Sunday 130 men crowded into the tent. They sat in the aisle, on the altar rail and stood up outside."

"I am sure that everybody connected with St. Stephen's, all those who have received comfort and help from the ministrations of Mr. Lauderburn, will loyally stand by St. Stephen's and help carry on the work which has been blessed by men of such devotion as the vicars of St Stephen's have always been."

Mr. Lauderburn's Resignation—The Rev. Frederic C. Lauderburn, whose resignation from St. Stephen's, Boston, was announced here two weeks ago, is to sever his connection with this notable parish on May 1. Mr. Lauderburn has endeared himself to the whole diocese as well as to the multitudes of members and friends of St. Stephen's. Everyone regrets not only his leaving St. Stephen's but his condition of ill health. The affectionate good wishes for fully recovered strength go out to him from all who have had the privilege of his friendship. Bishop Lawrence, writing to the parishioners of St. Stephen's, says:

"During the past year or two Mr. Lauderburn and I have had a number of talks as to whether it would be possible for him to endure any longer the strain of the work at St. Stephen's; for, as you well know, the work, the situation and the conditions are a heavy strain. I have always expressed the hope that he would be able to continue, but a few weeks ago it was clear to me and to him that the time for his resignation had come."

PHILADELPHIA

The Archbishop of York in Philadelphia—The Most Reverend Cosmo Gordon Lang, of York, will come to the city on Saturday, March 23. On Palm Sunday His Grace is to preach at Old Christ church at 10:30 in the morning. At four in the afternoon there will be a great citizen's mass meeting at the Metropolitan Opera House. On Monday morning at 11 the Archbishop will address the clergy of the diocese at St. James' church. Monday afternoon the wardens and vestrymen of the diocese are to be addressed by His Grace at the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany at 4:30. Tuesday noon, the 26th, the students at the University of Pennsylvania will hear Dr. Lang at noon.

Unique Confirmation at St. Mary's—On March 11 Bishop Beecher of Western Nebraska, acting for Bishop Rhinelander, confirmed three brothers. They were: Lieutenant Theodore G. Vetterlein, who was under orders to sail for France on that day. Wayne S. Vetterlein, who was wounded in France in ambulance service last August, and who hopes to return to the front as soon as he is quite recovered. The other brother was Frederick Dudley Vetterlein.

Candidates for Orders in "The Service"—Robert Frazier has been made a major. Thomas Merryweather has been chosen for training as an officer at Camp Hancock, where he enlisted as a private. Albert Lucas, who enlisted in the Marines, has been awarded a sharpshooter's medal, and is now serving on the battleship Oklahoma. Loyal Graham, Marine Corps, at Paris Island, lately rounded up his company for Communion Service. Some had never attended such a service and were deeply impressed.

Flags Dedicated at the Incarnation—At the Church of the Incarnation, Broad and Jefferson Streets, the Rev. N. V. P. Levis, Rector, there was a special service on Sunday afternoon, March 10. French, British, Red Cross and Service Flags were dedicated. The French consul spoke. A number of French sailors attended the service. Addresses were made by a lieutenant of the English Army, and by Mrs. Imogen Oakley of the Red Cross.

Blind Organist's Music Played—At a late musical service at the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany the entire musical program was composed by the late Dr. David Wood. Dr. Wood was blind; for forty years he was the organist at St. Stephen's church, this city.

Another Gift From Mrs. George C. Thomas—Through the generosity of Mrs. George C. Thomas, the house adjoining the Chapel of St. Simon the Cyrenian, at 2122 Read Street, has been given to the Parish of the Holy Aspostles for the use of the chapel. This affords a much-needed equipment for the Rev. Mr. Logan and his devoted workers.

Patriotism vs. Luxuries—On account of complications arising from the War, work on the new Church of St. George's, in Richmond, has been discontinued for the present. For the past two months the missionary and his people have been holding "trench services" in the unfinished building. Prayers at these services are chiefly for the Allies, for the Nation, and for the members of the congregation who are in the service. The missionary says: "When work needs to be done to win the War for justice and for liberty, this building is content to wait, unfinished, until the day when our people shall come to celebrate the great victory." IRVING A. MCGREW.

CHICAGO

Patriotism for Shop Girls—The Daughters of the American Flag is the name of an interesting organization founded by Mrs. Alfred T. Martin, a member of St. Chrysostom's parish, the primary purpose of which is to stimulate loyalty to the flag amongst shop and factory girls of foreign extraction. Noonday meetings of the organization are held at the John M. Smyth Company and the Wm. C. Ritchie box factory. The parish choirmaster leads in the singing of patriotic songs at these meetings, while the Rev. Gardner MacWhorter, assistant minister, makes short patriotic addresses.

The Knights of Washington—Company G, First Regiment of the Knights of Washington, held its Fourth Annual Assembly at St. Chrysostom's parish house recently. One of the features of the assembly was a "meatless banquet". Patriotic addresses were made by Joseph A. Schwickerath, of St. Paul's Lutheran church, and Private Harry Irving Brauns, who was at home on furlough from Camp Logan, Texas. Messrs. Frederick Temple and John Sweet (of St. Luke's church, Evanston) brought greetings to the Knights from the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. F. C. Spalding, the captain of Company G, brought the evening to a close with a splendid address on "Idealism".

Free Military Training at University—The University of Chicago is offering free military training to any man who wishes to enroll in its non-commissioned officers' training corps, which drills between the hours of seven-thirty and nine-thirty on four nights of each week.

Social Service at St. Simon's—One of the new parochial organizations at St. Simon's church, of which the Rev. Leslie F. Potter is rector, is the Christian Service League, which is intended to be the Social Service Department of the Church School. The watchwords of the League are Loyalty, Patriotism, and Economy. The League is to work for the extension of the Kingdom of God within the parish and at home and abroad through Church Missions as members of the Junior Auxiliary. All members are expected to work for the country through the Red Cross. The first week of the society was that of assuming the support for two years of one of the "fatherless children of France"..

Girls' Military Company at Pontiac—A company for the military training of girls has been organized at Grace church, Pontiac. R. R. Frakes, the senior warden of the parish, is drill master. The outdoor work will be conducted by the rector.

Brewers Attack "Dry Petition"—A particularly violent attack upon the "dry petition" has been launched by the Chicago Brewers' Association, the purpose of which is to have the petition invalidated. At this writing the petition is in the hands of the election board, which is checking the signatures on the petition against the registration lists.

Church Aids in Patriotic Meetings—Within the month there has been instituted at the Woodlawn Masonic Temple a series of patriotic meetings under the auspices of the local branch of the Council of National Defense. The speaker at the initial meeting was Federal Judge Landis. The Rev. Charles Herbert Young, the rector of Christ church, conducts the devotional service while the choir of Christ church leads in the singing of patriotic songs.

Quiet Day at Christ Church—The annual quiet day of this parish was conducted on the second Wednesday in Lent by the Rev. Leicester C. Lewis, professor at the Western Theological Seminary, who proved an unusually helpful leader.

The Men's Club of the parish had the unusual privilege of securing as its speaker at the last meeting of the club Professor Soures, of the University of Chicago, who delivered a stirring address on "The Meaning of the War". At a recent meeting the Men's Club held a "Scout Night". Service badges were presented to fifty boy scouts who had earned ninety percent or more while acting as messengers at the reserve officers' training corps at Fort Sheridan last summer.

Sunday Funerals Abolished—The Chicago Motor Liverymen's Association has "done its bit" toward the abolition of "Sunday funerals" by its refusal to provide hearses and motor cars on Sundays (except in cases of extreme emergency). It is hardly necessary to say that the Episcopal clergy, as well as those of other communions, heartily endorsed the action of the association. ALBERT EDWARD SELCER

NORTH DAKOTA

Model Study Classes—Miss Mary ... Smith, of the Diocese of Minnesota, who successfully conducted the Institute of Missions last Fall at Gethsemane cathedral, has very generously given several weeks of her time to holding model mission study classes in North Dakota, visiting Valley City, Jamestown, Bismarck, Mandan and Dickenson. Of course, only a few days could be given to each place, but it was sufficient to stimulate and quicken an interest which will grow and result in much good in the building up of the people locally and the cause of missions generally.

Federation Booms Noon-day Service—The Federation of Churches of Fargo is making enthusiastic effort to pack our noon-day theater services during Holy Week when Bishop Tyler will be the speaker each day. The Bishop is looked upon by the community as belonging not only to the Episcopal Church, but to all the churches. HENRY F. KLOMAN

Oldest Clergyman Dies—The Rev. J... W. Chesley, ninety-three years of age, the oldest clergyman on the eastern shore, the oldest living alumnus of the Virginia Seminary, died at his home in St. Michaels, Maryland, March 7, after an illness of only a few weeks. Mr. Chesley was born in Baltimore April 15, 1825, and entered the ministry in 1852. He was twice rector of Miles River parish, Diocese of Easton, and also rector of All Saints' parish, St. Mary's county, Maryland, where he served for twenty-nine years. He was canonically resident in the Diocese of Washington and was a member of the first standing comm...

f that diocese. Twelve years ago he reired from the active ministry and made his ome at St. Michael's.

The funeral services were conducted by is son, Dean Harry Chesley, of the Catheral at Easton, assisted by a son-in-law of he deceased, the Rev. Charles E. Buck, of Rock Creek parish, Washington. He is urvived by a widow and four children.
The interment was in the St. Michael's par-sh church yard. The Masonic Lodge of Easton, of which he was a member, at-ended the services in a body.

NEWARK

Colonel Stevens' Death—In the death of Col. Edwin A. Stevens on March 8 the Diocese of Newark has lost its most promient layman, a man devoted to its service s few have been. He has long been treas-rer of the diocese, and its good business nethods are largely due to him. He has een deputy to the General Convention ince 1901. His father was the founder of Stevens Institute, and the family home at Castle Point, Hoboken, has been one of he best known in the country.

He made a remarkable record as marine ngineer and showed marked genius in his vork. He was a graduate of Princeton, in he class with President Wilson, who, when Governor of New Jersey, appointed him ommissioner of the roads of the state. His ast public service was as a member of the oard having oversight of the construction f the new ships, and he had been along he coast from Galveston to Maine, doing a reat deal of hard work for the Govern-
ent. He died in his sixtieth year, and is death is a very great loss not only to is friends but to the diocese, state and overnment.

Clergy in Service—Fifteen of the clergy f the diocese are or have been in the servce of the Government: the Rev. Messrs. Mabry and Darlington are chaplains in the egular army; the Rev. Messrs. Johnston nd Fair are in the Ambulance Service in France; the Rev. Messrs. Martin, Ander-on, Stridsberg are Y. M. C. A. secretaries broad, the Rev. Messrs. Hoxsey and Handy are serving in the line as enlisted men; he Rev. Messrs. Tyler, Popham and Cook re at service in the camps, with leave of bsence from their parishes; the Rev. Messrs. Dunseath, Thompson, H. D. Wilson ave been in Y. M. C. A. service at Camp McClellan and Camp Dix. Several others re waiting for action upon their applica-ons for service.

New Churches Planned—While church uilding has been largely suspended because f the War, a new church at Vailsburg and ew rectories at Arlington and Ampere are kely to be soon built.

Permanent Missions Fund—At the last eeting of the General Board of Missions was announced that, in accordance with er wishes, $5,000 had been given to estab-sh a permanent fund in memory of Mrs. Decatur M. Sawyer, for many years very fficient head of the Woman's Auxiliary of he Diocese of Newark, the income to be sed for the support of the missionary ork.

Ordination—On the Fourth Sunday in ent, at Grace church, Union Hill, Bishop Lines ordained Deacon Chas. J. Child, who has for some time been taking services in the missions at Grandview, Fairview and Woodcliffe. He was presented for ordination by the Rev. Geo. P. Armstrong and the sermon was preached by Rev. Francis B. Blodgett of the General Theological Seminary. While at the General Seminary, Mr. Child was a student from the Diocese of Connecticut.

English Church News

Christianity and the League of Nations—Something like the united voice of British Christianity, if the leaders of the various Christian organizations are to be considered competent to sound it, has at last been heard on the subject of the League of Nations. Judging from internal evidence the resultant document is at least mainly the work of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who is the first of the signatories. The Bishops of Winchester, Oxford, Southwark and Peterboro' represent our Church, Dr. Cooper speaks for the (Presbyterian) Church of Scotland, some well-known ministers speak for Nonconformity, Mr. Arthur Henderson and George Lansbury for Labor, and so forth. The Roman Church is apparently represented by one member of the Society of Jesus, but possibly the absence of the names of their chief officers in this country is due to the fact that the Pope has already spoken on the subject, as the manifesto reminds us. It begins by reciting the attitude of President Wilson and other statesmen, and goes on to summon the support of all Christian people for the plan of a League of Nations "with power to constrain by economic pressure or armed force any Nation refusing to submit to arbitration or international judication, in the first instance, any dispute with another tending to war". The signatories agree with President Wilson that such a league should not be contemplated as a remote outcome of the War, but should be put in the forefront of the peace terms. They even think it would be advisable, though here they are not dogmatic, to make a beginning of the league, as regards the Allies and neutrals, even before the Peace Conference. But in any case they are sure that the Christian consciousness has an opportunity of making its own spirit felt in national policy.

The C. M. S. and Its Critics—All the fears that the Church Missionary Society would have to face a crisis, and possibly a split, are now allayed. The sub-committee appointed to deal with the memorialists, who urged that the Society should broaden its basis, have brought out a report which would appear to satisfy both sides. It is mostly a matter of pious phrases, but nobody can question the sincerity of the feelings which prompted the language. The Society will apply its principles "with wise consideration of the ever-changing circumstances of missionary work". It touches one point of ritual: it hopes that its agents will still take the "North-side position" when celebrating the Holy Communion, but they are permitted to take the "Eastward position", if it is so customary in any church which they are visiting. It deprecates any attempt to define the mode in which the Inspiration of the Bible took place. It is willing to cooperate with other missionary societies in certain cases provided "no attempt be made to initiate joint organization in the country, which would be confusing to our different constituencies". In other words, the C. M. S. is determined to remain a party society. It is probably this last decision which has provoked the Challenge to take serious exception to the report, while rejoicing that a way of peace has been found. "There is no vision of the Catholic Church", says the Challenge, "and there is no anticipation of a Kingdom of God to come down out of heaven and to be established in the world. The document seems to us to belong to the last generation . . . It will not have any strong appeal to the young."

Bishop Montgomery's Resignation—Bishop Montgomery hinted at his possible resignation from the secretaryship of the S. P. G. some time ago, and now he has definitely said that his official work must cease in the Autumn, thus giving the Society ample time for the difficult task of finding a suitable successor. It is curious to recall the misgivings of many S. P. G. people when he was appointed in 1901, and his own hesitation in accepting the post. All those fears have proved quite groundless. You in America who had the privilege of meeting him on his late visit to your country will understand what an inspiration he has been to the whole Church at home. The mere list of the reforms which he introduced is itself considerable, but it was his personality rather than organizing powers which left a deep mark on the Society. All his subordinate workers are devoted to him, and in this respect he is almost irreplaceable.

The Originator of the "War-Shrines"—When the first "Roll of Honor" was set up in a street of East London, the fact was duly recorded in these notes. It will be remembered that the fact was brought to the notice of Queen Mary, who paid a visit to the parish, South Hackney, to see the shrine. Mr. Batty, the rector, awoke to find himself famous. The newspapers wrote up the idea, which has been followed very widely, and has extended, I believe, to America. But Mr. Batty is known to his brethren on quite other grounds. He is a strong force on more than one evangelistic committee, and his latest piece of good work was the chairmanship of the "Mission to adolescents", which has tabulated some very wonderful results in the report which it has just issued. The interest of the report is that it tells the Church quite frankly what the young people are thinking. I hope to have space to summarize this report soon.

Mr. Batty is not, however, to be left in the parish where the first shrine was erected. He has just been appointed to the living of St. Gabriel's, Warwick Square, where he will find one of those extraordinarily complicated problems—a jumble of rich and poor, packed together in quite a small area. It is not a very well-known church. But it would not be surprising if the new vicar made it as famous as South Hackney.

The Free Pew

To the Editor of The Churchman:

Keep up The Churchman's battle for the open pew. On my first visit to New York, when I was seven years old, I was taken to St. ——— and stood for twenty-five minutes, although it was an ordinary Sunday and there were plenty of vacancies. For ten years after that my familiy could not persuade me to go inside one of our New York churches. I would not go where I was not wanted, although we spent a great deal of time in that city.

Only last Winter I went into a New York church, where there were many vacancies, and stood for over fifteen minutes. Ushers were hunting all round for places, although they were in plain sight. Finally I was tired and disgusted and everything, but in a worshiping frame of mind, and sat down beside a human iceberg. After service I stopped to see the church and one of the people said to me, "Yes it is a beautiful church, but far too large for us, even if all our congregation were present, they could only occupy one-third of the seats".

The only churches I go to in New York are where my friends have pews which I can ask for, or where the seats are free. I will not stand the insult of the waiting, and seeing vacancies not filled during the entire service.

Of course there are many things to be said on the other side, and at home we probably have not always been as watchful for the stranger as we might, but we have at least always made strangers welcome.

Class Churches

To the Editor of The Churchman:

You are certainly on the move these days. Your two recent editorials, "Getting Together" and "What Do You Propose?" are as if some one had put his arm around my shoulder and said, "See here, we have been shillyshallying for years about a lot of things. Come on, and let's do something and do it now". They have dynamic force, but have you the nerve to go on with it until our glacial crystallization gets too hot to hold and begins at last to flow forward with irresistible power? You say, "We can abolish our class churches". The fact that you can say that on the front page of The Churchman makes me almost feel that perhaps we can. I put it a great deal more mildly than that in a fashionable New York church a few years ago, and provoked such a storm that I was morally thrown into the street, and subsequently narrowly escaped a Protestant form of excommunication. Today you say it and get away with it. It only goes to show how far we have gone in just this year or two. You and I know that to get rid of our classiness is an absolute necessity for the Episcopal Church, and that if we do not do it probably a social movement will do to them what the French did to the Madeleine or worse. You and I know that rented pews are an abomination, the Devil's own choice way of keeping, not persons, but people, out of church, and yet—of course, the real trouble lies away back of these exotics. We would not have limousine churches if the Church were not divided against herself. As a matter of fact the Roman Church does not have them, nor, I think, the Greek Church. It is only Protestantism that has them. The more catholic the Church the less is class distinction possible. If a village has fifty-seven varieties of Christianity, one of these will be of the socially elect. But if there be one people's Church for all, it will not be a class Church.

I do feel full of hope for a far richer Christian life in the years to come. There is a great unifying force at work which some call a "changing order", and others call "the coming of the kingdom". But until I read your editorial, "Getting Together", I had felt that the signs were very ominous as to whether our beloved communion would be in any adequate sense prepared for this movement, or capable of taking other than a very lagging part, if any, in it. You see it is going to be a movement to which the principles of exclusion will be intolerable, in which private roads to Heaven will be blind and grass grown, in which real men will not worship in churches built on the limousine principle. The essence of this new social order, if it is Christian, will be toleration, getting together, because these are the very essence of Christ's own Christianity. The Pharisees were separatists.

I know that we have claimed to have stood for Church unity, but the basis of Church unity is not to be found in any negative exclusion or neutral green table of diplomacy, but only at that critical point where the ice of self melts and there flows forth in streams of living fire the New Commandment. The only unity that will ever come will be that which makes that commandment a living thing. The reason that we are not One is that we are not One, and perhaps the major value of being One will be the becoming One. I know well the value of sound doctrine, but I dare to believe that whatever doctrine men who actually get together hold will be entirely satisfactory to meet the conditions of absolute truth, and that the resulting Church will not only be the exponent of that doctrine but, better still, the exponent of the group which holds it. If "peace is not an ideal", but "a state attending on an ideal", neither is unity an ideal. It also is merely a state attending on that living thing without which men are counted dead in God's sight.

Draft Takes Teachers

To the Editor of The Churchman:

The Church's educational work in China and Japan is facing a serious situation resulting from the enactment by the United States of the Selective Conscription Law. This made it impossible last Summer to send to St. John's University, Shanghai, and St. Paul's College, Tokyo, three young men who had volunteered for service as lay teachers. They were eminently qualified for the work, but were within the draft age, and consequently could not leave the country without giving the impression that they were desirous of escaping the draft, or running the risk of being called back to this country at any moment.

The difficulties caused these great institutions are further emphasized by the fact that some of the younger men now in the field are asking whether they ought not to come back to this country to enlist in the naval or military service. Lay members of the faculty of these institutions returning to this country for furlough might find it difficult to go back to the field.

Under these circumstances, Dr. Pott of St. John's University has asked us to find if possible at least three men who are not subject to the draft, either by reason of age or for some minor physical disability, such as slightly impaired vision. In any case men beyond the draft age should not be older than thirty-five. They should be unmarried, college graduates, and with some teaching experience.

If any of your readers know of men who might be available for such service at this, will they send us the names and addresses, in order that further particulars may be supplied? John W. Wood.

Church Missions House.

Wanted—An Organ

To the Editor of The Churchman:

In a recent letter from the Rev. A. R. Llwyd, our missionary who arrived in Port au Prince, Haiti, the last of January, he writes:

"Is there any possibility of getting us a good second-hand reed organ, and half decent second-hand church furniture, with Communion vessels? The cheapest lumber here is $100 a 1,000 feet, while buying furniture is impossible; it is costly beyond imagination."

The work is now re-beginning in such a splendid way and Mr. Llwyd's enthusiasm is so contagious that we hope he will secure this organ and be able to put the services on a satisfactory basis. I might add that the Civil Administrator of Port au Prince, Major Marston, is a devoted Churchman and is keenly interested in helping Mr. Llwyd in every way, so you can see that our opportunities there are now unlimited.

THE REV. S. H. HILLIARD DIES

Established Coffee Rooms in Most Crowded Sections of Boston

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—The Rev. Samuel H. Hilliard, a well-known clergyman of this diocese, died on March 12 at the age of eighty years. Mr. Hilliard was for thirty-two years the secretary of the New England Church Temperance Society and has presented the cause so dear to him from all the pulpits of the diocese. Mr. Hilliard's funeral was held in St. John's Church, Jamaica Plain, on March 14, in which parish he had lived for some time past. Bishop Lawrence officiated.

He established and operated for many years a number of "coffee rooms" in the crowded and poorer quarters of the city of Boston, where men found a welcome, a chance for wholesome recreation and the opportunity of getting a warm drink in the chill evenings of winter. These "coffee rooms" were designed to be competing agencies with the city saloons—places where warmth and cheer could be had without the temptations and vicious surroundings of the saloon. Many of the clergy and laity of the diocese have furnished lectures and entertainments in these rooms through the winter months.

By means of summer "tent-services", Mr. Hilliard carried on an outdoor evangelistic work for a number of summers, assisted by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and many of the diocesan clergy.

PEOPLE DOUBLE MISSION GIFTS

Board Reports One Day's Income Plan Now Totals $15,000

NEW YORK CITY.—The middle of March found the One Day's Income Plan totaling $15,000. The Board of Missions is much heartened by the nature of the response to this movement. People, realizing the necessity of having the Church speak out above the din of war, are many of them sending larger offerings than usual to the Plan.

Some hopeful messages are reaching the Missions House. One Churchman—a physician—has doubled his offerings for missions in 1918 because he realizes the additional needs arising from the War and the vital importance of putting into the world's life the fundamentals for which the Church's missionary work stands. From Pennsylvania comes similar news; certain Church people have doubled all their offerings for Church enterprises and are making their War gifts additional sacrifices.

G. F. S. DISCUSSES LABOR LAWS AND WAR SERVICE

NEW YORK CITY.—At a social service conference in St. Michael's parish house February 26 Miss Minor reported on the work accomplished during the Winter. Between 100 and 200 violations of the labor laws had been reported to the proper authorities and all had been sustained. In several cases employers had been brought to trial and convicted. Miss Kutz, representing the Government War Savings Committee, gave an admirable address on War Thrift, urging upon all women the duty of upholding the Government in all its demands upon us. Not only must they knit garments, but lend their money by buying War Savings Stamps, and economize in the use of such woolen materials as are needed by the Government for soldiers' uniforms. Mrs. Schwartz, speaking on the Workman's Compensation Law as it affects women, urged the girls to report accidents occurring in places where they worked. Few women realize that they can claim compensation in case of accident and it is important that they should know all about it. Eleven million dollars was paid out last year in compensation for accidents. Mrs. Harold Brown, chairman of the War Service Committee, explained to the girls that the special G. F. S. War Work was not for G. F. S. members but for all girls and was to be done by the whole society.

Do You Grow Tired Rolling Bandages? Read This!

FOLLOWING is a paragraph from a letter written by a well-known Harvard athlete and Church boy to his rector in Massachusetts:

"I have read many interesting accounts of the wonderful work the women in America are doing now for the Red Cross. If you or they could see these poor creatures lying on stretchers near the front, sometimes for hours, and then arriving at the evacuation hospital with the blood dripping from their clothes or caked hard against a wound, you would appreciate what a clean bandage meant. I know that it is tiresome work making bandages, but the relief they bring here words cannot express."

The War Commission of the Church has asked the Girls' Friendly Society to send Bibles and Prayer Books to the soldiers who ask eagerly for them. Branches of the Girls' Patriotic Service League are forming everywhere. A new lodge is ready for use in Elizabeth, New Jersey, where girls may be well cared for. In Southern Ohio girls are pledging themselves to raise $1 each to realize a sum of $10,000 to pay the Travellers' Aid Society to meet girls going to and from cities. These are but a few of the things the G. F. S. has done since it began its war work.

Peking Gorgeous, Accounts Trying!

A missionary from Anking, traveling last Summer, thus describes Peking:

"Along the railway it seemed thoroughly Japanese. When we reached Peking it was like stepping into another world—the temples, palaces, great wall, gates and people were so gorgeous. The yellow tiled upturned roofs of the Imperial and Forbidden Cities, moats and pagodas were a wonderful, never to be forgotten sight. The part of China about Anking is so very poor, it was a great comfort to see what the Chinese not merely engaged in a daily struggle for a few bits of rice could do."

Miss Peavey after three months in Changsha, finds keeping accounts difficult. She writes:

"A paper dollar is about 2,900 cash, a silver dollar at present 4,100—it varies from 3,000 to 4,500. When it comes to paying 70/2,900 for the day's vegetables and 480/4,500 for a tumbler, bookkeeping is just lost in the shuffle!"

MYSTERY PLAY IN HONDURAS

Mrs. Dunn Plans to Train Children for Next Christmas

NEW YORK CITY.—The wife of the Bishop of British Honduras writes the Church Mission House that they are interested in the review in THE CHURCHMAN of the mystery play, Conquering and to Conquer, and has ordered a copy, together with the suggestions for presenting it. She adds: "We are convinced that to dramatize a truth is to impress it indelibly on the mind and heart of a child. I am thinking of training some of our brighter little folks to enact the Christmas story this coming December. It would draw crowds of parents as well as children, and teach them as they cannot be taught in sermons.

"At present the schools are on the lines of the old dame schools. By next Advent we hope to put a proper scheme of study in the hands of every Sunday school teacher in the district."

Death of James Stillman

SEVENTH YEAR

The ALL NIGHT MISSION, now in the fifth year of its career of service, during which it has sheltered over 200,000 men, fed over 150,000 and helped over 14,000 to a new start in life, and has made 800 visits to prisons, 900 visits to hospitals, and conducted 2,000 services, is in need of funds.

This is a unique and practical rescue mission for men which never closes NIGHT OR DAY, where the weary, wandering souls to whom all doors are closed may find sympathetic friends to talk and pray with, free shelter, clothing, food and drinking water, NIGHT OR DAY.

Through Mr. Dudley Tyng Upjohn, its President and Treasurer, the Mission asks for support to continue and extend its work. Contributions may be sent to 8 Bowery or P. O. Box 81, New York City.

This work is endorsed by the Rt. Rev. Charles S. Burch, D.D., Bishop Suffragan of New York.

Obituary

MEMORIAL MINUTE
CHARLES G. SAUNDERS

The Commission on the Enrichment and Revision of the Prayer Book is called upon again to record the passing away of one of its members, Mr. Charles G. Saunders, prominent in his diocese, honored by all who knew him, a delegate to the General Convention and conspicuous for his usefulness as a member of Committees on the Constitution and Canons of the Church. His removal from the work and deliberations of the Commission on the Revision of the Prayer Book is a loss most serious to the Commission and to the Church.

Few laymen were so well posted as he in liturgical matters, and so deeply interested in the subject. Although of positive theological and ecclesiastical views, he was at the same time distinctly appreciative of the needs of the Church today. The members of the Commission had learned to value the soundness of his opinions, to appreciate the breadth of his outlook, while the charm of his character and manner made a deep impression on them all. We looked upon him as a dear friend and valued colleague.

With him may we be partakers of the heavenly kingdom.

CORTLANDT WHITEHEAD,
HOWARD B. ST. GEORGE,
ROBERT H. GARDINER,
Committee.

Attest: JOHN W. SUTER, Secretary.

Resolutions of Vestry of Gloria Dei (Old Swedes') church, Philadelphia.

MRS. ELEANOR R. SIMES

Whereas, in the Providence of God's mercy the presence of Mrs. Eleanor R. Simes, widow of our late beloved rector, the Rev. Snyder B. Simes, has been withdrawn from amongst us, and we of the vestry of Gloria Dei (Old Swedes') church, Philadelphia, with all of the congregation greatly mourn for her as a wise leader and inspiring influence in both spiritual and practical affairs during the period of our church's greatest prosperity, therefore

Be it Resolved, That in regular quarterly session of the vestry on the evening of March 4, 1918, we record our sincere appreciation of the splendid qualities of Mrs. Simes' character, shown both in the home, as the faithful helpmate of our late rector, and in the church, as the leader of many groups in all good works, particularly in the Sunday school, and in the Men's Bible Study, an organization which became a power for good among men of many kinds and creeds, making the name of Gloria Dei justly famous as the centre of a broad and wholesome Christian influence. "By their fruits ye shall know them," and countless families, now scattered in many places, are living witnesses to the seeds of the Gospel truth and Christian principle inculcated by the life and teaching of Mrs. Simes;

And be it Resolved That the vestry record their due recognition of the extent and practical wisdom of Mrs. Simes' encouragement to the late rector and his vestries, in all the business affairs of the parish. The welfare of Old Swedes' was ever her chief interest, and she gave to it of her means as generously as of her strength and mental gifts. Faithful in her attendance at the church and in her interest in all its work up to the very end, she finally gave supreme evidence of her faith in the church and its future by making provision of the utmost generosity in the disposition of her estate. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life," is the promise into the fulfilment of which she has entered, having committed her "soul unto the Lord in well-doing as unto a faithful creator";

And be it further Resolved, That the vestry extend their deep sympathy to the surviving members of her family, and that the Secretary be instructed to spread these resolutions upon the minutes and to send copies to Mrs. Simes' sisters and brother, and to the diocesan and general Church papers.

For the vestry:

FRANK MACFARLAND,
THOMAS W. SPARKS,
REV. PERCY R. STOCKMAN.

French and Belgian Protestant Organizations Unite in Appeal to Christian America

IN all the devastated regions of France there are Protestant Communities. Their sufferings are great. Their churches are destroyed. Their pastors are in the army or held as hostages. They have undergone bombardment and pillage and lived in caves of the earth. Their houses are destroyed, their gardens ravaged and their trees cut down.

At the breaking out of the war, there were over a thousand places of worship. Some of the losses sustained are shown in such figures as the following: Ministers and divinity students killed to Sept. 1, 1917, 58; ministers' sons killed, 102; damage to church buildings, one million dollars.

There is another entente than that of military forces. We are bound to France and Belgium by spiritual ties. Their sacrifices have been in our behalf, and are our heritage. Should not their sufferings become the burdens of our hearts?

The Huguenot churches have been in a large measure the soul of France. Christianity throughout the world owes them a debt which it can never repay, and which has been accumulating interest for centuries. But French Protestantism has a present and a future as well as a noble past. It weighs more than it counts.

A message from over there tells us that the work undertaken for sustaining these churches, building temporary places of worship, taking care of missionaries and deaconesses, looking after thousands of Protestant refugees, housing and feeding them, calls at once for $2,000,000. This amount should be followed by another two million, in order that they may proceed effectively with their ultimate work of rehabilitation and reconstruction.

If our churches and Christian people want to do something effective, looking toward the reconstruction of Europe, they need not wait. They can do it now by maintaining these spiritual forces in France and in her dependent sister, Belgium, during this time of their awful disaster.

Protestant Union in France and Belgium Cooperates with United American Religious Agencies working in France through United Committee on Christian Service for Relief in France and Belgium constituted by The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America

Represented on the United Committee are the following French and Belgian organizations:

Federation Protestante de France.
Comite Protestant Francais.
Comite Protestant d'Entr' Aide.
Union Nationale des Eglises Reformees Evangeliques.
Union Nationale des Eglises Reformees.
Eglise Evangelique Lutherienne de France.
Union des Eglises Evangeliques Libres.
Eglise Evangelique Methodiste.
Union des Eglises Baptistes.
Mission Francaise Eglise Methodiste Episcopale.
Societe Centrale Evangeliqne.
Eglise Chretienne Missionnaire Belge.
Mission Populaire Evangelique (McAll).

Such cooperation assures efficiency and offers unique opportunity to the people of America for the relief of suffering humanity, for giving increased power to spiritual factors in the reconstruction of France and Belgium, and for influencing the future of Protestantism.

Co-operating with the Committee are the following American organizations working in France:

American McAll Association.
American Huguenot Committee.
American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.
Methodist Episcopal Board of Foreign Missions.

The purpose of the Committee is:

1. To conserve and develop the Evangelical Churches and Missions in France and Belgium.
2. To further the interchange of thought and life between the religious forces of these three nations.
3. To render moral and financial support to the Evangelical Institutions and to the people of France and Belgium.

HYMN FOR PASSING SOULS SUNG PALM SUNDAY MORNING

NEW YORK CITY.—On Palm Sunday in Calvary church here, the rector, Dr. Sedgwick, enabled his congregation to put into words the petitions which were in all their hearts, by asking them just before the benediction to sing kneeling a hymn for passing souls. These are the words of the hymn:

"For the passing souls we pray,
Saviour, meet them on their way;
Let their trust lay hold on Thee
Ere they touch eternity.

"Holy counsels long forgot
Breathe again 'mid shell and shot;
Through the mist of life's last pain
None shall look to Thee in vain.

"To the hearts that know Thee, Lord,
Thou wilt speak through flood or sword;
Just beyond the cannons' roar,
Thou art on that further shore.

"For the passing souls we pray,
Saviour, meet them on their way;
Thou wilt hear our yearning call,
Who hast loved and died for all. Amen."

Bishop of London Asks All to Pray For Victory

LONDON.—The Bishop of London, the Right Rev. Arthur F. W. Ingram, has issued a message to the people of London, saying:

"The great struggle for the freedom of the world has now clearly reached its crisis. Do let us who are at home pray as we never prayed before for the gallant men and their leaders upon whom and God the issue depends.

"Besides our private prayers and prayers in churches at the hour of noon each day, let us hush ourselves wherever we are at work, in office, in bank, in munition factory, and invoke Divine strength and wisdom to come to their aid. Then, indeed, will this be Holy Week in a special sense, and it will lead on, if it pleases God, to an Easter victory."

P. T. Fenn Ordained

WICHITA, KANSAS.—On Passion Sunday, March 17, in St. John's church, Mr. Percy Thomas Fenn was ordained deacon by the Bishop of the diocese. The candidate was presented by his father, the Rev. Percy Thomas Fenn, D.D., the sermon being preached by the Bishop. The occasion was one of much rejoicing as it also marked the twenty-ninth anniversary of the Rev. Dr. Fenn's advancement to the diaconate. The Rev. Percy Thomas Fenn is a graduate of Hobart College (1915) and has returned to the Cambridge Theological School to complete his seminary work.

For Country

A BEAUTIFUL SERVICE flag has been presented to St. Paul's church, Duluth, by the Men's Club. It was blessed by the rector on Sunday, March 10. There are forty-two stars, one of them gold, in memory of one soldier whose life has been given for the cause. Special music was given by the choir which was supplemented by an orchestra.

THE REV. FRANK E. WILSON of St. Augustine's church, Chicago, has been commissioned first lieutenant by the State for work at Camp Grant.

A MOST INSPIRING patriotic service was held in St. John's church, Jersey City, N. J. (the Rev. Warren L. Rogers, rector), on the evening of Sunday, March 3. The parish Red Cross Unit, which has on its register, and weekly at work in its surgical dressings, hospital supplies and knitting departments, 193 women, was the centre of interest and recognition. Over 350 of these women attended the service in a body, and they made a beautiful sight in their Red Cross uniforms. Every available seat and standing space was taken by the immense congregation, and hundreds of people were turned away.

The church choir followed by the two troops of Boy Scouts entered the church, forming an escort of honor for a beautiful American flag which was presented. Appropriate speeches were made, the flag was blessed, the oath of allegiance was given by the entire congregation, and then the Star-Spangled Banner was sung.

The speaker of the occasion was the Honorable James M. Beck of New York City, who has taken such a prominent part in rousing national spirit.

THE REV. WILLIAM E. MCCORD, who has been rector of St. John's church, Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island, for many years, has resigned his charge and is now Major Chaplain William E. McCord, located at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, South Carolina.

ONE OF THE largest congregations in the history of the Church assembled in Christ Church, Lead, South Dakota, for the dedication of a service flag Sunday evening, March 10. The occasion was used to make an inspiring and patriotic war service, such as had not been in Lead since the beginning of the War. Several hundred were present and it was the general consensus of opinion that the inspiration of this service—the uplift and stirring of the conscience of the community—will last a lifetime and do a world of good in Lead.

A touching part of the service was the coming forward of the mothers one by one and pinning the stars on the flag. In reverent silence the mothers of twenty-seven boys responded. The addresses were given by the Superintendent of the Homestake Mining Company and two other officials of the company.

THE REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, archdeacon of Sewanee and East Tennessee, has organized among his own people a hospital unit, which has been presented through the local Red Cross of Chattanooga to the Government. A large majority of the doctors in this unit are Sewanee men.

The Archbishop and the Masses

To the Editor of The Churchman:

Will you kindly allow me to express my personal gratitude for the very interesting reports you have given your readers of the Archbishop's addresses to his various audiences? It has been my misfortune to be unable to attend any of the gatherings or services where His Grace has spoken, and it is especially welcome therefore to be able to get something of the spirit which he has conveyed to his listeners. The secular press has so emphasized (quite naturally) his mission to us as ally that the depth of his spiritual message has been overlooked. The Churchman has, however, made this quite clear.

"Let the will to power be conquered by the will to love." That was finely said and in that sentence lies the essence of the greatness of the struggle in which we are engaged and its only claim for the Christian conscience.

I wish very much that His Grace might have given his message to a still wider audience and especially that he might have had an opportunity to meet personally those who, thinking they have little in common with him, would, I feel sure, have found him deeply congenial. Likeminded people when they meet recognize their common life. The Archbishop and the masses of New York have too much in common not lightly to miss the pleasure and benefit that would have come from meeting.

Is it too late to give them both a chance? Many people will not go inside a church, cannot afford a dinner, and distrust the auspices under which our distinguished foreigners are entertained. It may be hard for us to see this, but it is true and it is not negligible. Of course there are faultfinders in every group. I am not thinking of those. But rather of the fact that we ought not to allow an important opportunity to be wasted. Many who do not believe the Church is Christian couldn't help seeing that the Archbishop is indeed a Christian. The testimony of personality is the greatest "evidence" of Christianity. It is when we see a man who lives in the presence of God that we begin to believe. Your accounts of the Archbishop's addresses give one that vivid, spiritual impression.

Mary Kingsbury Simkhovitch.

Greenwich House, New York City.

To the Editor of The Churchman:

I wish to thank The Churchman for its splendid accounts of the Archbishop's visit to New York, and the way in which they brought out the combination of spiritual insight and clear-sighted, practical outlook which evidence made all of his addresses so remarkable, so deeply stirring to the religious sense and so stimulating to new war endeavors. He came at a most tragic moment and calmly held that tragedy before us, making us realize with a fearless conviction that through that tragedy lay victory, not victory of arms alone but the larger achievement of true brotherhood between nations and a vivid understanding of God in a new and different world.

Those who are living in cities which His Grace has not visited, and those living in the out-of-the-way country villages, away from the stimulus of city life, should be especially grateful to you for enabling them to share the inspiration of the Archbishop's visit.

Walter Lane.

Omaha, Nebraska.

Women at Trinity

To the Editor of The Churchman:

I note with keen appreciation your mournful caveat about the rush of "devout Churchwomen" to hear the Archbishop preach in Trinity church last week. When we pause to consider the number of services and churches that the men have largely turned over to devout Churchwomen, the early services, even in cold or stormy weather, the afternoon services, even in pleasant weather, the evening services when the men are resting and the Quiet Days when they are not, one would really think that devout Churchwomen would be satisfied. But, no, on an occasion of unparalleled interest, when the Archbishop comes with his winning personality and compelling message, these everlasting devout Churchwomen actually claim their share in the unique privilege. I am glad some one has had the courage to call attention to such abominable selfishness, though complaints have been muttered before. It was only last week that I heard of a phalanx of these devout Churchwomen who went to a mission service that was intended for the unconverted. Think of it! They filled every seat, and if an unconverted person had happened to come in he might have had to stand.

What would you think of the suggestion that on future occasions of interest a placard should be hung out with the legend "Devout Churchwomen not admitted". It is the only way to treat such incorrigibles. They must be taught to know their place.

Elizabeth Cranstoun.

New York City.

(Elizabeth Cranstoun, our esteemed contributor, has a case if anyone has. She has earned the right to sit at the feet of any primate. The editors and readers of The Churchman are largely in her debt for many beautiful and inspiring contributions which have appeared in these columns. But our appeal in behalf of the spiritually seedy and undeserving males who cannot leave their offices before noon was based not upon their deserts but upon their needs. All good things are thus apportioned in the Kingdom of Grace. From what we know of our correspondent she would be the first to waive her rights and give up her place, if the complacent male might be inveigled into hearing a message that would arouse him from his lethargy. One man, we are told, got his arm broken in the struggle to get into the church (not suffragettes this time). Any devout woman, we are sure, would gladly have given up her place to that eager member of the undeserving sex.—The Editor.)

The Liquor Traffic

To the Editor of The Churchman:

An eminent member of the bar once said to me, "it is a lawyer's first duty to make his client appear innocent though in his heart he knows him to be guilty". Mr. Everett P. Wheeler made a most plausible defense of the liquor traffic at the public hearing at the capitol at Albany the other day, but we have not the slightest doubt a lawyer of his ability could have made out a much stronger case for "the Drys", for there is more to be said on their side. In his recent circular to the clergy against the Church Temperance Society and especially in his letter, which appeared in The Churchman of March 16, how short of ammunition Mr. Wheeler is becoming in his ceaseless fight for the liquor traffic is pathetically evident.

Mr. Wheeler tells your readers that beer is not an intoxicating liquid. Yet the public records of England show that 90 per cent. of the drunkenness in that land is the result of drinking beer. He further says that science does not declare beer to be a poison or a narcotic habit-forming drug. Surely Mr. Wheeler knows that the alcohol in beer is exactly the same drug as the alcohol in wine or whiskey. Beer is less injurious than whiskey, simply because the poison is diluted with a larger proportion of water. If all the water were removed from beer and Mr. Wheeler drank a pint of the residuum he would die immediately.

Mr. Wheeler says Churchmen cannot advocate prohibition because the Prayer Book declares wine to be the gift of God. Morphine is also the gift of God. Yet, the national Government has prohibited the sale of morphine.

James Empringham.

General Superintendent, Church Temperance Society.

New York City.

"Not Dearth of Clergy"

To the Editor of The Churchman:

A letter from the Rev. D. A. Sanford printed in your issue of February 9, and entitled "A Better System; Not Dearth of Clergy", seems to hit the nail on the head. We do in very fact need a "better system" of bringing clergy into touch with parish work.

The "better system" must be worked out and put into operation by a small group of people, acting on their own initiative. A central office must be established as a clearing-house. Those in charge must be prepared to receive information both about clergy and about parishes. They must form a bureau to which both clergy and parishes may resort. And they must finance the undertaking themselves.

Here is a task for those who have both leisure and means to devote to a great good work. We all know what was accomplished for the Pension Fund by a few devoted souls who were willing to give time, and brains and money to the undertaking. Are there not those who will supplement and complete this splendid achievement by establishing and maintaining a Bureau of Information for the active clergy, and for active parishes and missions?

War Poetry

A TREASURY OF WAR POETRY. Edited with Introduction and Notes, by George Herbert Clarke, Professor of English in the University of Tennessee. Houghton Mifflin Company. Boston and New York. $1.25.

To the reviewer, the difficulty with this book is that when he begins to read he forgets to write. It is impossible to stand in the midst of such a garden, to gather a few blossoms and say "Here are the most beautiful". They each seem beautiful.

One of the first impressions the reader receives is that among them all there is not a "Hymn of Hate". There may be one somewhere, lurking behind the bushes, but I have searched somewhat diligently, and rejoice to believe that our poets are leaving such things to the Germans, where they belong. Let them decorate their writers of Hymns of Hate. We will decorate our writers of Hymns of Justice.

And we find these here: Songs of patriotism, and sacrifice for the Great Cause, and courage—yes, and pathos. But they are such as free men and women sing, who for the sake of God and Right, are determined to see this thing through, because nothing else is conceivable. Kipling, for example:

"For all we have and are,
For all our children's fate,
Stand up and meet the War.
The Hun is at the gate!
Our world has passed away
In wantonness o'erthrown.
There is nothing left today,
But steel and fire and stone.

"Though all we knew depart,
The old commandments stand:
'In courage keep your heart,
In strength lift up your hand'."

The book is properly named. It is a "Treasury".

DEAN ROBBINS preached the substance of his sermon on Immortality and Youth at one of the noonday services at Trinity church, New York, this past Lent.

Arthur Wallace Peach is an old friend to THE CHURCHMAN. He lives in Northfield, Vermont.

The Very Rev. George Hodges, D.D., dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, sends us a very vivid and picturesque sketch of the Archbishop of York in Boston.

Pauline Coney Drown, who gives us a beautiful sketch of the life of her sister, One Who Overcame, is the wife of the Rev. Edward Staples Drown, D.D., of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge. Church people who attend the Cambridge Summer Conference for Church workers as well as those who live in the diocese of Massachusetts know Mrs. Drown through her classes.

Harriette H. Brooks is the widow of the Rev. John Cotton Brooks. In our Lent number we published some beautiful verses of hers which have been reprinted in other religious periodicals. It was gratifying to find them on the front cover of The Christian Intelligencer, for instance.

The Rev. Arthur Ketchum is the acting rector of the Church of the Epiphany, New York.

Genevieve Cowles is a New York Churchwoman who has spent several years in Palestine. Since General Allenby's entry into Jerusalem has focused attention on Palestine, Miss Cowles has contributed to current periodicals a number of articles, some illustrated by herself, on the land and its customs. When she brought the manuscript of the article printed in this issue into our editorial office, she told us a beautiful little story. The Jewish residents in Jerusalem were refugees hiding in the caves and underground passages near Jerusalem waiting for General Allenby's troops to reach the city. It was just before the Jewish feast of Light. At sunrise on the day of the feast, the troops arrived, and out from their hiding places came the refugees. "We have prayed for you day and night", they told the soldiers. "The land we have conquered is for you", was the soldiers' answer.

Ada M. Skinner is a teacher in the primary department of St. Agatha's School, New York City and a well-known writer for children. Since January she has been contributing every two or three weeks her delightful Heart of the Jungle Tales. This week she tells us how Easter was once celebrated in an African mission station.

The Rev. William Thomas Manning, D.D., S.T.D., the rector of Trinity church, New York City, has been at Camp Upton since December as chaplain of the 302nd Engineers.

The cover and the initial letter for the Easter number of THE CHURCHMAN were designed by Katherine Stymetz Lamb, a young New York artist, the daughter of Mr. Charles R. Lamb of the well-known firm of J. R. Lamb, the ecclesiastical designers. The design represents the Angel of the Resurrection passing over the ruin and desolation of the war-trampled countries over which the lilies spring up as he passes.

SATURDAY - MARCH 30 - 1918

This Easter

FIVE, eight, perhaps fifteen million boys have died and been buried in the war-swept fields since August, 1914. Any one who has looked upon the face of a dead child puts some very direct questions to the teachers of religion. These questions become more insistent when one sees youths and maidens taken from life at the very threshold of its open door. Are we any more reconciled to death when it robs us of the companionship of a life that has been welded into ours through forty, fifty or sixty years of memories and love? Death at any time brings to the door of religion this same eager question: "Shall he live again?" The death of millions of boys just entering manhood, the flower of the world's youth, does not alter this world-old question, but it compels us to think about it almost to the exclusion of everything else. If one of the boys who lie in the soil of France or Belgium happens to be our husband, son or brother the universe of faith for us pivots upon the question of the life everlasting.

There are subsidiary questions connected with death with which Good Friday deals with infinite consolation. It is by no accident that people in black throng our churches at the Three Hour Service. From Calvary they learn how life is saved by the crucifixion of life, and they go away carrying their special crosses in the sustaining faith that God asks nothing of us in suffering that cannot be turned to the world's benefit and to ours. All through Christendom during this year's Holy Week Christian teachers have tried to show how the wreckage and the agony of the world at this hour is being transmuted into a glorious resurrection of life.

But that lesson is not the Easter Gospel. It is beautiful, and it is infinitely sustaining; it steels the will to endurance; it lightens our burdens by giving us fellowship with Christ. It is a marvelously inspiriting gospel for fighters; nothing like it has ever been taught to fit men for the endurance tests of life. But there it stops. The draft it makes on man's faith, his will power and his heroism would be almost cruel if faith had not insisted that we see just a little way ahead of the Cross, Life coming forth from the tomb.

Without the Easter faith, without those material promises which the most childlike faith in a real heaven insists upon—heaven as real as our very flesh and blood—the doctrine of the Cross would not belong to the gospel of good news. Let us not "spiritualize" too much the theory of the resurrection and man's immortality. The eyes of mourners in England, Canada and Australia, and now too in America, fixed upon a little plot of ground with a cross over it in Flanders, France or Gallipoli, know that the one great gift within the power of God to give that can make life on earth worth the living is the gift of immortal life.

May the ministers of the Christ Who brought that faith to mankind be inspired this Eastertide to tell its promises in simple and convincing words.

Waiting

WE have been living through the most anxious, solemn Holy Week which, perhaps, the world has ever known. As we go to press, no one knows what Easter Day will have brought forth to decide the issues of the War. Around Cambrai the boys of England are making a wall with their bodies against an onslaught the success of which would mean unspeakable disaster.

It may be that Easter morning will bring to our waiting, anxious hearts the joy of success. It may be that we shall go to the Table of our Lord with heavier hearts than we have ever known. But, as believers in the Christ, nothing that can happen in the fortunes of men can alter the meaning of the Resurrection. Christ is risen. Out of the tomb of dead things, slavery, injustice, sordid ambitions, selfish aggression and evil passions, there is coming forth age by age a better and happier world. It is written in the stars that what our enemy stands for cannot succeed. He may even win the War but he can never hold what victory may temporarily bring him. To doubt that is to doubt the promise of the coming of Christ's Kingdom.

Though the foe may break through that wall of heroes on the Western Front, he cannot break through the living wall of apostles, saints, martyrs, prophets of freedom, justice and love. Victory is with them. The Resurrection seals that promise. We know. Defeat of militarism is written in the Book of Life. We know that because we believe in the living Christ.

So come what may, let us meet our Lord at His Table on Easter morning with stout hearts and a hope builded on surer things than guns and legions.

Armageddon

THERE is cause to view the present conflict in Europe as one upon which hangs the destiny of the world. Almost from the beginning of the War, England, France and America have been saying that the fate of Christian civilization hangs in the balance. The issue is so tremendous that rhetorical exaggeration is pardonable. Victory of the foe would mean disaster so terrible to us who love freedom that we wonder how we could rise above the despair and gloom of so awful a catastrophe. We cannot for a moment doubt that the Allies will win the War.

But is it quite the Christian reading of history for us to say that into the keeping of any war machine God relinquishes the destinies of the world and the fate of mankind? The strongest war machine is likely to win. We must never forget that. But have we been learning Christ all these centuries only to believe that God permits man's mechanical and brute devices to overreach the councils of heaven and to determine what sort of a world this shall be?

Our very faith in the Resurrection of Christ compels our faith in the triumphant power of love. That love can conquer stronger powers than Germany. It has done so many a time in the past. Even in hours of humiliation we must hold fast by that Christian conviction. The youth of the world today, in spite of the agony of war, are standing upon tiptoe with a great light in their eyes and a mighty hope in their hearts. Suddenly what was once the dream of poets and of saints is no longer a dream. It has become a resolution. In the world that is to be the mighty shall be put down from their seats; the humble shall be exalted.

Christ will care for His own.

Living Without Fear

ST. PAUL used the doctrine of the Resurrection as a practical incentive to right living here and now. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above"; then the Apostle plunges straight into homely moral precepts.

A belief in immortality gives a sacramental value to our home life and our every-day associations. It enhances a hundredfold the significance of every hour of life. One feels this as he walks the streets of some old towns in Italy which have carried over into modern life their rich heritage from the Middle Ages. There is something there which one cannot find in our modern cities, a sense of anchorage, a shrine—a quiet as of men living under the shadow of a great hope. The Virgin Mothers they painted, the churches they built, show that they felt the inward and spiritual grace hid in common things. What our modern cities stand for seems to appear on the hard, glaring surface. They lack sacramental value. They mean comfort or they mean sanitation; they mean luxury or they mean poverty and despair. There is a worldliness here which has almost eliminated the thought of heaven. But where a home is a shrine for souls believing that life goes on forever, we find quiet and deep breathing. Nothing gives such a sense of large leisure as the faith that man lives forever; there is time to build character, time to live richly.

It is no longer considered good form in religion to appeal to people's self-interest in this matter of winning or losing heaven. One wonders how Jonathan Edwards would fare among us today. Intolerably cruel to us, doubtless, would seem his harsh theology. It was cruel. Theology generally goes wrong when it disregards the instincts of the heart and gives free rein to logic. One of the accomplishments of which modern religion is most proud is that it has eliminated fear from religion. Undoubtedly we have done so. But have we succeeded in eliminating fear from life? There is a far sadder fear than the fear of hell. It is the fear that there may be neither a hell nor a heaven. That is modern, and it is infinitely more gloomy than the other. The fear that night may be nigh with no dawn—that the wages of life are money, health, comfort. If we have failed in these, or in succeeding have found them bitter to the taste, then there is nothing more for hope.

If our theology is truly to be more humane than the stern thing which was taught among us one hundred years ago, the beautiful hope we have today must do more for us than fear did for people of old. No one believes that any child of God has ever deserved eternal punishment. But neither do we believe that the greatest among us can earn or deserve heaven. That, like all the most beautiful things we enjoy, is God's free gift, the gift of grace. Nothing we can do can earn for us the joy we have in the beauty of a flower, or a Spring day, or the laughter of little children. These are heavenly things wafted down by God's grace from the abundant storehouse of worlds we dimly feel. God gives them; we cannot earn them. So with immortality! The very lavishness of the gifts of God we already know justifies the mighty hopes we have in heaven. We know that His promises exceed all that we can desire. We use no threat to make others see what we see and feel what we enjoy in the presence of Nature and of art. We try to kindle appreciation. So it is the eternal task of religion to awaken in the hearts of men an appreciation of the wonder and the range of life, of God's love and the lavish gift of life He holds in store for all of us.

A School for Army Chaplains

ON Monday, March 4, the War Department opened a school for the training of Army chaplains at Fort Monroe, Virginia. This marks a significant departure from the old tradition of training chaplains for their work. Hitherto it has never been thought important to offer special training to the men selected to be chaplains. Any minister who received his appointment was left to stumble into a knowledge of the most important requirements of his office. The War has magnified the importance of the chaplain's work. We want our best men for the ministry in the Army and Navy, and we want them trained for the highest order of service. The people of the country have begun to feel this keenly. Harvard University with five theological schools in affiliation with it has offered a course for chaplains, and now the Government itself has started a school at Fort Monroe.

Those intrusted with the responsibility of this training school are, we are sure, awake to the scope that such training should take. It is, of course, essential that the chaplain should know his position from a military point of view. This is purely a technical matter but it cannot be despised. But this primary training does not, of course, touch the essential functions of a chaplain's ministry. He is above all expected to be a moral and religious teacher. In this regard the ministry required of him is of a very high order. He must exercise his leadership under circumstances different from any encountered by the clergy in our home parishes. The trenches and camps present unique problems. There are issues involved which require a spiritual understanding quite different from that necessary for other clergymen. These men about to go forth to minister to soldiers and sailors are to be placed over the largest parishes in the world, parishes composed of young men with special needs and dangers. They ought to enter upon their task with a training as technical and careful as any other officer in the Army. We hope the new school at Fortress Monroe will offer such preparation by bringing the chaplains in training into contact with the men of sound sense and enthusiasm who have been at the Front, and are therefore fitted to inspire candidates with a large vision of their forthcoming work.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Signs of Unity

SOMETIMES when we grow rather discouraged as to the prospects for Church unity, it is well to cheer ourselves by a consideration of the gradual approach certain supposedly antagonistic points of view are making to each other. Take the matter of liturgical use. A new edition of the Common Service Book of the Lutheran Church is lying on the editorial desk; as we turn the pages there is much that is both beautiful and familiar. There are certain things we could recommend for thoughtful consideration to the committee on Prayer Book Revision, such as the ten pages of Prayers and Collects for special occasions. Theoretically the Lutheran prayer book is known to us all; but practically many Episcopalians have a feeling that they alone are the possessors of a book of common worship. And how many realize until they attend a Congregational or Presbyterian church that these bodies have so enriched their services from a liturgical point of view that those trained up by the Prayer Book can feel really at home when worshiping with these brethren of a different communion?

On our part we too have begun to appreciate the advantages of elasticity in our services. It is true that we still have much to learn. For example, a simple prayer in the clergyman's own words for those engaged in the terrible drive now on would have voiced the petitions of heavy-hearted worshipers at the services this past week far better than any of the war-prayers now in use could do. Nevertheless in mission services, in the "fellowship of silence", and in Bible and mission study classes and prayer groups we are drawing closer in method of worship to our separated brethren than some of us realize.

Let us think of these things when we are sometimes discouraged.

Before the Morning Watch

TRAVELING with the Archbishop of York as his chaplain is an English clergyman with a message that we should heed with attention and gratitude. As far as we know, Mr. Iremonger has preached only once in this country, at noon on Maundy Thursday in Trinity church, New York. So completely has he effaced himself that only those who have had the privilege of meeting him have realized how much he has to give.

A year ago, at the request of the Bishop of London, Mr. Iremonger wrote a very beautiful book of meditations on Psalm 130 in the well-known series of books recommended for Lenten reading by the Bishop of London. "After his ordination it was not long before we found out something of what was in the writer", the Bishop wrote in the introduction, "and after a few years' devoted labor among the poor of Poplar, he was, at my suggestion, appointed head of Oxford House, Bethnal Green, where he has given another six years' ceaseless labor among the poor, varied only by those periodical visits to Oxford where he acquired a unique influence over the undergraduates.

"When war broke out, the whole of Oxford House poured forth for service—a fine example to the youth of Bethnal Green, who were not slow to follow their example: and of the eighty members of His Majesty's forces who were under the 'Head' either for long or short periods, at Oxford House, more than thirty have given their lives for their country."

It was the strain of the loss of these boys, coupled with the toil of carrying on without sufficient assistance the work at Oxford House and in his parish that induced him to ask for relief, and to retire from London to the rectorship of Quarley.

Before the Morning Watch is the outgrowth of Mr. Iremonger's own bitter experience. It is "written in blood and watered with tears". It stretches out to us, who are beginning the steep ascent of our own Golgotha, the strong hand of fellowship.

We quote a single passage because of its Easter message:

> "A lady wrote to one who could not free himself from picturing continually the awful nature of the death which, as he thought had been the fate of one whom he loved much: 'I sometimes think that when they hear the words "These are they which came out of great tribulation", the loved ones will look up into our dear Lord's face and will say "Did we? We had forgotten!"' And the picture in the sufferer's mind changed as by a miracle. It was no longer the agony of which he thought. The terror and torture of the death, the helplessness and confusion, the last cry of the passing, all this was swept away. There remained only the vision of peace."

The Voluntary Ration

IT is a very little thing that the Government is asking us to do, this voluntary ration which every housewife is asked to observe. Many women on reckoning the amounts allowed under Mr. Hoover's schedule find it to be just about the same as the scheme they had worked out for themselves during the past months. In England, Scotland and Wales butter, margarine and meat may be bought only by ration tickets. It is probable that the list of scheduled commodities will soon be lengthened, and that the purchasing capacity for all essentials will be limited. In the face of this, the restrictions the American housekeeper is asked to bear seem very easy. Not the least valuable side of the plan is that it helps to bring the realization of the War into every home. Stronger bonds of patriotism are forged as we share more and more equally the weight of the war burden.

In Perils of Waters

PROBABLY there is no one of our bishops who has to face more of the primitive perils of missionary travel than the Bishop of Porto Rico, especially since the addition of Haiti and the Dominican Republic to his already sufficient jurisdiction. "In journeyings oft" may well be said of him; out of the last nine months he has been able to spend just six weeks with his family. And the list of St. Paul's "perils" may be applied to him equally well. He is at present en route from Haiti to Porto Rico, via New York, since this circuitous way will save him something like a month over the direct but uncertain trip on a freighter from Port au Prince to San Juan. During his visit to "Hispaniola" he had occasion to travel from Santo Domingo to Port au Prince. The boat usually running between the two capitals has been discontinued; the only way to go was in a sailing boat, then a gasoline launch, and then on horseback through country as rough as in the days of Columbus. Bishop Colmore has promised THE CHURCHMAN the story of his adventures, of the trip in the launch when all passengers had to cling to the sides of the boat all night long, of ninety-five miles on horseback in two days, guarded by local gendarmerie, and of what makes it all eminently worth while, the fact that Mr. Llwyd, our missionary who has just taken up work in Haiti, has proved to be so exactly the right man to train the native ministry that the Bishop's hopes are high for the re-establishment of the Haitian Church on foundations stronger than have ever before been laid.

The Small Nations

IN The American-Scandinavian Review for January-February is an admirable article by Fridtjof Nansen on "The Mission of the Small States". He writes: "The great duty and mission of the small states now is to keep the peace so far as it lies with them. A time will come when they will be required to tie again all the fine threads of intellectual and commercial intercourse that have been broken so ruthlessly. Even after the Franco-Prussian War, in 1870, German and French scholars, working in the same field, refused to co-operate or even to know anything about one another's progress, while Belgians who read German were looked upon with disfavor in France. Yet the hatreds engendered by that war were as nothing in intensity and duration compared with what this War will surely bring in its wake. It is the task of the neutrals to keep unbroken the chain of human development.

"The fact that we Scandinavian nations are small does not prevent us from fulfilling this mission. England was not much larger than Norway today, certainly not larger than Sweden, when she produced Shakespeare, and the world owes a debt of gratitude to Holland, the Greek cities, and the Italian republics. Indeed, small states have, in some respects, an advantage over the larger. Their culture is more homogeneous. An idea can more quickly penetrate to all the people within their borders and set its stamp upon them. They become a more closely knit organism, almost a single personality, and thus their influence is more direct and intensive. France is perhaps the only large country that has a well-defined individuality in this sense. Germany made her finest contributions to civilization when she was yet split up into small, weak members.

"Large states are the victims of their size. Rome fell because her strength was drained by her colonies. All her talent was absorbed by the work of defending and administering her distant possessions, and as a result she made no contribution of great and permanent value except in the domain of jurisprudence.

"Russia is a modern example of the evils of unwieldy size. While traveling through Siberia I had an opportunity to observe conditions at first hand. Not a road can be built nor a school-house erected in Siberian country districts without orders from Petrograd. Even a very efficient government could not possibly administer to a vast region from such a distance—least of all with the miserable means of communication that exist there. As a consequence, Siberia is still dark with ignorance and all her splendid resources undeveloped. If we then turn to the small states, we find Denmark with its perfect organization, and Norway with a popular education on as high a level as any in the world.

"The future may show a return to a condition of more and smaller states, and we may live to see the map dissolving again into component parts that have been artificially welded together.

"Something new will rise out of this War. A new sense of human brotherhood will be born of its hatreds. Already there is a growing body of internationalists in every country, and they are not so small a minority as might appear on the surface. But they must not fall into the mistake of trying to wipe out all national peculiarities and substituting a new international culture. Even if it could be done, such a culture would be barren. We still need patriotism, not to breed enmities as in the past, but to stimulate each nation to its highest possibilities. Each has something special to give, and I, for one, mourn when I see a nation disappear from the face of the earth."

Immortality and Youth

By THE VERY REV. HOWARD CHANDLER ROBBINS, D.D.

"Lay hold on eternal life."—I. Tim. 6:12.

NOT long ago, a minister with whom I am acquainted was taken to task for preaching a sermon on immortality to a congregation of college students. No fault was found with the way in which he handled his subject. It was the theme itself to which exception was taken. His critic reminded him that his audience was composed of young men, that they were preparing for life in this world, not in some future one, and that what they needed was, as he put it, "something practical". Evidently he did not think that belief in immortality has any practical significance. He seems to have looked upon it as a sort of soothing potion for the aged and infirm, rather than as a cordial for the young. And yet it was to a young man, his beloved son in the faith, that Paul the aged addressed the admonition which I have taken as a text. It was a young Man who, on Easter morning, trod down death for us, and opened to us the gate of everlasting life. And it is the young today who are following Him upon the path of sacrifice, and through the grave and gate of death, to their joyful resurrection.

One respect in which the young show themselves ready to receive the doctrine of immortality is in their instinctive scorn of danger.

We live in a world where we are beset with physical dangers. We cannot cross the street without running the risk of being run over. We cannot draw a breath of germ-laden atmosphere without exposing ourselves to infection. Sooner or later each one of us will succumb in turn to these wild perils, and go hence and be seen no more.

Now how do young people feel about this state of things? I have never yet found one of them whom it was causing the slightest uneasiness. Instead of being panic-stricken by the dangers to which they are exposed, they go out of their way to add a few unnecessary perils to the number. They particularly enjoy skating on thin ice. They would infinitely rather cross Long Island Sound in a hydroplane than to be ferried quietly across from Sea Cliff to New Rochelle. But did we ever stop to look into the meaning of these well-known characteristics of childhood? Nature has put meaning into every human instinct. And the love of danger has this great and significant meaning, that safety is not the chief end of human life, but character, and that danger is fitted to bring out the character of resourcefulness and courage.

This seems to me to be the real meaning of what we often hear described as the perverse audacity of youth. It is not perversity. It is the voice of nature witnessing to the truth that life is adventure, that the very essence of it is risk, mutability, change. It is the inward witness to our immortality; for only creatures destined for immortality could risk life for the sake of something more ultimate, could regard life, not as an end in itself, but as a means toward an end. If life were destined to end with the breath in our nostrils, nature would teach us to take better care of it, to husband it at every cost. But if life is deathless, then what is important is its development, its quality; and the prevalence of danger is explained because danger is educational, and the high scorn of danger is interpreted because for ends more ultimate than life men and women are warranted in taking heroic risks.

Another reason why the young are singularly fitted to understand the meaning of immortality is because of their idealism. The world upon which they look is a world in the making. It is a plastic world, which they believe that they can alter, and which they do alter, for all great revolutions begin in the hearts of the young. This instinctive idealism of youth is congenial soil for the Gospel. For the Gospel teaches us that the world can be altered. The Gospel proves to us that ideas have catastrophic power. The Gospel shows us that the world-minded man, who believes no farther than he can see is made a fool of by his unbelief, while the man who sees vision and dreams the dreams of God goes out to overturn empires and be the bringer in of a new age.

What has this to do with the doctrine of immortality? It has everything to do with it. Eternal life is not a term of mere duration. First of all and most of all, it is a term of quality. Now the quality of the life of every man and woman is determined by the conceptions which govern it. If it is narrow and worldly in its interests weak and aimless in its hopes, selfish and stinted in its sympathies, then it is, from the Gospel point of view, not life at all, but death in life. Have we not known people whose hold on the interests of life is so feeble that we wonder that they keep on existing? On the other hand, we have Rupert Brooks, bone of his country's bone, flesh of her flesh, going to the Dardanelles; we have John Hus in flames in the market place to be a torch for human freedom; we have Galileo searching the heavens, as though to say that one small world is not enough for a creature of such unbounded vitality as man. These are the living! These and such as these, who today are passing through the gates of death in multitudes, are not going into darkness and oblivion. They are going the living way of living souls.

The critic, then, was wrong, so wrong that upon reflection his mistake seems ludicrous. The young can understand the doctrine of immortality. More than that, they can help us, their elders, to understand it better. "The thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts." We make a grave mistake if we think that what young men and women need as preparation for their lives is merely to be told the rules of its behavior, like debutantes preparing for a dance. What they need, what we all need, is the grave, deep, glowing vision of eternity, for there are in our hearts already the beginnings of eternal things. What we need is to have the things in our souls interpreted to us. There is the joy of living there: what does it mean? It means that to live, to move, to have one's human being is glorious. Life can be all that we think it: yes, and loftier and deeper than we imagine, golden with opportunity, magical with vicissitude, passionate with meaning. There is the love of danger in us, and what does that signify? It means that for all of us life has greater ends than safety. It means that character, not comfort, is the thing that counts. And the idealism which believes instinctively in love and truth and goodness, in the freedom of man's spirit, in the power of his purpose: what does that mean? It means that the God who has made all worlds is speaking in our spirits. It means that He is summoning us to do His glorious will. But He does not call men, by the voice of conscience, to His service, and then, having used them, throw them aside like useless, broken tools.

We need not fear then, for the young who on the battlefield or in the hospital are being called upon to offer up their lives for the things that they count sacred. All their courage, all their loyalty, all their faith, they carry with them; already they have quickened for us our conceptions of the future life. Our thoughts of it today are full of them, full, in Sigourney Thayer's words:

"Of singing warriors, beautiful and young,
Strong men and boys within whose eyes there gleams
The triumph song of worlds unknown, unsung.
Grim death has vanished, leaving in its stead
The shining glory of the living dead."

The Archbishop in Boston

By THE VERY REV. GEORGE HODGES, D.D.

ALMOST everybody who introduced the Archbishop of York to a Boston audience reminded him that he was confronting the descendants of the Puritans. It was implied that the men and women of that genealogical strain are under the impression that every archbishop is named Laud. The situation was somewhat mitigated by a remark of the Bishop Suffragan of Connecticut, who observed that the Archbishop's attire—his gaiters "and all that"—were in the style of a Puritan elder of the seventeenth century; and the thermometer of hospitality showed a rise of a good number of degrees when people perceived with their own eyes that His Grace looked like the portraits of George Washington. On the whole, the descendants of the Puritans, however sturdily prejudiced against archbishops, speedily forgot Laud or remembered him only as a kind of milestone away back on the long road of ecclesiastical progress, and heartily welcomed Archbishop Lang for his own sake.

The Archbishop was uncommonly successful in the delicate art of establishing the point of contact between himself and his hearers. On no occasion did he give the impression, in speech or sermon, of beginning or ending with sentences which he had composed in England. He invariably spoke to the immediate occasion and to the actual conditions.

At the Tavern Club, where he addressed a company of men of high distinction in art and letters, he compared them with his fellow members in certain London clubs, which meet in ancient houses and combine the brilliant good-fellowship of the present with the splendid fame of the past. Preaching at Harvard, he recalled the English origin of the University, and described the condition of Oxford and Cambridge under stress of war. Addressing the Chamber of Commerce, he spoke of the willing sacrifice of English business men under their increasing burdens. "You may have heard," he said, "of the salary of the Archbishop of York. I will not tell you what it is, except to say that it is less than sufficient for the demands which are made upon it. I now pay one-third of it annually in taxes." Every man in the Chamber of Commerce knew what that meant, and saw in a moment what it implied as to the manner and spirit of the British people in their grim determination to win the War, though it take all that they have to do it. Then the Archbishop dealt with the problem of labor from the point of view of the employes, and declared the impossibility of returning after the War to the old class contentions. Everything must be put away, and kept away, which hinders any man from the abundant living of his life. So with the clergy of the diocese of Massachusetts at the luncheon given by Bishop Lawrence, so with the "brethren of other names" at the Park Street church, so with the young men at the Institute of Technology and the young women at Wellesley College, and the congregation at the Cathedral, and the people of Boston at Symphony Hall and Faneuil Hall; everywhere the Archbishop understood the situation, and met it with cordial sympathy.

The message which he delivered upon these many and various occasions impressed his hearers as being not only important but appropriate.

Among the many important things which a distinguished visitor may say at this time to audiences in America, which shall be selected for emphasis and application by an archbishop? A capitalist may properly deal with problems of finance, a publicist with political relations, a warrior with campaigns and munitions, and the need of ships and men. The Archbishop concerned himself with the maintenance of moral ideals. Nothing could have been more fitting. Here was a man of extraordinarily high position in the State, by reason of his extraordinarily high position in the Church, who spoke as one who had considered the tremendous problems of his time from the point of view of religion. No one who heard him forgot that he was a Christian minister. The gentlemen of the Chamber of Commerce will always remember how at the end of his address to them he gave them his blessing, and prayed that they might have the guidance of God.

Thus he spoke to all assemblies, with great variety of illustration, of the essential value of moral ideals. We talked about ideals, he said, in England at the beginning of the War and have talked about them ever since, but sometimes with a dread lest we were deceiving ourselves, lest we were falling into the subtle hypocrisy which identifies self-interest with divine principles, and persuades itself that it is contending for the eternal right when it is actually contending for some temporary and material advantage. Then you came—You came into the War not only to help but to reassure us. For it was plain that you had no selfish ends to serve. It was thus proved true, as we had claimed, that this is no war of conquest on our side, or of settlement of old scores, or of reprisal, or of racial jealousy, or of the boundary lines of nations; still less is it a war for the sake of war, for the exercise of the will to power. It is a righteous war, fought against despotism and militarism and the lust to rob and kill, in defense of moral ideals.

As the years lengthen, we find, he said, among us in Great Britain, that the first clear flame of moral enthusiasm tends to die down. We revert to primitive hatreds. So it may be with you, as the War becomes the same horrible reality in your experience that it is in ours, and your men begin to say, What are we fighting for, if not to avenge the blood of our brothers? We must reinforce each other. We must insist upon the importance of ideals. We must show the difference between the Christian and the pagan way of living. We must make it plain that justice, and righteousness, and democracy, and liberty, and peace, are worth fighting for.

This, of course, is not quotation but impression. Thus the Archbishop's message sounded in the ears of Boston.

The response to it was immediate and universal. Nobody criticised the speaker. Nobody detected in his utterances any of the objectionable ecclesiasticisms of Laud. He did not even speak with an English accent, nor with a Scotch accent, either. He was much amused by the comment of an admiring auditor, who said that the Archbishop might be mistaken anywhere for a cultured American gentleman.

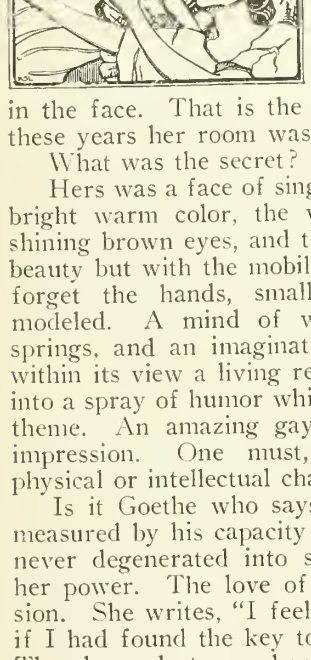
All this was greatly assisted by the general perception of a grave self-restraint in what he said. There were some who knew that the man who by his appearance counted his age in the seventies really counted them in the fifties. The War had added twenty years. And yet there was no note of bitterness in his words, public or private. No spirit of revenge, no accusations nor adjectives. The silence was as effective as the sentences.

The news from Europe was bad during the Archbishop's visit, each day worse than the day before. Russia retreating, Prussia advancing. It was a time for pessimists. The Archbishop gave us a good hope. He encouraged us; not with the superficial optimism which guesses that everything will come out all right if we wait, but with the reasonable and substantial optimism of a firm faith in the sure victory of good. He revealed in his own person the spirit of the English people, enduring privations with cheerfulness, meeting affliction with unfailing confidence in God; and engaged in a war to whose grim conditions they have adjusted themselves with a determination which has in it no faintest shadow of surrender.

One Who Overcame

By PAULINA CONEY DROWN

"To see a world in a grain of sand,
And a heaven in a wild flower,
Hold infinity in the palm of your hand
And eternity in an hour."



THESE words of Blake are a text for the life of Alice Weston Smith, which had in it to a rare degree the power of transmutation. She was able to turn pain into joy, limitation into riches, death into life.

There was nothing in her circumstances or in outward achievement to account for the estimate of her friends. A delicate child, a woman mostly bedridden, looking death often in the face. That is the story of the forty years. All these years her room was a shrine.

What was the secret?

Hers was a face of singular and appealing beauty; the bright warm color, the wavy cloud of dark hair, the shining brown eyes, and the mouth too large for regular beauty but with the mobility of the poet. One must not forget the hands, small but strong and beautifully modeled. A mind of wide range drinking of many springs, and an imagination which made all that came within its view a living reality. The great stream broke into a spray of humor which refreshed and vivified every theme. An amazing gayety was the first and abiding impression. One must, however, look deeper than physical or intellectual charm.

Is it Goethe who says that a man's power is to be measured by his capacity for feeling? In feeling which never degenerated into sentimentality we seem to find her power. The love of beauty finds continual expression. She writes, "I feel very strongly about nature, as if I had found the key to what had been locked before. The sky and stars, when I was alone, used to give me a sense of remoteness and loneliness where now it is just peace and an answer, not understood but sufficient to all my problems. I don't know what I should have done without my sunsets, or rather the afterglow that I got from my windows last Summer, and the light on the sea. It was like reading the 'Eye hath not seen nor ear heard'—made visible." Again,—"We have an enlarged copy of the last page of William Blake's Jerusalem. It is the weary soul's return into the bosom of the eternal life—a female figure with arms stretched out and such tired hands, as if she had just been rescued by the other figure bending over her, with head wool-white, a great circle of light behind them, and below those curves and flames that Blake uses to denote vision and mystery."

On one of the rare occasions when she heard music she says, "It was like being cut adrift from my aching old body for a while, and allowed to drift on an ocean of beauty and light . . . A new world above the dust and turmoil and wings to reach it with".

There is a continual reminder of St. Francis in her relation to her little sisters the birds, who came to her hands and her couch with the same confidence that they did to him. In the Autumn, when she leaves them, her journal has this entry, "God keep all the little bird-people under the shadow of His wing". Her companion cat and dog were persons in her eyes. When her cat died she writes, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father?" She craved for them a life beyond this, and so interpreted the verse in the Psalms, "Thou shalt save both man and beast".

Her power of friendship amounted to genius. Naturally of a dominant nature, a born ruler, she overcame that temptation, and lived not so much for her friends as in them. It was mastery through ministry. "As one would run to the gate to meet a dear friend, and then greet her again at the porch, so I like to send you a little message of love at each stage of your journey." Thus to an absent friend. That she from her sickbed should weep with them that weep seems but natural, but, a much rarer grace, she rejoiced with them that rejoiced. As her friends went forth to marriage and motherhood and achievement of many kinds, she, so fitted for the great human experiences, with no touch of envy shared their lives.

Her friendship was most generously given. No one can forget the courtesy with which she addressed her servants, the deep respect for the personality. Each friend stood in his peculiar niche. She saw each as he was in the sight of God, the real person, no fanciful creation.

She writes of a friend who lay dying, "It seems tragic that the end should come at the hospital away from her own beautiful home—that she has treated her own suffering always so carelessly. But that is in keeping with a life which came not to be ministered unto but to minister. All the loving service of all the long years come crowding into my mind—the wide human sympathies, the tender heroic counsel—all she has been to me and to hundreds more.—'And they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever.' What shall we do without her? It is like the Pilgrim's parting with Mr. Greatheart."

Again to her sister; "All the little familiar habits of love—the shared joys and sorrows—yes, and the shared jokes of all the years—the smiles and tears and half-conscious memories, have twisted up our cord of love, whose end is hid with Christ in God."

Many came to her for cheer, just for the joy of life, to hear her racy comments on the various events of life, her witty give and take in talk. More came for her sympathy and human fellowship. She was supreme as the consoler. Her sympathy was grounded on the faith which has looked tragedy in the face and come forth triumphant. She writes of a widow whose little baby had died, "Blessed are they that mourn. The riddle of this world is so deep and mysterious that it must have a great and beautiful answer". This is the confidence which breathes in all her letters. Her words at such times were kept as sacred treasures. She writes to two friends whose mother had died, "Last night I lay awake and prayed that this cup might pass from you, but this morning, when your message came to say that she had passed from life to life, one felt, almost with a burst of triumph, what it all must mean to her who has lived so long by faith. As one's love follows her, the great gates seem to open, and those who have gone before and whom she loved seem almost closer than those who are still with us. There is one fold and one Shepherd. For you, I know, the vision must be very bright in the midst of the darkness in which you stand—looking up. We who love you and share your grief can only hold your hand and wait to hear from you the message that God speaks to those who mourn".

To a friend in great bodily weakness she writes, "I know so well how you feel, only what comes to me by days or even hours, you are called to endure for weeks. But when we are weakest and most broken we can rest more entirely on the Divine strength. Strength will come—hope will come—the great tide is sweeping up to float you off the sand, which seems so blank and barren about you. I sometimes think we feel like violins whose little bridges have been broken down and whose strings lie all unstrung. But we can believe in the Great Musician who will set all to rights in His good time and draw sweet music from us yet. In the meanwhile we have only to wait and trust".

Her capacity for sympathy was not exhausted by those whom she saw with her own eyes. Her notebooks, which with their extracts from the wide range of her reading give a picture of her inner life, a diary without its egotism, show her constantly wrestling with the mystery of pain, the mystery which Christian faith only seems to deepen, consoling while it cannot explain. Her starting point was never her own pain. She writes, "There are times when the heavy weight of all this unintelligible world lies heavy on my heart, but you know I am personally quite happy. And the friends here and the friends there make my outward and inward life very rich and full; to say nothing of Mamma and Paulina, who fold my whole existence in their love". And again, "It is a comfort sometimes to think that our lots are chosen for us, and that we learn to love God for our own sunshine, that we may trust Him for what seems all shadow in other people's lives".

The time of the Armenian atrocities was a horror of great darkness. She wrote, "Gallant little Greece hurling herself vainly against Turkey, that great Power of Darkness, while the nations stand by, guarding their money interests and callously watching their treaties violated and an innocent people, whom they had promised to protect, led like lambs to the slaughter. I feel sometimes as though my heart would burst. 'All the earth is full of darkness and cruel habitations.' 'And I looked and there was none to help.' But if there is Divine Justice in Heaven, there must come a great day of judgment for the nations when they will have to tread the wine-press of the wrath of Almighty God . . . And to think of our sitting in our quiet houses with safety and purity and justice all about us—helpless to help. But at least we can think of them and feel with them, and it is a comfort to think that nothing can come to a great section of humanity without in a real way coming to us all. We are all our brother's keeper, and 'the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together.' 'Nevertheless we according to the promise look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.' And one cannot be a Christian and not take courage. And Faith and Hope go hand in hand".

When Ludlow, the English philanthropist, was asked the secret of his untiring work, he answered simply, "I had a friend". Alice Weston Smith's life was an In Memoriam to Phillips Brooks. She quotes of him, "Love for him was like an arrow which fixed itself deep in the heart and could not be drawn out, or like a spark setting the soul on fire". No one can fail to see the footsteps of his life in hers. She writes on All Saints' Day, "To me the great Church days are the days when he seems closer to us, the mounts of vision, when above and beyond the mists one can see in to the Promised Land. They give me strength for the long, long times when it seems as if we were 'steaming across the sea of life by night' or wandering in a desert like sheep without a shepherd. The times when one feels that 'The strong hours conquer us', and that one is not acting worthily of so sacred a grief or the great hopes before us".

Again she writes of him to his biographer, "It must have been this intense power of fellow feeling—this sensitive openness to the wants and pains of men on the one side, as well as to the great eternal truths on the other which made him stand to rich and poor alike as 'one that comforteth the mourners'—or was it through that ever-deepening communion with the Master, who was a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief?"

His friends, his relatives, his mourners became her most intimate care. The anniversary of his death was kept not as a day of sorrow but as a day to drink of the spiritual realities. She writes, "I can't let our great Saint's Day go by without a word of love to you. As this season comes round the years seem to fade away and we are again standing on the mount of vision—only with a surer sense of God's power to fill our loneliness with His light".

"Whose loves in higher love endure." All these friendships found fulfilment in the friendships of God through Christ. Into the sacred places of a singularly reserved nature we may not penetrate. But we of her household cannot forget the expression in her face when we came back to her room after her times of devotion. God was in all her thoughts. Current doubts, problems of science or philosophy or criticism, touched her little. Her vivid sense of immortality enabled her to say "Death seems to me the easiest of all the problems and the least sad". Hers was the mystic's approach to God. It was immediate. She claimed the right to see God with her own eyes.

Among her prayers are these: "O God, through whatever pain, and darkness and disappointment, draw me to Thee that I may lose my life in love to Thee and service for Thy children, for His sake who came to seek what was lost, to bind up the broken-hearted, and to say to the weak and erring 'Thy sins be forgiven thee—arise and walk'." "O God, Thou knowest all things, purify the thoughts of my mind, pour into my cold and faithless heart such love toward Thee that all life shall glow with new purpose and new meaning."

Life did glow with a solemn gladness. She loved to quote Dr. Nash, "Christianity is the power to be glad against all odds". Faith with her seemed often to pass into sight. She practised "the patience of hope", a phrase of St. Paul's which was often on her lips. But as at the beginning, so now "abideth Faith, Hope and Love, these three; but the greatest of these is Love".

Te Laudamus

By HARRIETTE H. BROOKS

WE praise Thee, Lord of Life, who didst
For our redemption give,
In tender mercy, Thy dear life,
That we might ever live.

We praise Thee for the grief and shame,
For us so grandly borne,
Thy heavenly meekness when reviled,
The scourging and the scorn.

We praise Thee, Holy Crucified,
Who on the Cross didst hang,
For all Thine agony of Soul,
And every torturing pang.

We praise Thee for the platted thorns
Which pierced Thy sacred head,
We praise Thee for each precious drop
Of blood for sinners shed.

We praise Thee, Lord, that Thou didst lie
Three days in death's deep gloom,
To burst a miracle of life
From out the fast-sealed tomb.

All praise, Thou Risen Saviour, now
Exalted high above,
Thou full and perfect sacrifice,
Be Thine, our adoring love.

The Scarlet Spring

By ARTHUR KETCHUM

THE lilies will be red this year,
Scarlet lilies—ruby—crimson—
Their slender chalices will glow with light
And flame. They will hold them up
High in the sun
And all the garden grow a sacred place
Sweet with the drifting incense of the year,
Murmurous with prayer,
Hushed with adoration
About the dark High Altar of the Holy Earth
Whereon outpours the Sacrificial Blood.
The lilies will be red this year.

The Passover

By GENEVIEVE COWLES

HIS black eyes shone, his cheeks glowed, happiness exhaled from his small person, for Passover night had come and the child was to ask questions, long questions in Hebrew; his elder brother also would ask questions. He was thirteen, a member of the synagogue: he preserved a dignified calm. Rebekah, the mother, was happy, although she was required to say only three words, "Pesah" — Lamb, "Mazzah" —Unleavened bread, "Maror"—Bitterness.

The father, the rabbi, reclined on the divan. This restful position meant freedom from slavery. Women and children had cushions on the floor. The seder (order) of Passover elements was on a pewter tray. I was disappointed to see a small shank bone instead of the whole paschal (lamb). With sadness, the rabbi exclaimed: "When we lost our temple we lost our lamb."

The father blessed the first wine cup, that meant release from slavery, Thanks to God, Good Will Towards Men. Bitter herbs dipped in wine symbolized past affliction remembered with joy of deliverance.

Water was poured on the hands of the father. All washed hands. Mazzah, unleavened bread, was broken; a part, Afikoman, was hidden, to to be finally recovered and eaten in memory of the reserved portion of the paschal (lamb), the last food tasted at Passover. This hiding was done playfully to amuse the children.

When the father first cut the unleavened bread he said "This is the Bread of Affliction which our fathers did eat in the Land of Affliction. Let all who are hungry come in and eat". The door was opened according to the oriental way of inviting the passing stranger to share the feast. Three times I was stranger and friend sharing the Passover in Palestine.

The youngest son asked the meaning of the unleavened bread and bitter herbs; the father answered, "We were slaves to Pharaoh in Egypt and the Lord our God brought us from thence with a strong hand and an outstretched arm". The father identified himself and his family with the ancient Israelites. He added a pantomime, carefully explaining that this was not according to the Thora, but only to touch the hearts of his children. In describing the flight from Egypt, the rabbi laid a piece of mazzah in a napkin, slung it over his shoulder, in sign of the dough wrapped in the clothes of the fleeing Israelites. The mother asked "Whence do you come"? The father replied "From Egypt". "Whither do you go"? "To Jerusalem". In explaining the plagues, he poured water in a basin, adding red wine to give the feeling of rivers changed to blood.

The seder was then explained. Pesah, the lamb which our fathers killed on the night when the Lord passed over our houses and smote the Egyptians but delivered our houses; mazzah, unleavened bread, the dough of our ancestors; maror, bitter herbs—the bitterness of Egyptian slavery; salt water or vinegar, emblems of affliction; wine, benediction and gladness.

All the family, even babies, drank four cups of wine at the Passover. The children had tiny cups.

The use of tangible things of visible acts as language is characteristic of Jewish thought; the Hebrew made material forms convey spiritual truth. This led toward the sacramental teaching of the outward visible sign and the inward spiritual grace.

The story of Abraham, the early prophecies, the bondage in Egypt, the deliverance of Israel was told by questions and answers between the father and the son. Sonorous Hebrew phrases rolled from children's lips.

They chanted the beginning of the Hallel, the "Praise" (the 113th and 114th Psalms).

The father uplifted the second wine cup, saying: "Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God King of the Universe . . . !" Thanksgivings were offered for blessings of the past year and for redemption. They asked blessing on the family and that the Temple might be rebuilt. Again they washed hands; then reclining on cushions they joyfully ate mazzah, dipped in haroseth, spices, implying that bitterness shared together led to joy shared together.

Perceiving my amazement at their frequent laughter, a Jewess explained that they were living over the deliverance of Israel and the journey through the wilderness. "They were not traveling all the time," she said, "some days they reposed themselves and played, that is why we laugh and play." After the mazzah of joyfulness, the supper was eaten in place of the paschal lamb. The Law required the recovery of the lost mazzah, that all should eat thereof as the last food tasted at Passover, in memory of the reserved portion of the paschal lamb.

Regarding the hour when the Lord's Supper was ordained St. Mark says, "As they did eat Jesus took bread and blessed and brake and gave it to them and said 'Take, eat, This Is My Body' ". St. Luke spoke of the "Cup after Supper" when Christ said, "This Cup is the New Testament in my Blood which is shed for you". The chalice of the Sacrament may have been originally the great cup of sanctification and blessing, the third cup of wine at Passover. They drank it after eating the recovered mazzah.

After this, silence fell upon the company. The eyes of the children told awe-struck expectation. Softly a woman arose and filled a great glass of wine and placed it on the table. A vacant seat was set; a child went and opened the door; a hush fell over all. They whispered that in this night Elijah passed by, and entered unseen, and dipped his finger in the wine, and passed on. That chalice was "the goblet of Elijah".

After the wine of sanctification they sang the close of the Hallel of Egypt.

The blessing followed on the fourth wine chalice—the cup of brotherhood and of the reunion of Israelites in Jerusalem, the cup of the fulfilment of prophecies.

Two thousand years have passed. In 1918 the Jews drink the cup of the fulfilment of prophecies, in Jerusalem delivered! They behold the prospect of the early restoration of the Jewish State! With what joy they will sing the Great Hallel, "Oh, give thanks unto the Lord for He is good, because His mercy endureth forever—Give thanks unto the God of gods for His mercy endureth forever".

Near the garden of Gethsemane you may still see this cavern of the Agony where they say our Redeemer knelt in His great conflict to win peace for the world. The olive branches of Gethsemane whisper the secrets of peace. Bitter is the new plucked olive; it must be pierced to let the bitterness escape before it serves for food. The tender fruit endures the cruel pressure of the oil press to set free the healing oil. Olive leaves show silver on one side, dark on the other, and the tree lives on for centuries. Cut down to the ground it rises in new shoots—dear tree of Gethsemane and of the Resurrection!

From thy shadow, Christ saw the gorge of Kidron and beyond—the steep slope rising to the walls of Jerusalem and in the walls two gates. By one, He must have seen Judas approaching in the hour of darkness.

The other gate, more clearly seen, is the Golden Gate through which the Prince of Peace shall enter Jerusalem when He returns with power to reign. (That gate is now walled up until the day arrives.)

The Jews expect Messiah. Even the Moslems believe that Issah, Jesus the Great Prophet, is coming back to rule Jerusalem.

As Christians we await His coming with power and glory—Christ our Passover! Christ our Paschal Lamb!

Easter in the Heart of Africa

By ADA M. SKINNER

THE most thrilling hope of the Gospel—the wonderful good news—which the missionary carries to a heathen people is the story of the Resurrection and its promise of life everlasting.

In the depths of the African forest the black man, who is naturally light-hearted and eager for mirth, sometimes experiences events which fill him with awe and overwhelm him with fear and suffering. Pain and death are part of his heritage as well as joy and life. With merry abandon he dances and plays and sings; he revels in the pursuit of game and keenly relishes the food which he earns with no small risk of life and limb; he enjoys the companionship of the men in the palaver and the unselfish devotion of his family in the bark hut. At times his sum of happiness seems large. But there are days when his enemies—hunger, disease, wild beasts, and unfriendly savages—must be reckoned with. His spirit grows weary with anxiety and sorrow and cries out for help.

One big source of relief he finds in the native story-teller. In the palaver or around the campfire the African listens with eager interest to the old folk tales and sometimes catches from them bright glimpses of truth and wisdom. But before the coming of the missionary the black man never heard a story which brought great peace to his heart, abundant refreshment to his weary spirit and the wonderful promise of life everlasting.

The following account of a sacred Eastertide in the heart of Africa, told by Dr. Cornelius Patton, must fill every reader's heart with joy and hope beyond measure.*

"Riding through the forest on horse-back that Saturday morning, I was eager to see what impression had been made upon these wild people during the sixteen years of work among them. I was prepared to witness lurid scenes of savagery. Imagine then my surprise on being met, about a mile from the station, by a band of well-dressed young people, headed by Lincoln, their African teacher, each one carrying a palm branch. They separated into two lines, the boys on one side of the road and the girls on the other. As we passed between the lines the children waved their palm branches in rhythm, while they sang in English, 'From Greenland's Icy Mountains'. The effect of hearing that missionary hymn sung in the heart of Africa by the children of those who so recently had been cannibals was electric.

"But I soon learned that paganism had not been entirely overcome in the Chikore tribe. The same day there waited upon me a company of heathen men and women, headed by their ten chiefs, who came, as they said, to extend 'a welcome to their country'. In a solid mass they squatted by the roadside, the ten chiefs in front. Each chief then insisted upon making a speech and each chief made practically the same speech. The tenor of their remarks was as follows: 'Mfundisi, we don't like these people you have sent to us. We don't like them and we don't like their ways. We don't want to give up our wives. We don't want to wear clothes. We don't want to live in square houses. We don't want to dig the ground in the way they teach. We don't want our children to go to school. We want to be let alone. We like the old ways because the old ways were best. Mfundisi, when you go away to your own country, take all these people with you.' I allowed the chiefs to have their say, but I made up my mind that they were a set of shrewd old heathen; also that, so far as the feelings of the people were concerned, they were telling me a pack of lies.

"When they had finished I said, 'Chiefs, these are strange words which come to my ears. I must think them over. I want to meet you and your followers tomorrow at the Chikore tree, when the sun is there' (pointing, African fashion, to the meridian). 'Tomorrow is a great day for us Christians, and I shall have something important to say to you.'

"Now the Chikore tree had been the centre of their superstitious rites and orgies for many generations. The next day was Easter. After the Communion service in the thatched church, I asked the Christians to march up to the great tree to meet their chiefs and their heathen friends. The tree, a giant umtombe, fully fifteen feet in diameter, with shade capable of sheltering a thousand people, stood on a ridge. The heathen were there in large numbers, and seated themselves in circles under the outer branches, the chiefs in a row by themselves.

"While we were greeting the people, the sound of hymns came up over the tops of the trees. Then Lincoln and his band of Christians emerged from the forest in double file like a cathedral choir, singing as they came. The men were clothed in white and the women in colors. They marched around the tree and seated themselves on the ground in a solid mass, close to the trunk.

"After prayer and a hymn, I said: 'Here, you say, the Christian religion is a curse, not a blessing; but let us hear some other testimony. Let us ask some of the converts to answer the question: Were the old days best?' Through the whole afternoon the Christians gave testimony.

"Bhande was the first. He said he was the son of a chief. Once when there was trouble in the kraal his father sent him to this place to sacrifice to the spirits. The ground was wet with blood. He added to the blood that day; but no peace came to their kraal. 'Now we are Christians', he said, 'and our hearts are full of joy'.

"Zonzo told how, in the old days, the bush was full of lions, leopards, and hyenas, and their lives were full of terror; but now 'the missionaries have driven these beasts away, and the women and children can walk through the bush in safety'.

"Mapangisana told how this used to be called 'the hungry country', but now they had plenty of food because the missionaries had brought them better seed and had taught them to dig the ground deep. Someone mentioned what a wonderful thing it was to read and write. Another had a good word for the missionary physicians. The chiefs began to lean forward and to look to the right and left to see what effect it was having upon their followers.

"Then came forward Ndhlo-hla-hla, the evangelist, who kept smiting his breast and saying, 'My heart cries out for you, O chiefs, because you are still in your sins. You have told a lie to Mfundisi. Where would you go if you were to die this day? Where would you go?' And he told them where they would go in most explicit fashion. Then he softened in his tone and pleaded very tenderly with them. He drew his Bible from his pocket and holding it high said: 'All this region is to be Christian. O chiefs, you must believe in the little book.'

"The sun was getting low, and so we brought the service to an end by asking the Christians to join hands in a circle about the tree. A great circle was formed; and then a second circle inside the first. They marched around the trunk singing a native hymn. I invited the heathen, any who wished to stand with the Christians, to join hands with us. As they came over, young men and young women, mothers with babies on their backs, we opened the circle and took them in, a strange contrast to the cleanly, well-dressed people of the church. I turned to see what effect this was having upon the chiefs, and they were all gone. One by one they had slunk off into the forest."

From Camp Upton

By THE REV. W. T. MANNING, D.D.

THE message of Easter is not incongruous with the life and spirit of this great military camp. On the contrary, Easter seems to speak to those who are here with a deeper meaning than ever before. Speaking to the soldiers I have said many times that in spite of its outward roughness and crudeness, this camp is in spirit the most religious place I have ever known. Every man here is accepting discipline. He is under an authority higher than himself. He is living the life of obedience. Every man here has answered the call for service. And every man here is making a great and real sacrifice. The fact that a man is summoned by the draft does not in any way lessen the quality of his service, nor the reality of his sacrifice, provided he gives himself readily and cheerfully as these men are giving themselves.

Duty—Service—Sacrifice. These are the notes of the life in this camp, and these are the very elements of religion. Whether they fully realize this or not, even though many do not realize it, and some of them might deny it, these men are living in the atmosphere of true religion. They are standing near to God. It is this which accounts for the wonderful cheerfulness and light-heartedness which is so noticeable here. This is the reason that hearts and minds are open, the barriers are down, men are brotherlike and approachable, as under no other conditions. Whether they stop to think of this or not, they are living the life of service and sacrifice,—near to reality, near to each other, and to God.

In this atmosphere the Easter message takes on its fullest and deepest meaning. The Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ out of the grave is the proof that God can be trusted. His coming forth from that tomb is the pledge that right shall not be permanently defeated; that injustice and wrong shall not finally triumph. He shows us that even though right and justice may be crucified and laid in the tomb, as they are today in Belgium and Serbia, they shall rise again stronger and more glorious than ever.

He who rose on the third day stands before men forever the divine guarantee that good is stronger than evil, that righteousness is more powerful than unrighteousness, that truth is mightier than falsehood.

Christ is risen! Therefore let the brave and just and true in all the earth take courage, and know that the victory is theirs. Christ is risen! Therefore the evil principles of Prussianism shall not have their way in this world, the foul and dark things for which it stands shall not prevail. Christ is risen! Therefore the sacrificial deaths of those who have given themselves in this great struggle shall not be in vain; the cause of righteousness shall triumph even though some who profess to be its friends seek to betray it in the name of a false and unreal peace, which would, in fact, leave Prussianism victorious. Christ is risen! Therefore the soldiers of America, and of our Allies, who fight for the things which He came down here to establish, have absolute certainty of victory. Christ is risen! Therefore, although we must now walk in the way of the Cross and share with Him the suffering and death of Calvary, we know that this struggle will end in full triumph for the right.

And already in the midst of all the sorrow and blood and death, we can see the promise of the Resurrection. In the darkness of our Crucifixion Day we can see the Easter sunlight shining. All over our land there is a new spirit stirring. There were dark and dangerous influences at work among us. In this great crisis we have found ourselves again a people, worthy of the men who went before us. Our people everywhere are thinking now of what they owe to the country, not of what the country owes to them. The question on all hands is, "What can I do to help?" There is a new spirit of discipline among us. A miraculous change has taken place in this respect.

Today we Americans are actually submitting to necessary restrictions upon our individual liberties, and obeying the orders of those in lawful authority over us. There seems to be a prospect of our becoming a law-observing, as well as a law-making people. It seems likely that after the War we shall be wise enough to adopt permanently a system of universal military service, as a training school for our young men, and an insurance against war for the future. If we had had such a system in operation four years ago, the whole course of this War would have been different, and it would probably have been ended long before this. No reasonable person could spend a week in this camp and see what the training has done for the men who are here, without desiring the same benefit, physical, mental and moral, for the young manhood of our whole land.

This day of trial is calling forth among us a new spirit of sacrifice. We see this not only in the men who wear the uniform. In them it has its highest expression. They are making the highest offering that men can make. But we see it also in our business men, our wage earners, our bankers, our women, whose sacrifice is often the costliest of all.

We hear little today of the question, "What is there in it for me?" This great experience is developing in all of us the spirit of duty, of responsibility, of love for our country, of care and thought for our fellow-men. Wicked beyond all expression as this War was in its inception, fearful as is the guilt of that nation which planned it and forced it upon the world, it is yet bringing us the promise of a new and better day for all mankind. Out of it is coming the greatest step forward that our race has known. It is bringing us a vision, clearer than ever before, of what human life ought to be, and can be in America and elsewhere, if we will accept and stand together for the teachings of the Risen Christ, for justice, for freedom, for duty, and for God. And we are going to do this as we have never done it before. The deep suffering, the willing sacrifices, the close fellowship, the common action of war is making us see the folly and the wrong of much that has had place in our life; our too great care for money, our glaring economic injustices, our clumsy and inequitable distribution of wealth, our foolish antagonism between capital and labor. Having learned to live as brothers in time of war we shall be content with no less than this in time of peace.

In the alert step, the manly bearing, the bright, resolute faces of our men in this camp, we see the Easter message and promise, the assurance of the better world that is now to be. When these boys, and countless others like them, go back into civil life, they will have a new vision before them, a new consciousness of their own manhood, a new sense of what is due to themselves and to other men. They are not going to be satisfied with things as they were before. Let us thank God that they will not be. Let us be ready to join with them in making this a new world by bringing it at last under the rule of the Risen Christ. If we will do this, the War, with all its fearful cost, will have been worth while.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD TO ASK CHURCH FOR $45,000

Alarming Conditions Owing to War Have Forced the Issue

NEW YORK CITY.—To meet the alarming conditions which the War is forcing on the Church's educational work the Executive Committee of the General Board of Religious Education has requested Bishop Talbot, its chairman, to ask the Church for $45,000, for a war-time educational fund.

A statement from the G. B. R. E. says:

Church people are receiving two kinds of appeals: one for war relief and the other for emergencies produced by the War. Education in the Church and the Nation is intimately connected with both. Helping our youth in 1918 to save and sacrifice, to study and train, may provide the balance of power that will win victory in the critical hours of 1920 and 1921.

This appeal is made imperative because of five critical conditions in educational work which demand immediate financial outlay. They are as follows:

1. Enlisting Student Soldiers and Others for the Ministry. War is reducing the number of men in our seminaries. Should the present reduction continue two years, it is estimated that our twelve seminaries would have a total of sixty men. Some of our best future ministers are at this moment in the army.

Immediate and far-reaching results can be obtained in three fields: (1) In the camps through the co-operation of our army chaplains and those supported by the War Commission. (2) In the colleges by appeals from specially selected laymen and clergymen. (3) Among the boys. The Presbyterians have a Nation-wide plan for presenting "ideals of life work" to boys. These plans help boys to higher ambitions and invite a consideration of the ministry.

2. Promoting Christian Principles Among Students. The Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s are preparing for the new Democracy by endeavoring to enlist 200,000 students for: (1) Bible Study and the discussion of Christian Principles. (2) Sacrificial giving for missions. (3) Response to the call for personal service in the mission field of city, country and foreign lands.

If the Church is to co-operate effectively with this important movement, we should send two men and one woman into our colleges and universities to appeal to our Episcopal students by classes, meetings and missions.

3. Co-operating With Public Education. Dr. Finlay of the Board of Regents in New York has commended certain methods for Religious Education in connection with public education.

Some of the methods have been tested at a religious day school maintatined for three years by the Board at Gary, Indiana. This school has co-operated with the Public Schools so effectively that William Wirt, the superintendent, writes: "We believe that the church school in Christ church parish, Gary, is increasing in value each year and that it is a most important form of co-operation with the public schools."

The Board is constantly receiving requests for advice and help from rectors who wish to teach religion on week days and in co-operation with the Public School. The possibilities in the movement cannot be developed unless one man gives his whole time to the work.

In the opinion of many the Board has no other opportunity so filled with possibility for giving spiritual knowledge and power to the masses of youth before industrial claims tend to carry them beyond the reach of religious influence.

4. Extending Teacher Training in Parishes. A student at one of our great universities said recently: "There is little interest here in religious matters, the men who cared have gone to France". This brief but significant remark tells two stories, the character which responded and the lack of religious interest among those left behind.

The foundation for religious interests begins in the home parish. In time of war the Church must not neglect to give her best efforts to the training of parochial teachers. Two secretaries are needed, one in the field to assist diocesan boards of education, and one in the central office to direct the correspondence school.

5. Strengthening Our Church Preparatory Schools. The War is disastrous to our already weakened Church preparatory schools. The Board has never had sufficient money to place a secretary at work for our Church schools. One school in Spokane has closed, another in Omaha will close in June.

Bishops and headmasters have appealed again and again to the Board for a secretary. They wish someone to bring to the attention of Church people the importance of Church Preparatory Schools in national life. This secretary would promote faculty conferences, keep a list of accredited teachers, and discover the best methods of school administration and make the same available to all.

Bishops Page, Beecher and Burleson attended the Annual Meeting of the Board. They urged that many of our struggling Church Schools could be self-supporting if a policy as to numbers, location and work could be determined. They have pledged their personal subscriptions to this fund.

None of the War budgets will be spent for the salaries of the officers of the Board, its rent, etc. These are already met by an annual apportionment which is paid by the vote of diocesan conventions.

Some of those who endorse the plan to raise the Fund are: The Rt. Rev. Daniel S. Tuttle, D.D., Missouri; the Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D.D., Bethlehem; the Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D.D., Grace church, New York; the Very Rev. H. C. Robbins, dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York; the Rev. George G. Bartlett, D.D., dean of Divinity School, Philadelphia; the Very Rev. C. M. Davis, dean of Christ church cathedral, St. Louis; Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, Gardiner, Maine; Mr. Joseph R. Barroll, St. Louis; the Rev. E. L. Parsons, St. Mark's church, Berkeley, California; the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, St. Thomas's church, New York City.

MIDDLE WEST GIVES WARM WELCOME TO ARCHBISHOP

St. Louis, Cincinnati, Harrisburg and Philadelphia Crowd to Hear Him

After his visit to some of the Middle Western cities during the past two weeks, the Archbishop of York has returned to the East. In St. Louis and Cincinnati he experienced such a manifestation of that hospitality which is characteristic of each that he was evidently deeply impressed. The warmth of his welcome is indicated in the stories of great masses of people thronging to hear him, crowding to their capacity the large auditoriums provided for the occasion.

In each of the two cities mentioned large receptions were held for His Grace. In Cincinnati he was presented with an elaborately wrought souvenir as a memento of his visit, the work of the famous Rookwood Potteries. In Philadelphia a memorable service was held in historic Christ church. On Monday he spoke to over 300 of the clergy of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, and neighboring dioceses, in an address weighted with a very serious message—a message in which he declared that the only potent leader of the world today is Jesus Christ, adding that the Christ is not found in the Church of His name.

ST. LOUIS HEARS HIS GRACE

By Harrington Rogers

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—The visit of the Archbishop of York last week deeply stirred the people of this city. He arrived from Chicago early in the morning of Wednesday and at noon was the guest of the Chamber of Commerce, where for an hour he held the closest attention of over a thousand people after luncheon as he told out his convictions as to the causes of the great War and his sure faith in its inevitable outcome.

In the evening of the same day the Archbishop addressed a great mass meeting at the Odeon, at which the Bishop of Missouri presided and the Governor of Missouri welcomed His Grace on behalf of the State and the city. On Thursday the Garrick Theatre was crowded at the noonday Lenten service. The ground floor was reserved for men and every seat was filled. The galleries were thronged with men and women. The Archbishop held the vast multitude in a holy stillness as he related the awful world tragedy to the Cross of Christ.

He spoke for half an hour. Then he called upon the people to stand and testify their devotion to the "Greatest Citizen of the World" by singing the "first hymn upon the service leaflet, 'Jesus shall reign where'er the sun does his successive journeys run'." Then, with an extempore prayer and the benediction, "Unto God's gracious mercy and protection we commit you," His Grace sent the men and women of the city back to their daily tasks conscious that their "lives had been lifted up into the presence of God". And those who were there will not soon forget the Archbishop's charge to them, "It will not do that you now and then come into the presence of God. You must study to lift your lives up to the level of God and keep them there".

An invitation had been sent to all the clergy of the diocese to come to the See City to spend the day, Thursday. Following the theatre service, a luncheon was had at the St. Louis Club, where His Grace "eagerly grasped the opportunity" which was his of speaking to his "brothers in the ministry and faith of Jesus Christ", and with loving sympathy, as a man talketh to his friend, told out the deep yearnings of his soul as to the part which he believed the ministry of the Church were called to play "at this turning point of the world's history, a moment which is to mean probably more to the civilization of the world than the Fall of the Roman Empire or the French Revolution". It was a rare privilege for the more than thirty clergy who were present and one the fruits of which will surely appear as they go back to "hold the trenches for Christ and His Church" in the hard places of the Missouri mission field.

"I have no word of censure for your country," His Grace said once and again in his St. Louis addresses, "that you came into the struggle so late. That was your own affair. Two things are very clear to me: first, that your great President was not willing that your Nation should go in until the principle for which you would fight was clearly seen and understood and accepted; secondly, that he would not lead you in until he could lead you as a united people. We in my country went in because the honor of our pledged word was challenged and as English people we refused to let the honor of our pledged word be taken from our lips. You on the other hand came deliberately in; and because you so deliberately and so clearly saw the issues involved, it is impossible for my people to believe that you will ever falter until the issue is once for all and forever determined. You had no right to come in and cheer us as you did by your assistance unless you meant that everything of yours should be given until the principle is established which you and we are fighting for."

The Archbishop's closing message was to a congregation which thronged the Cathedral Thursday night, where again he made us "go into our own souls and make sure that we had the high faith for the grim endurance. This War can never be won simply by men and money and munitions. Moral faith and material resources must together bring the victory, and nothing matters but that you here and we in England keep our souls".

His Grace, during his visit, was the guest of the Bishop of Missouri and Presiding Bishop at the Bishop's House.

Public Holiday in Cincinnati

By the Rev. Chas. G. Reade

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—"Carry on" was the message left with the people of Cincinnati by the Archbishop of York when he thrilled a tremendous audience in the huge Music Hall, in which in 1910 another British prelate, the late Bishop of Salisbury, addressed the General Convention of the Church.

The visit, on March 22, was well planned. Even the train bearing His Grace from St. Louis, accompanied by the Rev. F. A. Iremonger, his chaplain, and the Rev. George C. Dunlop, rector of the Advent, Cincinnati, the special representative of the local committee, arrived on time and the whole of the said committee was there to meet the distinguished guest.

Bishop Vincent was chairman of the local committee, a well-deserved honor, and was ably assisted by such of clergy as Dean Purves, Dr. Nelson and the Rev. George C. Dunlop and prominent laymen like Wm. Cooper Procter, Chas. J. Livingood and W. E. McCaw. But it was also representative of the whole city, including Hon. John Galvin, the Mayor, two Judges, Rabbi Philipson, and Richard Crane, possibly the most active Roman Catholic layman of the city.

An informal reception at Bishop Vincent's home on Mt. Auburn was attended by the Bishop Coadjutor, the Rt. Rev. Theodore J. Reese and his wife, who were in the receiving line, the Bishop of Kentucky, and the Bishop of West Virginia, practically all the Cincinnati clergy and their wives and many of the clergy from the Diocese of Lexington. A beautiful piece of Rookwood was presented to the visitor as a souvenir.

The hour for the mass meeting was 4 o'clock in the afternoon, but long before that time the auditorium was thronged and hundreds were turned away. Six thousand is a safe estimate of the attendance.

Bishop Vincent presiding called to mind the visit of a special envoy to England during the Civil War, Bishop McIlvaine, a fellow townsman.

The Mayor, Hon. John Galvin, made a stirring introductory address full of wit and heartiness of welcome which met instant approval. The moment the Archbishop rose was the signal for a great demonstration. The whole audience rose and cheered.

The Archbishop expressed gratitude for the welcome which met him in every city. "The whole world knows your country is very large, but the largest thing about her is her heart." He thanked the Mayor for declaring the day a public holiday and said that when asked at home "Is America with us?" he would answer "Go to Cincinnati and you'll find out".

He was here to speak on behalf of the common citizenship of his country. He was a voice from England after three and a half years of desperate ordeal. Old discords are silenced in enduring harmony. "The liberty this country has was ours. We ought to have given it you, but we were stupid enough to make you take it."

Referring to the Mayor's statement that many of German blood were on the side of Liberty he said "it is the false heart not the true heart of Germany that is against us".

We have come to the time when the liberty we thought safely anchored and secured is threatened by the armed spirit of modern Germany and it is safe no longer but has to be saved.

He paid a tribute to the efficiency and splendid spirit he saw in the men at the Great Lakes Training Station.

This was a crucial moment. The British troops stand very quiet, silent but determined. Noble France is almost exhausted. Italy is desperately defending her historic cities. Russia has reeled back dazed and bewildered by a glimpse of freedom which she has not the strength to understand or use. She needs our prayers to help her to be a free nation. While we were living safely here a dread struggle is on. Pray God that the Allies may hold the line behind which is your liberty and theirs.

Help is needed and at once. In England Capital and Labor have joined for the common weal, not thinking of themselves. Labor is playing a most patriotic part. There is no starvation there, but there is privation, and from king to cottager [illegible] are on compulsory rations. Food is ne[illegible] to sustain the power to endure. The c[illegible] alties have been tremendous, the iron entered into our soul. The message from the graves of the Somme, from the man at the front is: "Never mind me, but carry on".

He asked that the clearness of the great moral issue be kept straight and strong. Men and nations are only invincible when their conscience dominates their actions. The world must be free for all honest people. It cannot exist, as Abraham Lincoln said of this country, half free and half slave. The whole country must rise to the highest moral strength. It must aim to be upon the side of God and accept Him not as ally but as Sovereign.

The audience had already sung with enthusiasm "The Star Spangled Banner" and "God Save the King" to the accompaniment of the great organ, played by K. O. Staps, A.R.A.M., the organist of the Cathedral, and as a fitting close "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" made the very walls shake. It was an hour of high and holy enthusiasm for a just cause, presented without rancor or hatred from a chastened heart in a spirit of intense loyalty and devotion to human freedom.

The Archbishop left that night for Philadelphia, probably very tired but doubtless very happy.

Great Demonstration in Philadelphia

By the Rev. Irving A. McGrew

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA. — The service to welcome the Archbishop of York to Philadelphia was a rare occasion in the local church. It was held on the morning of Palm Sunday at Old Christ church. The congregation that assembled there was probably one of the most representative gatherings the city has ever known. Great care had been taken to issue invitations to the representative bodies of the city, not only those of our Church, but the various Communions, and the civic, academic and social organizations.

The floor of the church was almosst entirely filled with men, many of them the best known in the community. Room was found for the parishioners of the parish, Christ Church Chapel and Old St. Peter's, and also for many others who for various reasons had a claim upon the invitation. Admission was by ticket, which prevented all crowding and bustle, and after the service began many of the disappointed crowd outside were admitted to standing room. Probably the old church has never witnessed a larger congregation.

The service was simple and most uplifting, peculiarly appropriate to the traditions of the ancient shrine. The music was admirably rendered by the enlarged choir of the church and a number of instruments. The rector read Morning Prayer,

EMARKABLE NEW UNITY MOVEMENT UNDER WAY

oint Petition Presented to Bishop and Governing Boards

New Brunswick, New Jersey.—There is remarkable movement looking towards cal church unity now under way in the ty of New Brunswick. The congregations ncerned are Christ Episcopal church, the irst and Second Reformed churches and e Presbyterian church.

This movement has recently come to the otice of a larger public through the pres- ntation of a formal petition on behalf of ie congregations interested addressed ointly to the Bishop and the standing com- ittee of the Diocese of New Jersey, the resbytery of New Brunswick and the lassis of the Reformed church. A delega- on from the four New Brunswick churches as appeared in turn before these main odies outlining the movement for local nity and asking for counsel and advice.

The delegation was headed by Dr. Austin cott, a Presbyterian layman, formerly resident of Rutgers College and now the rofessor of political science in that insti- ution. In accordance with the request ade in the petition, committees of confer- nce have been appointed by the main gov- rning bodies to meet in joint session for ie purpose of considering the important uestions involved. At the conclusion of is conference or series of conferences, ie several committees will report the re- ult of their joint deliberations to the odies which they respectively represent.

The statement of the New Brunswick elegation says in part:

"Since the thirtieth day of December, 917, we have united in common worship ach Lord's Day night, led by the economic nd spiritual stress of the unparalleled orld tragedy in which our young men have one out from us to camp and cantonment nd battlefield. This united worship has een to the edification of us all, the sus- ained interest and marked inspiration im- ressing the thought of the city, command- ng the attention of our fellow citizens, hronging our church edifices, and empha- izing in all hearts the great thought that our common tasks are immeasurably reater than our ancient differences'.

"It has become clear to us that even our recious heritage from the past and our eep affection for traditions we hold dear hould not stand in the way of a larger ulfilment of the Master's prayer for unity. Ve desire to move forward toward the oal of such a union as shall constitute us n unbroken band for Christian worship nd service, in which all among us may ome together, cherishing every particle of ositive and constructive truth which we everally hold.

"Persuaded that in the great world move- ient for the reunion of Christendom there s a greater advantage to be gained by con- rete action than by a mere discussion of heoretical terms, we are approaching the lassis of New Brunswick, the Presbytery f New Brunswick, and the Standing Committee of the Diocese of New ersey with a view of enquiring of them whether they are disposed to encourage us n our desire, whether they will not use the emarkable opportunity which our situation ffers to precipitate in a practical way the nity of our churches.

"It has been suggested in the course of our own discussions that the respective bodies we are now approaching might be willing to appoint special commissioners to consider with us this whole matter in a joint conference. We entreat your consideration of this suggestion.

"Again we ask (1) whether it would be possible for the members of our respective churches to be allowed to enter into fellowship with any or all of the four churches, as they may desire, by whatever process of formal reception each Church has, confirmation or the right hand of fellowship, without thereby forfeiting membership in the church to which such already belong, not affecting the matter of church statistics by this action, and (2) whether the ministers of our respective churches could, if they so desire, become ministers of any other church or of all, without thereby forfeiting in any way their official status or good standing in the churches where they serve and intend to continue to serve.

"We would respectfully ask your consideration of these suggestions and your assistance and co-operation for this undertaking."

It will be noted that the unique feature of the statement above printed, that which differentiates the present proposal from others, is the assertion that no one of the bodies concerned intends to give up any particle of positive and constructive truth which it holds, This, it is argued, is the great contribution which the present movement offers.

Nothing could be finer than the spirit in which these local representatives of other communions have approached the Episcopal Church.

Give All, Says Bishop Tuttle

ON the eve of the great Liberty Loan drive, to begin on April 6, Bishop Tuttle has sent to the Liberty Loan Committee one of his always virile messages. In commenting on this action the Committee says: "He has been a bishop for more than fifty-one years, a clergyman for nearly sixty years. He comes of Revolutionary stock, and is president of the Missouri Sons of the Revolution. Though in his eighty-second year the venerable Bishop is as vigorous as he ever was, a veritable watchman on the tower of his country." The message reads:

"Fellow Americans: All that we are in good will and strong nerve, and all that we have of spare means should be at the service of our country, now that she is in a determined struggle for her own safety, and for international rights and for freedom and justice and fair play for all the world.

"It's a time when, under the colors, and through Liberty Loans, and on the firing line we should cry aloud with Shakespeare's Wolsey,

"'Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's, thy God's and truth's'."

THIRD LYNCHING PROTEST TO LOUISIANA IN SIX WEEKS

National Association Asks Governor What Steps State Will Take

New York City.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has sent to Governor R. G. Pleasant of Louisiana a telegram of protest against the lynching of a Negro in the Court House yard at Monroe, Louisiana, on March 16. The Association's telegram calls attention to the fact that this is the third protest which it has been compelled to make against lynchings in Louisiana within the last six weeks involving altogether five Negroes lynched on three separate occasions and that no reply to the Association's previous requests for information or public statement as to Louisiana's attitude toward these lynchings had been made by Governor Pleasant. Similar telegrams were sent to the Chambers of Commerce of New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Shreveport and Monroe. The telegram follows:

March 18, 1918.

Hon. R. G. Pleasant, Governor,
Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

Sir—Associated Press dispatches of March 16 report that George McNeel, a Negro suspected of a crime but neither tried nor found guilty, was lynched in the Court House yard at Monroe, Louisiana, on the above date. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, composed of representative citizens of both races, addresses you for the third time within six weeks to ask, in the name of its one hundred branches and ten thousand members, for whom it speaks directly, and in the name of the law-abiding citizens of the whole country, what steps Louisiana proposes to take to vindicate her law. On February 6, we addressed you concerning the lynching of one Negro, on March 6, concerning the lynching of three Negroes. No reply has been made to us nor have we seen any statement in the public press which would indicate your appreciation as Governor of the State of the position in which Louisiana's mob actions place the nation at this time when national prestige abroad demands high regard for law and order at home. Does Louisiana wish the nation and her own thousands of colored soldiers now serving their country in the battle for democracy to understand that she will not protect black men accused of crime and that mobs may visit their vengeance upon Negroes without let or hindrance by the constituted authorities of your State? What shall we inform the newspapers who receive our press service regarding Louisiana's attitude?

John R. Shillady,
Secretary National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Historic Church Destroyed

Jacksonville, Illinois.—Trinity church, the Rev. J. F. Langton, rector, was entirely destroyed by fire March 14. Trinity was built in 1832 It is thought to have been the oldest church building in the State, and a landmark in this section. Many distinguished men have been associated with this parish in her long history. Its members confidently look for help in rebuilding from former members all over the country.

BISHOP MANN'S COMPANION BITTEN BY A RATTLESNAKE

Heroic Action of Two Young Women Saves Clergyman's Life

COCOANUT GROVE, FLORIDA.—During a short botanical trip south of this city in company with Bishop Mann and others, the Rev. B. W. Soper was bitten by a large rattlesnake. It was after killing the snake with a heavy stick that the Bishop discovered the serious injury to his companion. Only the quick and heroic action of two young women in the party, who sucked the poison from the wound at the risk of their own lives, saved the life of the clergyman.

After spending two days in visits to the missions and schools under Mr. Soper's charge, the Bishop with some other friends and Mr. Soper were examining some rare orchids, growing wild in a wood four miles south of Cocoanut Grove. At a cry from Mr. Soper, "Look out for the snake!" the Bishop turned to see a large rattlesnake coiled ready for action. Seizing a large stick, the Bishop killed the snake at once, only then discovering that Mr. Soper was already a victim of its venom, a bite given just above his ankle.

Realizing the urgency for immediate action the Bishop made a tourniquet with his handkerchief and a stick to prevent passage of blood above the wound. He then cut the bitten spot to let poisoned blood flow out. Two young ladies in the party added their prompt and heroic aid, by taking turns in sucking the poisoned blood from the wound, though knowing this was at risk of their own lives.

Mr. Soper was then hurried in an auto to the nearest physician, who warmly approved the course taken. He applied permanganate of potash, and the patient was taken to his home.

Beyond having a painful ankle and foot, Mr. Soper had no more serious result from this adventure, but has continued his work. Bishop Mann commented upon Mr. Soper's courage and calmness while fronting the speedy death which usually follows the bite of such a snake. This reptile measured five feet in length and eight inches in circumference.

During this same tour of east coast parishes and missions by Bishop Mann another of his clergy had a serious accident. A motorcycle used by the Rev. Robert D. Tracy of Buena Vista overturned with him while crossing a railroad track, inflicting such injury to one hip that he has since been confined to a hospital bed.

ARE ON THE KING'S BUSINESS

Brotherhood Secretaries in Camps Help Men of All Denominations

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA. — The Brotherhood of St. Andrew secretaries in the camps are on "the King's business" and their work is to bring words of comfort and good cheer wherever they may find the need.

No better example of the broadness of this magnificent work of the Church through earnest Churchmen has been shown than by the spontaneous request that Edmund L. Coyte, secretary of the Brotherhood at Camp Dix, visit a Methodist boy who had been ill in the hospital with pneumonia for two long months.

The request was personal and came from the boy's parents, although there were Methodist workers who might have been asked to see their boy.

And whether or not Mr. Coyte's visit accomplished its purpose may be judged by a note he received from the boy a few days later which said:

"Please come and see me as I need to see you very much."

Why Doesn't the Argument Hold Now?

WHEN he was Governor of New Jersey President Wilson said concerning the "zone" Postage System for newspapers and periodicals:

"It must be that those who are proposing this change of rates do not comprehend the effect it would have. A tax upon the business of the more widely circulated magazines and periodicals would be a tax upon their means of living and performing their functions.

"They obtain their circulation by their direct appeal to the popular thought. Their circulation attracts advertisers. Their advertisements enable them to pay their writers and to enlarge their enterprise and influence.

"This proposed new postal rate would be a direct tax, and a very serious one, upon the formation and expression of opinion—its more deliberate formation and expression just at a time when opinion is concerning itself actively and effectively with the deepest problems of our politics and our social life.

"To make such a change now, whatever its intentions in the minds of those who propose it, would be to attack and embarrass the free processes of opinion. Surely sober second thought will prevent any such mischievous blunder."

Congress—or a sufficient majority of it—has voted to destroy magazine reading. It has accomplished this by passing a simple law re-establishing a postal "zone" system for all publications—a zone system and postal principle abolished by President Lincoln in 1863, and by establishing through a complicated system postal rates that mean increases of from 50 to 900 per cent. postage increases to all periodical readers.

CHARLESTOWN PARISH GIVES ITS WOMEN RIGHT TO VOTE

Only Male Communicants to be Eligible for Wardens and Vestrymen

CHARLESTOWN, SOUTH CAROLINA.—Important amendments and changes in the charter, constitution and by-laws of Grace Episcopal church, the Rev. William Way rector, have been adopted by the congregation. By virtue of the changes, the rector becomes a member and chairman of the vestry, women pewholders are given the right of ballot and men are eligible for wardens and vestrymen only if they are communicants. The recommendations were made by unanimous vote of the vestrymen.

The decision was made after a notice to the congregation had been made through the secretary, a portion of which was as follows:

"Please take notice that pursuant to a resolution adopted this day by the Vestry a meeting of the members of Grace church will be held in the church immediately after the morning service on Sunday, March 17, 1918, for the purpose of considering and voting upon such amendments and changes of the charter, constitution and by-laws of the Church as will conform the same to the canons of the Church by making the rector the chairman of the Vestry and also for the purpose of giving to the women members of the church the right to vote.

"Notice is hereby given that it is proposed to amend article one of the constitution so as to read as follows:

"Article 1—'All the temporal interest and affairs of this corporation shall be governed and controlled by the Vestry, which shall be composed of the rector of the church, if there be one, who shall be the chairman of the Vestry, and two church wardens and seven vestrymen, who shall be nominated in the presence of the congregation and elected annually on Easter Monday; the election to be held by the wardens or by such members of the Vestry as shall be appointed by the Vestry at the usual place of worship of the congregation between the hours of 12 o'clock m. and 2 p. m.'

"Also article two of the constitution so that the same shall read as follows:

"Article II—'Any male communicant in the church of the age of twenty-one years as shall own or hire a pew or part of a pew for three months immediately preceding the election for members of the Vestry shall be eligible as a warden or vestryman. Every adult worshiper of the church who shall have owned or hired a pew or part of a pew for three months immediately preceding such election shall be entitled to vote for the wardens and vestrymen.'"

GIFTS AND MEMORIALS

St. Matthew's mission, Winter Haven, Florida, has been enriched by a group of memorial gifts, very deeply appreciated by the faithful rector, the Rev. James H. Davet, and by the congregation. A handsome quartered oak altar was presented by Mrs. Julia J. Alvey in memory of her son Henry C. Alvey, and family; a brass cross and eucharistic candlesticks were presented by Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Bruce; and brass vases were given by Mrs. William Frederick Hutchinson in memory of her father, Mr. Hambury Twigg.

Our Weekly News Letters

NEW YORK

The Dream of Gerontius" at St. Thomas'—Perhaps the outstanding feature of The Dream of Gerontius at St. Thomas' church last Wednesday night was the absolute harmony of Gothic setting and music. We are so used to hearing the Oratorio Society and the Musical Arts Society in the glare of Carnegie Hall, and to put our eyes perforce to the incongruity of soloists in evening dress singing the music of the Passion, that perhaps the greatest joy of such an experience as that of last Wednesday was the lifting of the great beauty of the music out of the realm of physical disharmonies. Never did the Gothic of St. Thomas' more perfectly satisfy me than as I sat at the foot of one of the great ivory-colored pillars, and looked up into the glorious roof while the robed choirs under Mr. Noble's fine leadership sang Elgar's wonderful setting of Newman's soul-stirring poem. The benediction at the close dismissed the congregation after a Lenten service which taught a lesson deeper than sermon could teach.

The oratorio was given for the benefit of the Church War Commission and the Red Cross. Preceding it the Liberty Anthem dedicated to the Liberty Loan was sung by choir and congregation.

The music written by Mrs. George Barton French has a range that makes it suitable for every voice. The arrangement for chorus is by T. Tertius Noble, organist of St. Thomas' church; the words by Charles V. Gordon. The last verse is:

Now in our Allies' land, breasting war's tide,
Our sons march hand in hand, God is their guide,
Once more we hear the call, "Keep the world free",
Rise! rise! and give your all, for Liberty.

The Cathedral Easter Offering—The Easter Offering at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine is to be a great congregational offering for the maintenance of the Cathedral. The cost of maintenance has increased considerably, owing in part to rising prices, and in part to deterioration of the fabric, necessitating greater expenditure for repairs. Coal alone, in spite of economy in its use which the Winter congregations well remember, cost three thousand dollars more than in normal years.

The Cathedral is not a parish church, and has no parishioners to whom an appeal can be made. But the Cathedral has great congregations, among which there are many who attend with considerable regularity. To these in particular an earnest appeal has been made to sign and return the Easter Offering pledge cards.

The Island's League—The annual meeting of the Island's League will be held on Wednesday, April 3, at 2.30 p. m., in the Church Club at 53 East Fifty-sixth Street. All who are interested in the League and its work, all who care to become members, all who wish to find out what it is and what it does are welcome. The Rev. Wm. Watson will speak about the work in Cuba which is the special diocese chosen as the subject of this annual meeting.

Church Club Dinner—The dinner which the Church Club is planning in honor of the Archbishop of York and the members of the House of Bishops on the night of April 10 is going to be a very interesting occasion. Absolute simplicity is the keynote; an informal gathering of the Church people of the diocese to listen to the last message His Grace has to give them before returning to England.

Army Nurses Confirmed—One hundred and fifty of the army nurses who have attended the French classes and the singing of patriotic airs and popular songs, which have been conducted for several months at St. Paul's chapel, assembled in St. Paul's last Wednesday afternoon. Bishop Burch confirmed two of their number and blessed the service flag of Base Hospital 116. The Rev. Leslie C. Kelly, chaplain of Base Hospital 30, was in the chancel. He had hoped to have his portable altar blessed but unfortunately it did not arrive in time from the manufacturers. Bishop Burch addressed the nurses in most inspiring and comforting words which came with the special force from him because he is Chaplain General of St. Barnabas Guild for Nurses.

Consecration of the Huntington Chapel—The Chapel of St. Ansgarius is to be consecrated on Wednesday, April 3. It is given in memory of Dr. Huntington, late rector of Grace church, New York. Because the chapel can seat only 200 people special cards of invitation have been issued inviting those who contributed to the building to the service.

BOSTON

The Bishop at the Cathedral—Bishop Lawrence occupied the pulpit of his Cathedral at every noonday service in Passion Week. Seats were at a premium each day. Wherever the Bishop speaks, whether in church or at secular gatherings, the magnetism of the undoubted leader in social and religious life draws crowds of the mentally awake to hear him.

The seating capacity of the Cathedral has for years been taxed during the noonday services of the Lenten season, but never, perhaps, so steadily and consistently as this year. When the War releases the money and energy of Churchmen of the diocese and frees the Bishop for another swift campaign for necessary funds, the reconstructed Cathedral fabric will be a cause for thanksgiving to the whole diocese.

Easter at the Cathedral—There will be a celebration of the Holy Communion at the Cathedral on Easter Day at 6 a. m. This will be followed by a second celebration at 7 a. m. and a third at 8 a. m. Morning Prayer will be said at 9 a. m. and at 11 o'clock will come the Holy Communion with the full choir and Dean Rousmaniere as preacher. At 4 p. m. the Carol Service of the Church School is to be held and at 7.30 the choir will sing the Cantata, "The Resurrection", followed by an address by Bishop Lawrence.

The "Daylight Saving" Time Schedule—Putting into effect at 2 a. m. Easter morning the new time schedule required by the "Daylight Saving" law is going to require alertness on the part of the average parishioner lest he find himself a full hour late to his Easter service. Several of Boston's weekly parish calendars are sounding a timely warning that might well have the widest sort of publicity. On Easter Monday the daily paper cartoonist will have his amusing fling at the slow-witted folks and the embarrassing predicaments into which they plunged on the first day of "daylight saving".

"Three-Hour Services"—Never have the three hours' devotion on Good Friday had so general observance in parishes as this year. Every one of the larger parishes of the city observed its own "Three Hours". The Dean conducted this service at the Cathedral and Dr. Van Allen at the Church of the Advent. The Rev. Prescott Evarts of Christ church, Cambridge, conducted the Three Hours at St. John's church, Roxbury. At Trinity church the rector was the preacher. The Vicar preached the Three Hours at St. Stephen's church.

Well-Known Churchwoman Passes—Miss Mary G. Hooper, nearly ninety years of age, has recently died. She was one of the oldest parishioners of St. Stephen's church, Boston. Coming as a worshiper and worker to St. Stephen's when it was first founded in 1891, she labored for many years as a Working Associate in the famous Branch of the Girls' Friendly Society at St. Stephen's and later became an Honorary Associate. Up to within a few months she was able to be a constant attendant at the services of her parish church. Her parish priest writes of her:

"For sixty years her life had been closely associated with that of another aged parishioner of our church, Mrs. Seth Sprague, who survives her. A friendship so long and so serene as theirs is indeed rare, and we must believe that it gained its unusual beauty from the deep religious basis on which it was founded. The sight of the two, 'walking in the House of God as friends', was as dear as it was familiar to the older members of the church. May God grant to the remaining friend peace in her latter days and to the soul departed eternal rest and light perpetual to shine upon her."

GEORGIA

A Gala Day—March 1 was a day of great rejoicing in St. Matthew's church, Fitzgerald, Ga., the Rev. J. W. Bleker, rector. A beautiful new church was built several years ago and on March 1 the last dollar of the remaining debt was paid. The service on this occasion was a service of thanksgiving for the realization of their hopes. The rector paid touching tribute to the Rev. J. W. Turner, the pioneer missionary of the Church in Fitzgerald, who sowed the seed of which this splendid church is the result.

Bishop at Camp—The Bishop is deeply interested in the work at Camp Hancock, Augusta, and visits the camp as frequently as possible, preaching to the men at their regimental services, for which arrangements are made by the civilian chaplain, the Rev. N. B. Groton. It is estimated that there are at least two thousand communicants of our own Church among the Pennsylvania troops. They have found a warm welcome in all the parishes in the city and have made many warm friends among the people who will regret to see them leave shortly for France.

Ten Per Cent. in Service—On Sunday evening, March 10, St. Paul's church, Augusta, the Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney, rector, unfurled a beautiful service flag with fifty-six stars, which represents over ten per cent. of the communicant membership of the parish. At the same time a very handsome national flag of silk was presented by a member of the parish to be carried in the choir processional. A prominent layman, Capt. J. Rice Smith, made a touching address, and the roll of honor was read by Captain John Clark, another veteran of the Civil War. The full band of the 112th Pennsylvania Infantry furnished inspiring music and the building was packed to the doors. The new St. Paul's church is practically completed but will not be open until about May 1; in the meantime the services are still held in the commodious Sunday school building.

The night service is preceded by a social hour for the soldiers, which has proved exceedingly popular and helpful in reaching the men from camp. The Bishop has recently confirmed two classes at St. Paul's which included fifteen soldiers.

CONNECTICUT

Quiet Day—On Thursday, March 14, Bishop Courtney conducted a quiet day for women at Christ church, Hartford, under the auspices of the Companions of the Order of the Holy Cross. Holy Communion was celebrated at 7:30 in the morning, after which breakfast was served in the parish house. There were four addresses during the day, the last one being at 4:30. Luncheon also was served in the parish house.

Dr. Miel Given Indefinite Leave—A unique and important meeting of the congregation of Trinity church, Hartford, was held immediately after the morning service on Sunday, March 17. As soon as the choir had retired the senior warden, Mr. Henry E. Rees, advanced to the chancel steps and amid an impressive silence announced to the congregation the purpose of the meeting. In moving and seconding the motion to grant Dr. Miel leave of absence, it was pointed out that, while the vestry had legal right to grant this leave, that body had chosen to lay the matter before the congregation, in order that the rector should know that his people were not only willing that he should return to France, but were proud and happy to have such a man to offer to the country. The motion was passed by a unanimous rising vote.

Mr. Henry S. Robinson then referred to the splendid devotion and unselfish labor of Rev. Robert Eliot Marshall, assistant, who has carried on the work of the parish in Dr. Miel's absence, and who is again facing that responsible task. It was made clear that the parish was eager both in personal and in financial co-operation to support Mr. Marshall in the heavy duties which again fall upon him. A rising vote of appreciation and of confidence was tendered to Mr. Marshall, together with an earnest pledge of co-operation. Dr. Miel will leave very shortly after Easter.

Double Dedication—"A double dedication," as Bishop Brewster, D.D., put it, was held at the new St. Andrew's church, New Haven, Sunday, March 17. The church itself, some $40,000 worth of property, was consecrated free of debt Washington's Birthday, 1917. January 1, 1918, saw the church free of all other debts. There remains but $500 debt on the rectory at present. March 17 those essential memorials of brass, all Gorhams of New York, were dedicated. A pulpit given by Richard H. and Rose Hill, of Boston, in memory of Mr. Hill's sister, Miss Elinore Hill, a faithful music teacher of St. Andrews; a lectern was the gift of Mrs. Clifford and Miss Bertha Judson in memory of Martha Josephine Judson, long time a president of the Ladies' Guild; a prayer desk, in memory of George and Isabella Edwards, by their son, George S. Edwards, Junior. The church had only wooden furniture before. A New Haven cabinet-maker, Mr. Chas. E. Griffiths, donated the bases for lectern and pulpit in artistic oak. The dedication of these "essential" but "material" things, as the Bishop said, was but "secondary" as compared with the spiritual dedication, on this same occasion, before a full church, of thirty-one souls by confirmation. to the noble service and church of Jesus Christ. Eight of these, four being parents, were baptized recently.

PHILADELPHIA

Help for Halifax Churches Urged—A meeting of interest to Church people was held at the Bellevue on Wednesday, March 20. The Rev. E. J. Donaldson, rector of Trinity church, Halifax, told the story of the disaster to the city, and more particularly to the churches there. The Canadian Government is aiding in the rebuilding of the churches—but the War has handicapped its ability, and aid is needed. The choir of St. James' church sang, and the Church people of the city were present in large number.

The Simes' Bequest—The recent report of the legacy left to Old Swede's church, Gloria Dei, was inaccurate. Mrs. Eleanor R. Simes, widow of the late rector, the Rev. Snyder B. Simes, died on February 21, and was buried in the Church-yard on Tuesday, the 26th. By the will of Mrs. Simes, a trust fund is provided to subscribe annually to the Spirit of Missions and the Alaska Churchman for the Sunday school teachers and the members of the vestry of Old Swede's. A second trust fund of $12,000 is established as a yearly revenue for the Missionary apportionment of the parish. Except for two bequests of $5,000 each, and one personal trust fund to be used during life, the entire residuary estate is left in trust for the benefit of the Church, the Sunday school and the grounds. It is expected that the principal of this fund will eventually exceed $60,000.

The congregation of Gloria Dei feel that the Church in its present condition of stability is itself a monument to Mr. and Mrs. Simes, who went to it as bride and groom just fifty years ago, and both in life and death gave themselves and their all to its upbuilding.

The Sunday school and congregation of Gloria Dei are planning to observe this year as the golden anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Simes' association with the parish and to establish in their honored memory some permanent memorial on the mission field.

The annual service on Easter Day, instituted by Mr. Simes at Gloria Dei, many years ago, will be held this year at o'clock, and the same form of service, with special choir and music, will be as in previous years. Irving A. McCann.

KANSAS

Bishop Wise Holds Mission—Bishop Wise's Mission at St. Andrew's church, Fort Scott, Kansas, was held from March 3 to 10. The preparation for this mission was conducted all the preceding week by a daily service and short address on the way to cooperate by work and prayer to make a mission successful.

The Daily Tribune of Ft. Scott gave large contribution of notices and news about the "Mission" and the parish published a display ad. every day for two weeks on what may be called "Religious Rousers" to attract attention. These were not explanations of Church teaching on controverted points, but expressions of the common sense which underlies all religion. One of these paid advertisements is quoted as a sample:

"You can't fool God—He knows the true state of your heart. He knows the quality of your life. He knows the supreme aim of your life. He knows your trials and your cares. He knows your temptations. As the sowing so the reaping. Come to the Mission, St. Andrew's church, March 3 to 10."

Other preparatory work was done by window posters, a big banner, automobile pennants and service and a helping band of Church scouts to deliver letters and messages.

Jews Send Flowers—Conferences on "How to Make Christians" were held each day at 4 o'clock, with a large and enthusiastic attendance. These conferences roused great interest in parochial affairs and resulted in the lifting of a $4,500 debt of long standing. The mission preaching services were held at night and were attended by many outsiders. The service was short and unliturgical, followed by a sermon based on "The Prodigal Son". Then after a hymn the "Instruction on the Teaching of the Church." Bishop Wise made the parable of the prodigal son so impressive and graphic that it seemed like a new Gospel of God's love for sinners. An influential Jewish family who were seen in constant attendance sent flowers for the Sunday services with a kind note of appreciation.

WYOMING

Bishop's Lectures—Before starting on his tour of confirmation visitations throughout the district, Bishop Thomas is delivering a series of lectures at St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, and St. Mark's church, Cheyenne.

Bequest for Memorial—St. Mark's church, Casper, has been given a bequest to be used in placing a permanent memorial in the church for Casper Collins, for whom the old Fort Casper was named, and whose name has descended to the present town of Casper.

Clergy Leave—The Rev. Franklin Smith, rector of St. Thomas' church

awlins, and dean of the Rawlins Deanery, to leave the district shortly, having re-gned his work to take up duty in the iocese of Bethlehem under Bishop Talbot. The Rev. Stanley S. Thompson of Du-ois has resigned his duty at St. Thomas' urch, and has enlisted in the service of ie country. LUCY M. TAYLOR.

BUFFALO

Noonday Lenten Services at St. Paul's—The attendance this year was large and ie preachers brought to Buffalo by the rotherhood of St. Andrew were men with message for the present. They were Dean ousmaniere of Boston, Dr. Tompkins of hiladelphia, the Rev. Luke M. White of ontclair, the Rev. L. Ralph Sherman of oronto, the Rev. William Wilkinson of ew York and Bishop Knight of Sewanee.

Churchman's Club—For the first time ie club held a series of Lenten services eekly, on Tuesday evenings, in St. Paul's hurch. The noonday preachers were the reachers in the evening, and many were ble to hear them who could not attend a ay service. Moreover, the services culti-ated a fraternal feeling between members f different parishes and emphasized the piritual side of the club's life. The choir as made up entirely of men from the arious parishes.

A Progressive Step in Church School Method—A most valuable suggestion as made recently by a member of St. lary's-on-the-Hill. As a practical remedy or the scarcity of qualified teachers he pro-osed training them from the ranks of the arish, and to that end subscribed gener-usly to a fund to pay a Normal teacher, ho is to be asked to conduct classes. This ounds to me refreshing. How are we to ave good teaching without proper train-ng? And where is a busy man or woman o be trained for the Church School? With-ut slighting or discounting the fine work f untrained teachers, it is surely a fact nat our religious instruction ought to be iven as scientifically as our secular instruc-ion. The man who affirmed, when he tried o enter the Scotch ministry without the roper educational qualifications, "God has o need of learning," was met by the truth-ul retort, "He has less need of your ignor-nce"; and certainly the day has gone by hen men "suffer fools gladly". (I speak f method out of a full heart, for I'm trying o conduct a big study class without any.)

The Rector of Trinity Given a Leave—Early in the year the Rev. Cameron J. Davis found it necessary to take a rest om his heavy diocesan and parochial work, nd the vestry granted him six months' eave of absence. Mr. Davis is in Ashe-ille, and we are glad to learn is finding ie change and rest beneficial. During his bsence the Rev. Rush R. Sloane, Mr. Davis' assistant, is in charge of the parish. The pulpit is being filled by out-of-town lergymen, among those who have already reached in Trinity being Bishop Courtney nd the Rev. F. B. Blodgett. Dean Fos-roke comes a little later.

ELIZABETH A. LAWRENCE.

BALTIMORE

An Ordination—On Sunday, March 17, he Rev. Edward Pinkney Wroth was ad-anced to the priesthood by Bishop Murray in Christ church, Baltimore. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Berryman Green, dean of the Seminary at Alexandria, Virginia. Mr. Wroth is a son of the Rev. Edward W. Wroth, rector of All Saints' church, Baltimore, and a nephew of the Rev. Peregrine Wroth, archdeacon of Baltimore. He will continue his work as assistant to the Rev. Dr. Niver at Christ church.

Dr. Gray at the Cathedral—On the fifth Sunday in Lent the special preacher at the Cathedral was the Rev. Dr. Arthur R. Gray, secretary for Latin America of the General Board of Missions. His subject was "American Interests in the Caribbean" and he brought out strikingly the growing importance of this region, which controls the entrance to the Panama Canal and in which there are more people under the American flag today than were in the whole thirteen colonies when the Declaration of Independence was signed. What the Church is now doing there and is about to do is therefore of momentous importance not only to herself but to the nation.

A Great Exhibit Preparing—Elaborate preparations are being made for a great Liberty Loan Cantonment to be held in the Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, beginning March 30, which will symbolize the significance of the War to the United States. It will be a realistic reproduction of a sector of the battle front, with trenches, artillery, a genuine tank and many other exhibits brought from the front, designed to bring home vividly the tragic struggle in which the men who have been trained in the armory are now bearing an honorable part. It is intended to stimulate the sale of Liberty Bonds.

When the Prussians Came to Poland—This was the subject of an interesting lecture given by Madame Turczynowicz at Albaugh's Opera House recently under the auspices of the Red Cross Auxiliary of Emmanuel Church. The audience, a large and fashionable one, was seated by some of the leaders of society and was deeply impressed by the lecture. WILLYS REDE.

PITTSBURGH

Church Removes Garage—The Church of the Ascension has just purchased the Rex property at a cost of $30,000. This property consists of a large stone house and a garage on the corner of Ellsworth Avenue and Neville Street, directly in front of the church. Dr. Wyatt Brown, the rector, in his weekly Bulletin to his congregation says, "It has always seemed to me a case of hiding our candle beneath a bushel to have our exquisite church obstructed by the garage at its door. When the outhouse is removed, we shall, I believe, really for the first time appreciate what a superb plant we have at the corner of Ellsworth Avenue and Neville Street. Few Pittsburgh churches will boast a more sightly and satisfactory property than we in time to come. A new era begins with this acquisition and while an obligation is incurred, the advantage gained for the Church will make even this a source of pride and gratification."

Quiet Day—The Right Reverend the Bishop of the Diocese held a Quiet Day for the clergy on Monday, March 18, at the Saint Mary Memorial, Pittsburgh. In the morning there was a celebration of the Holy Communion and two addresses. A Lenten luncheon was served in the parish house, and the addresses were continued in the afternoon, interspersed with the singing of hymns and appropriate prayers.

Brotherhood Meeting—A meeting of Churchmen, under the auspices of the Local Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, took place at Christ church, Pittsburgh, on Tuesday evening, March 19. A service was held in the church at 6:15, followed by supper in the parish house. The main meeting was held at 8 o'clock, when the Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown of the Church of the Ascension spoke on "The Hope of the World"; and directors or representatives of various chapters made report of work being done by them at the present time. Quite a number of the soldier boys who are in Pittsburgh studying at Carnegie Technical School were welcome guests.

For St. Andrew's School—The Rev. McVeigh Harrison, O. H. C., lately spent several days in the diocese giving illustrated talks and making appeals in behalf of St. Andrew's School for Boys, situated among the mountains of Tennessee. In Pittsburgh he spoke at Calvary church and the Church of the Ascension, and made one of the noonday addresses at the Brotherhood Lenten services at Trinity church. He also spent a day in St. Peter's parish, Uniontown. His appeals were listened to with much interest, and he received a number of pledges in behalf of his school. JANE CUDDY.

CHICAGO

Visit of Archbishop of York—The principal event of the week past in Chicago, from the ecclesiastical and civic standpoint, has been the visit of the Archbishop of York. The Archbishop was entertained at dinner on Saturday night at the University Club by Samuel Insull, chairman of the State Council of Defense.

On Monday evening he was the guest of honor at the one hundred and sixth Convocation of the University of Chicago. The plans for Tuesday, the nineteenth, included a visit to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, where he received official recognition as the representative of the Government of Great Britain. In the afternoon he delivered the Convocation address at the University of Chicago.

Free Tuberculosis Lectures—The announcement of the Free Course of Lectures, "Tuberculosis in Relation to Modern Problems", which are to be given at the City Club of Chicago under the auspices of the Chicago Tuberculosis Institute in connection with the Theodore B. Sachs Tuberculosis Study Class work under the chairmanship of Max Biesenthal, M.D., has been received with a great deal of interest by the social and civic workers of the city, who are invited, with others interested in the general subject, to attend. The first lecture will be given on Thursday evening, the speaker being W. A. Evans, M.D., on "The Press and Tuberculosis".

Vigilance Committee at St. Andrew's—The Rev. Benjamin E. Chapman of St. Andrew's church, West Side, has organized and put into active service a "vigilance committee", which, while hardly so formidable as its name would seem to imply, is producing results in the matter of keeping alive the forces working in this congested west side district for purity and righteousness. The committee watches for strangers, seeking to bring them to the hearing of the Gospel; its members go to those who have grown indifferent to the work of Christianity in order to bring them back as active workers, and in general make a real effort to bring about a state of Christian devotion and loyalty to the things of God in the parish.

Church Improvements at Downer's Grove—Extensive repairs to the Church fabric have been made at St. Andrew's church, Downer's Grove, during the past few months. A new system of drainage has been installed on the roof; the stained glass windows repaired; the heating system extended to include the whole church, and a new lighting system devised and installed. A piano has been purchased for use in the Sunday school service and for choir rehearsals. This parish has been the scene of a distinct forward movement since the coming of the Rev. Hugh M. MacWhorter as priest-in-charge.

Rector's Son Receives Promotion—William B. Edwards, the son of the Rev. John Herbert Edwards, rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest, has been promoted to the rank of ensign of the United States Naval Reserve Forces, being the first to receive such an appointment at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station at Waukegan.

ALBERT EDWARD SELCER.

LONG ISLAND

Fifteen Years of Service—The Rev. Nathaniel P. Boyd, rector of St. Philip's church, Dean street, Brooklyn, is just completing his fifteenth year of service. Mr. Boyd was one of Archdeacon Russell's boys at Laurenceville, Virginia, and while there learned carpentry. When he came to Brooklyn, he put on overalls and helped to build his own church, in which he has done good and successful work. With his people he is now rejoicing in the possession of a new organ, for which they have all worked most faithfully.

Missions of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn—A member of the Missionary Society of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, of which the Rev. John Howard Melish is rector, announced at a recent meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary that they were providing Mrs. T. C. Wetmore, principal of Christ School, Arden, N. C., with an automobile. We also learned at this meeting that the Junior Auxiliary of the diocese of Long Island has taken entire charge of a little Indian boy at the Navajo Mission Hospital, at Fort Defiance, Arizona. This boy who is blind from the awful scourge of trachoma, which is so prevalent among the Indians there, will be educated and well cared for and, as he gives evidence of being a most spiritually minded child, it is hoped that he will become a leader among his own people.

Money Raised Quickly—After a soul-stirring talk from Miss Helen Littell on China at a meeting of the Long Island branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, the $224.00 needed to complete its final pledge of $1,000.00 for the Church General Hospital at Wuchang, China, was raised from the floor in a comparatively few minute

War Problems and Convocation—Convocation is often accused of discussing problems of merely academic interest, but the February sessions of the Upper House of Canterbury Convocation were entirely free from the reproach. The first business was the supply of chaplains. Though we have an average of 2,000 chaplains to the Forces—rather less than one-tenth of our whole number of active clergy—we are a long way below the numbers required. But the fault, said the Archbishop, is anywhere than with the clergy themselves, who have been literally straining at the leash in their anxiety to serve. The difficulty is to fill their places at home, and the Bishop of London suggested the establishment of some central board which would be responsible for finding suitable priests to carry on the most necessary parts of the home work. One satisfactory announcement is that the selection of chaplains is not now left entirely to the overworked Chaplain General. The Archbishop and apparently also some of the diocesan bishops are sharing the responsibility. This is a welcome announcement, as there have been many complaints of offers of service being unaccountably ignored.

The next announcement was that of the formation of a war council of clergy and laity, which is to deal with important problems, both those which exist at present and those which will become urgent during the period of demobilization. The dioceses have already elected their representatives, and the archbishops have added others. This is a matter of the first importance, as it will give the Church, as such, an organ for the expression of its view of social problems.

Purity of Life—"Always a difficult subject to discuss, not only because of exaggerations, but because people have cogent reasons for not discussing it in detail," said the Archbishop. He was almost scathing in his language of denunciation when dealing with the current slanders about the morals of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps. He had been struck with amazement at the careful arrangements which had been made for the moral protection of the members of the W. A. A. C. He had been to the bottom of the matter, and he could safely say that the wild stories were a libel on those who control the W. A. A. C. and on the women themselves.

Turning to the protection of the soldier himself, the Archbishop said that there must always be danger when temporary leave is spent in cities. "This is strongly felt by our American Allies, who, as the result of our experience, have drawn up regulations at the outset, based on our experience." Many of the bishops then spoke of the difficulties of the work of purity in their dioceses, and of the attempts made to solve them. The remaining business of the Upper House was the proposal to recognize All Souls' Day. Notwithstanding the powerful advocacy of the Bishops of London, Winchester, Oxford, and others, who all urged the difference which the war had made to public sentiment, the motion was lost by ten against nine. Meantime th Lower House was engaged on a fruitles discussion on the Athanasian Creed, whic ended in an overwhelming rejection of th compromise proposed by the Upper House and in giving a cordial welcome to the nev Education Bill, with the proviso that Chris tian education should be given in all school according to parental choice.

Shorter Services—Dr. Percy Dearmer i always interesting. He is not afraid of th scorn of the old school, with their tales o the number of hours which were spent i church. Services in the Army have to b short, and they are all the better for it. S at least Dr. Dearmer claims in the course o an article in the Challenge. "The onl parts of our services which are intolerabl bad are the parts which the clergy them selves provide." So he would sweep awa the falsely sentimental hymns, the trivia chants and anthems, and the "lips whic drone at us from the pulpit". Also th "Vesper hymns, and other inanities". Tak away the prosy banality of the war pray ers—now become a machine—and what i left? Just the Prayer-book and Lection ary. We all want to revise it, he among others, but the changes would not be ver noticeable. We should shorten the variabl part, the psalms and lessons. Reduce th psalms to one, and allow the choice of an other than that for the day. Let the lesson be shorter and better chosen, with fewe blood-thirsty stories. Give leave to omit a exhortations, as non-liturgical parts of th service. And then see what would happe The bishops have power to sanction suc omissions. In the Army the service mu not last more than forty-five or fifty min utes, and the civilian services in India fo low the same rule. Yet in England we sti have an hour and a half—and people d not come. The reasons are not all bad "Life is not the leisurely thing it was century ago: long services are nearly alway more formal than short ones, and the length is generally due to bad music an bad preaching". The liturgical service generally liked, but we could also have simple service of the Y. M. C. A. type i addition on Sunday evenings.

[Deleted by Censor]—I must find spac to tell you about Mr. [deleted]. He wa just one of those devoted parish pries whom the world never hears about. H was rector of a London parish. [Deleted a man of "reckless ventures of faith, an tireless energy", as a friend described hir He lived for his parish, and was one of th first in London to appreciate the value o week-day sermons to workers. During ai raids he used to go round his parish, chee ing everybody up. But he did it, as th worldly man would say, once too often. I the full tide of his vigor, he fell like a so dier to a German bomb. And then th newspapers discovered that there had bee an "heroic rector". But his parish kne it for years. Little wonder that the Bisho of London came to the funeral and spok of the splendid example which he ha given.

Some Spring Book-Reviews

IE GOLDEN DAYS OF THE EARLY ENGLISH CHURCH. By Sir Henry Howorth. New York: E. P. Dutton & Company. Price $15.

The long history of England is practically a history of Christian England because the Saxon tribes who broke into the oman province of Britain did not commence to have a history in any real sense til they were converted to Christianity. this way the beginnings of English nalism coincided with the beginnings of ristian missionary work among the Engh. Unique in many ways is the story the conversion of England. No other ople in western Europe of either whole mixed Teutonic stock had the good forne to produce a historical writer of the pe of Bede to transmit to posterity the count of their Christian origins. Bede ight well be called the Herodotus of ristian historical literature. Like Herodus he is a charming raconteur; like erodotus, too, he has a sense of proporonate values in working up his material d he also shares with his greater and ore illustrious predecessor the gift of a ardy common sense which kept him from sing his balance even when he is telling out events and personalities which stir s own soul.

Sir Henry Howorth, who has already one valiant service as an historian, has ven the last years of an active life to the sk of presenting to the English-speaking iblic a popular account of the times of regory the Great. A fitting conclusion to s work is found in these three volumes, propriately entitled The Golden Days of e Early English Church. There is no isel to the gold; solid metal comes down us derived from Bede's fascinating cords. Those who question the accuracy Sir Henry's descriptive title or who won:r why they should be asked to share his thusiasm need only think by contrast of e almost contemporaneous period among e Franks described by Gregory of Tours compare our knowledge of the introducon of Christianity among the Saxons ith what can be discovered of the Chrisan beginning of the Visigoths from the n of even such a man as St. Isidore of eville or they might be asked to recall how sy it is to skip the dreary places in the rrative of Paul the Deacon, although he es his best to idealize the history of his vn people, the Lombard invaders of aly.

These three volumes may be called a mmentary on Bede's Ecclesiastical History, though, of course, they present a conuous and most interesting narrative. here is much artistic and archæological scussion suggested by Bede's work. Conmporaneous lives of the Saxon saints e drawn upon for material where Bede's iginal text can be augmented. As a deted disciple of his venerated master, Sir enry does not forget that his history must a personal record of men and women, ot an analysis of institutions or the ronicle of battles. These golden days the Church in England are the days hen Christianity was elastic enough to low wide play for personality. Where ould a man of St. Cuthbert's temperaent find a place in the modern Christian Church? The wild seafowl on the rock-bound coast he loved to talk to would still greet him as their friend, but where would he find a place among the canon lawyers and expert theologians of later times? How far elaborated institutionalism often crushes out personality may be seen in this delightful story of the ways and means by which our pagan ancestors became in God's providence the seed plot of Christian sanctity and devotion.

THE IDEA OF GOD. By Professor Pringle-Pattison. Oxford University Press. $3.50.

So much modern philosophical work is confined to technical points in epistemology or to critical discussions of the respective platforms of Realists, Idealists and what must be called old-fashioned Pragmatists that it is really a comfort to read a book which discusses such a traditional subject as the idea of God. Professor Pattison has a deservedly eminent place among the modern leaders of philosophic study. He keeps to the historic standards of the older schools of European thought; he is not afraid to mention the names of Hegel and Lotze and he is not convinced that an age of finality begins under the auspices of William James or Edward Bradley. This does not imply that Professor Pattison has a slight regard for the representatives of modern thought. These lectures delivered at the University of Aberdeen are to a considerable extent concerned with contributions made by recent writers: Bergson, Ward, Bosanquet, Rashdall, McTaggart are not neglected.

Bergson occupies a prominent position, especially because of his subtle examination of the influence of the specialized idea of time. With many points in Bergson's teaching the Gifford lecturer agrees, but he finds it difficult to reconcile Bergson's idea of a free and creating God with the line of argument adopted in his published volumes. Progress predicated of God is an impossibility and on this point Professor Pattison is willing to make his appeal to the testimony of the religious consciousness. He calls the Absolute, which is the resultant of Bergson's theories, "a developing demi-god who would give the same account of his own development as the moral and religious man among ourselves".

One of the characteristics of these lectures is the frank readiness of their author to accept the religious man's account of his experience. We must go to him, Professor Pattison says, and not to the philosopher weaving theories about him if his experiences are to be properly understood. The ideals of the religious life have, he holds, an authentic basis in the nature of the world. They are more than devout imaginations and he fully accepts on this point the striking words of Mr. Bradley: "There is nothing more real than what comes in religion. To compare facts such as these with what comes to us in outward existence would be to trifle with the subject. The man who demands a reality more solid than that of the religious consciousness knows not what he seeks."

To a certain extent Professor Pattison sympathizes with the attitude of pluralism. He will have nothing to do with the Absolute of the Neo-Hegelian School and he preserves the freshness and initiative of individual life by insisting upon the need of discipline and experience by which man's soul is trained to take its part in the community of similar spiritual activities who in themselves reflect the character of the divine life. The theory here advocated suggests Leibnitz, but it is Leibnitz without his fancifulness. We have here presented a new Monadology founded upon a recognition of the achievements of modern science and, without the burden of the mathematical rationalistic limitations which render inadequate the speculation of the classical period of European thought. With Poincare and Boutroux the lecturer is in harmonious agreement as to the purely subjective zone of modern scientific discussion.

The Scofield Bible

THE HOLY BIBLE, containing the Old and New Testaments, authorized version, with a new system of connected topical references to all the greater themes of scripture, with annotations, revised marginal renderings, summaries, definitions, chronology and index, to which are added helps at hard places, explanations of seeming discrepancies and a new system of paragraphs. Edited by the Rev. C. I. Scofield, D.D. New York: Oxford University Press.

The Scofield Reference Bible, with such relatively slight changes and improvements as nine years' wide use has suggested, is once more before us in two sizes and in bindings so varied as to meet alike the need of the economical and the taste of the most fastidious, at prices ranging from $1.50 to $14. The ingenuity of typographical presentation by which the editor has brought within the range of 1,370 pages of convenient size and clear printing the text of the authorized version, with needful explanations, chronological information, special introductions and a general conspectus of the whole, is really remarkable. Praiseworthy, too, is the industry with which he has enabled the student by a novel arrangement of references to follow the development of the leading ideas of Hebrew religion and of many secondary ones through the stages of their development till a final form is given them in the Epistles of the New Testament. The user should, however, recognize at the outset that the position throughout is rigidly conservative, the idea of inspiration very mechanical, the zeal for discovery of Messianic prophecy somewhat morbidly acute. The determination to "explain discrepancies" at whatever cost must sometimes make the judicious grieve. The little note on St. Luke, iii. 23, where it is found "natural" that one should be divinely guided to write "son" and mean "son-in-law", is an instance many times paralleled. Those whom The Reader's Bible attracts, those whom no earnest scholarship offends, will find other ways of approach to Hebrew and Christian scriptures. Others, and they are probably the great majority among both Bible students and teachers, can find no one book more fitted to strengthen them in their assurance and reconcile them to their limitations than Dr. Scofield's.

Immortality

IMMORTALITY AND THE FUTURE. By H. R. McIntosh, D.Phil., D.D. New York: Geo. Doran Company. $1.50.

The Christian doctrine of eternal life is here discussed in the light of history and faith.

Ethnic ideas of death and the future, the eschatology of the Old Testament, of Jesus, of the Apostolic age and of the Church are examined widely, thoroughly and reverently.

A medieval legend tells of two monks who had debated regarding the future life, one contending that it must be taliter—or similar to earth; the other conceiving it to be aliter—otherwise than here below. They agreed finally that the first to die should, with God's permission, appear to the other announcing which was right. After the death of one the survivor was visited in a dream by his former fellow monk, who brought this message: "Nec taliter, nec aliter, sed totaliter aliter".

No one can read this book without feeling that Dr. McIntosh has let facts speak for themselves and has given us a complete introduction to eschatology at once Christian, true to history, true to faith, consistent with revelation and incidentally a book that is much greater than an argumentative dissertation; it is a winsome, wholesome reinforcement of faith.

OUR SELF AFTER DEATH. By the Rev. Arthur Chambers. Published by G. W. Jacobs & Company. $1.00.

The question the author propounds is, Can we in the light of Christ and His teaching know more on this subject than is commonly expressed in Christian belief? His own answer is a sort of creed elaborated throughout the book somewhat as follows: I believe that the Church of Christ has not hitherto realized all that lies disclosed in the New Testament concerning our self after death. Our self is not dependent for existence upon physical organization, and survives separation from it. After death our self is not a bodiless entity. Then the mental powers and qualities of our spiritually encased self are retained. In after life the self, bodily, mentally and spiritually, advances. R. P. K.

Church and Crowd

THE CHURCH AND THE CROWD. By Richard Wallace Hogue, D.D. Published by Fleming H. Revell Company. 60 cents.

Dr. Hogue, who is a clergyman of the Episcopal Church and a member of the Social Service Commission of the diocese, will find without doubt many a sympathetic reader of his interpretation of what is the right answer the Church must make to the challenge of the day. There will be others who will not understand his terms at all. Therein is a real difficulty, even within the borders of the Church herself. Just now it is in the air to ring the changes on the importunate question, "Has organized religion lost its leadership?" Visualized in the light of the world needs suddenly thrust upon the Church her mission would seem to be suffering from a condition of detachment. Dr. Hogue is impatient with the Church's manner and method of meeting the present crisis. He finds a note of finality in humanity's demand upon the Church, a demand which admits neither of delay nor hesitation, evasion nor compromise.

Students of like literature will find much familiar material in this little volume. Though the fact that it is cast in a fresh form and the old problems of the relation of the Church to society restated in the light of a world war will stimulate and redirect attention to the weighty questions still untouched and at her own doors.

JESUS: FOR THE MEN OF TODAY. WHEN SCIENCE AIDS RELIGION. By Prof. George Holley Gilbert, Ph.D., D.D. Geo. H. Doran Company. $1.00.

In literary style and fine imagination of the Palestinian background, in definite visualization of the personality of Jesus, through the distilled atmosphere of modern scientific thought, this narrative excels anything else that Dr. Gilbert has written whether in his Students Life of Christ or Christianity in the Apostolic Age.

The book is not a typical biography nor a theology nor a philosophy but a narrative that presents and interprets Jesus to the modern man. The author has the courage to let his story embody his theories of the Atonement, and of the Resurrection. There the story ends. The Ascension is excluded by the author's interpretation of the "resurrection" of the spirit of Jesus.

To many readers the literary excellence of the book will but aggravate the pathos of its doctrine. Others will see between the lines of this remarkably vivid narrative a modern scholar's earnest search for the reality in Jesus Christ.

On Character

THE MYSTERY OF CHARACTER. By Herbert Parrish. Published by Edwin S. Gorham. $1.00.

An apologetic for belief in the Divinity of Jesus in a wholesome, original treatment of the character of Christ, based on a study of the unusual assimilation of all types in Him. It is an argument for the Divinity of Christ through an examination of the miracle of His character. For those who have sensed the supreme importance of a new heart, a regeneration of the nations, before the War can be won, Mr. Parrish's studies of the differing types of character will be a contribution of worth. It is so fresh with the material of the passing hour it will have a homiletical value to many who are anxious to show the necessity of a democracy made safe by the soundness of character.

THE DYNAMIC OF MANHOOD. By Luther H. Gulick, M.D. Association Press. 50 cents.

A helpful, sane book to be read by the layman who desires the profound facts of living and thinking in an understandable form. It is an examination of the driving or major motives of mankind, well called "stomach hungers and heart hungers". The first class is composed of hungers which benefit self, the second, those that seek some benefit for others.

Two Books by Fosdick

THE CHALLENGE OF THE PRESENT CRISIS. By Harry Emerson Fosdick. New York: Association Press. 50 cents.

There are just two classes of pacifists in the United States—those who possess intelligence without honesty—the traitors; and those who possess honesty without intelligence—the dunderheads.

It is somewhat difficult to determine which is the most dangerous, because when the Lord makes an idiot who is a conscientious idiot, He has wrought a very masterpiece in the way of idiocy. There is nothing like it in the heavens above nor in the earth beneath nor in the waters under the earth. He is a dangerous species. However, our hearts naturally incline toward him, as one who should simply be pitied or perhaps despised; whereas the former should be shot. But the case of either, traitor or dunderhead, is well-nigh hopeless.

Nevertheless, if there is a glimmering possibility that a combination of honest and sense can be made to permeate the hide of either, then we recommend the careful reading of this book. Like everything which the author writes, it is a trenchant presentation of a righteous cause, which rings true on every page. G. T. D.

THE MEANING OF FAITH. By Harry Emerson Fosdick. New York: Association Press. $1.00.

This is a very different type of book, and is addressed to a different type of reader. It is safe to say that there are many thousands of honest, earnest, but grievously perplexed Christian hearts, who are asking themselves today, with deep groanings of spirit, "Where is God in this War? Is there anything we can still believe in?"

To all such, this little volume will be a genuine help. It reminds us that the very times when faith in God as represented in Jesus Christ and his religion was born were just such times as those in which we find ourselves now; when the best men in the world were being crucified for righteousness by the satanic powers of the earth when patriots and saints were "butchered to make a Roman holiday".

It shows how, if men trusted in God then we can trust in God now; and that if we do not, we are forsaking our securest refuge; we are losing our fairest vision and our only hope. G. T. D.

Men of God

MEN OF GOD. ADDRESSES AT CUDDESDON. By J. O. Johnston, D.D. Longmans, Green & Company. $1.25 net.

These are intimate talks to students who are thinking of ordination, by the Chancellor of the Lincoln Cathedral. The title is suggested by the object of the special spiritual and devotional training which aims to make the clergy "men of God". Only such men can be wholly committed the great trust of the ministerial profession. The author voices what is not only a hope in England but a growing desire here in America, that once the War is over there will be a large number of men seeking ordination, men "with well-tested character and with a most unusually good experience of life behind them". This characterization of Henry VIII will ve one an intimation of the flavor of the ok: "He sent for Cranmer; but by the ne Cranmer came the King was speech- ss. Would he give some sign of his trust Christ? With his hand in Cranmer's, the eat King passed away, for surely great he as—great in character and power, great selfishness and crime, a great and terrible ing if ever there was one. 'Whom he ould he slew, and whom he would he kept ive.' His statesmanship was far from holly selfish, and it was clear-sighted ough to guide his country through the eatest of the revolutions it had seen since e Norman Conquest. If greatness be easured by far-seeing and enduring work, enry VIII is without question the greatest the kings that have reigned since Norman illiam."

Philosophy and Social Science

PHILOSOPHY AND THE SOCIAL PROBLEM. By Will Durant, Ph.D. The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

The purpose of this essay is to show "that the social problem has been the basic concern of many of the greater philosophies" and "that an approach to the social problem through philosophy is the first condition of even a moderately successful treatment of the problem" and further the converse "that an approach to philosophy through the social problem is indispensable to the realization of philosophy".

The author admits the weakness of his method, which is "neither history nor criticism", but in his nine vigorous well-argued chapters he carries his reader so successfully through the Socratic ethic, Plato's philosophy, Bacon's science, by Hobbs, Spinoza and Nietzsche, with glances here and there at Utopias and Supermen, with a nod at Eugenics and Individualism that when he lets you down at the end of the book you are convinced that philosophy and the social problem have received a mutual elucidation.

Shakespeare and Liberty

SHAKESPEARE AND THE FOUNDERS OF LIBERTY IN AMERICA. By Charles Mills Gayley, Litt.D., LL.D. The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

The purpose of this little book is to show the close and personal acquaintance that Shakespeare must have had with more than one of the English statesmen who, as members of the Virginia Company, wrested from James I the colonial charters by which English liberty was first planted in Virginia and New England. The author calls attention to the many close resemblances, both in word and thought, between the ideas of political liberty as held by the Earl of Southampton, Sir Edwin Sandys, and other leading spirits of the Virginia Company, and Shakespeare's conception of the relation of the individual to the state as gathered from his plays. Verbal coincidences are so frequent and so accurate as to make it practically impossible that the poet could have so worded his thought had he not possessed definite information either from the records or from the very lips of that inner group of governors and stockholders of the Virginia Company. The fundamental political ideas of both poet and statesmen are traced to their origin in the Ecclesiastical Polity of Richard Hooker.

Dr. Gayley's thesis is an interesting one and has been developed by him with great care and thoroughness. Anything from his pen is well worth the reading and this book is no exception to the rule.

A Browning Lover

THE CONFESSIONS OF A BROWNING LOVER. By John Walter Powell. The Abingdon Press. $1.00.

Another book on Browning might seem unnecessary were it not for the fact that Mr. Powell views his subject from an angle that has been somewhat neglected by other interpreters. The author emphasizes the idea that Browning was first of all an artist and only secondarily a philosopher. He believes that it is primarily for his art, not for his philosophy, that his poetry is read today. Mr. Powell argues his case with feeling and conviction. It was undoubtedly the artist in Robert Browning that made him see life as it really was. But, having seen, the artist immediately turns philosopher and builds up his theory of life. To separate the one from the other is to make either the art useless or the philosophy untrue. Indeed, notwithstanding his thesis, Mr. Powell's chapter headings deal rather more with philosophy than with art. The book ends with a wonderfully inspiring chapter on Browning's conception of the future life. D. N. A.

On Finance

OUR MONEY AND THE STATE. By Hartley Withers. By E. P. Dutton & Company. $1.25.

For many years Mr. Withers was financial editor of the London Times and his books, International Finance, War and Lombard Street, Stocks and Shares, and Money Changing, have given him a recognized place as an authority on public finance, the problems of which are essentially the same the world over. Mr. Withers is of the opinion that if the War ends in a league of peace, as President Wilson has foreshadowed, the outlook on questions of taxation may henceforth have a new point of view and be directed to the furtherance of brotherhood.

The objects and limitations of governmental money borrowing, taxation and spending and their related problems are ably and very clearly discussed, not as abstract finance, but as a vital part of a humanitarian civilization.

INCOME TAX. By Godfrey N. Nelson. The Macmillan Company. $2.50.

In view of the intricacies of the Income Tax law and the costly penalty of misunderstanding it, this book is a most practical guide for business men and women. It should prove indispensable to accountants and lawyers. In admirably clear presentation the author defines the act; recites the very latest decisions of the Treasury Department; defines and illustrates profits and income, expenses and losses; explains in detail the operation and application of the income, War income and excess profits taxes; treats of the relationship of book values and actual values of assets for purposes of invested capital; suggests rates of depreciation for various classes of business; prescribes remedial measures for excessive depreciation charged off in former years; and outlines methods of bookkeeping for corporations whereby preparation of returns is simplified.

On Evolution

THE THEORY OF EVOLUTION. By William Berryman Scott. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.00.

This volume contains Prof. Scott's lectures on the Richard Westbrook Foundation of the Wagner Free Institute of Science, Philadelphia. Dr. Scott, who is professor of geology and paleontology at Princeton, states that his choice of the theory of evolution for these lectures was due to the fact that there was an impression abroad that the theory had lost caste among scientists, and further, that the evidence for the theory was but little understood by the ordinary layman. The lectures are addressed to this latter class and are as untechnical as possible.

A Great Headmaster

THE MASTER OF THE HILL. A BIOGRAPHY OF JOHN MEIGS. By Walter Russell Bowie. Dodd, Mead & Company. $3.00.

John Meigs was the master of the Hill School at Pottstown, Pennsylvania. For forty years the institution remained under his kind and energetic leadership. He raised it from an obscure venture to an acknowledged place among the great preparatory schools of America.

The biography has been prepared by the Rev. Walter Russell Bowie, D.D., rector of St. Paul's church, Richmond, Virginia, primarily for those who have been students at the Hill School. But the beauty and earnestness of such a life as John Meigs' makes its appeal to a far larger group than the alumni of the Hill School. Everyone who admires courage, persistence, kindness and Christian manliness will find in the life of John Meigs an inspiration and an example.

Especially to the teachers of boys does he hold up a high ideal, an ideal difficult of attainment yet essential to success. His business was to create out of the raw material of boyhood poured into preparatory schools, often from thoughtless and indifferent homes, not only a youth who could pass a college entrance examination but a Christian gentleman as well. That he was so successful in his results is an acknowledged tribute to his methods and his personality. Deeply religious by nature, he found in Jesus Christ both guidance and help. He broke through his normal reticence to tell the school, both masters and boys, the joy he found in Jesus. This one insistent note rings out in talk and letter, in private conference and public address. It explains his strength.

Life offers no nobler work than that of the teacher of boys. It brings no return in place or money, but it yields the glorious satisfaction which is the unfailing possession of those who lead many to righteousness. For the real duty of the schoolmaster is not only to teach the brain but to guide the soul. This duty John Meigs fulfilled.

John Quincy Adams

THE WRITINGS OF JOHN QUINCY ADAMS. Edited by Worthington C. Ford. Vol. VII, 1820-1823. New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $3.50.

Volume VII of this remarkable collection of the writings of one who perhaps was our very greatest Secretary of State is of unusual value and interest. This statement remains true even when considered in the light of the great importance of the contents of the volumes that already have preceded it. Mr. Ford has collected in this volume the papers of John Quincy Adams which were written during the latter half of the period of his services to the country as Secretary of State, and they cover a large part of the correspondence in which he gradually developed the ideas that led to the formulation of the final statement of the Monroe doctrine toward the close of the year 1823.

Interesting sidelights are thrown upon the methods of government during those early days, and upon the daily life of the people in Washington, and much material of direct value to an understanding of that period of American history is also included. Perhaps the most important document in the whole volume is the very first one printed in this book which gives the reply of Adams, Crawford, Calhoun and Wirt, of Monroe's cabinet, to that President's query as to their opinion upon the constitutional right of Congress to make a regulation prohibiting slavery in a territory. The answer was a most emphatic affirmative, which shows that some people changed their minds during later years to such an extent that if inconsistency is a measure of greatness, Calhoun et al. were perhaps the greatest Americans of the nineteenth century! I do not refer to the twentieth.

Mr. Ford is performing a great service to the students and readers of American history by this series of publications and each new volume of his scholarly compilation reaches the high standard set by the first of them, which appeared in the year 1913.

English Biography

ENGLISH BIOGRAPHY. By Waldo H. Dunn, M.A., Litt.D., Professor of English Language and Literature in the College of Wooster. London, Paris and Toronto: J. M. Dent & Sons. New York: E. P. Dutton & Company. $1.50.

Readers of Mrs. Anna Robeson Burr's The Autobiography will welcome the present volume, which supplements that valuable work. According to Professor Dunn, "the ideal biography would exhibit the external life of the subject, give a vivid picture of his character, and unfold the growth of his mind". Judging by this standard, he traces the development of English biography through the ages, from Adamnan's Life of St. Columba to V. G. Allen's Life of Phillips Brooks. Only within recent years has biography come to be considered a distinct form of literature, with ideals and methods of its own. We are now asked to regard a biography as a work of art and biography in general as a type of literature of the highest human significance and value, whose genesis and development can be traced through twenty centuries.

Two Americans

PAUL JONES, HIS EXPLOITS IN ENGLISH SEAS. Bibliography. By Don C. Seitz. New York: E. P. Dutton & Company. $3.50.

To lovers of Paul Jones and of American history this biography will be most welcome, especially just now when America is again taking her place upon the seas and there is a reawakening of pride in her exploits in our native element. It is not until we take up this volume that we realize the place which the exploits of this daring rover occupied in the daily papers of his time. It is all fascinating reading; while the bibliographical part of the volume offers to scholars as complete a survey of the historical field as can be given. The book is an important contribution.

THE LIFE OF AUGUSTINE DALY. By Joseph Francis Daly. New York: The Macmillan Company. $4.00.

This work will be of value to those who are directly concerned with the annals of the stage. We question, however, whether its popular appeal will be what might have been expected. It reads too much like a diary. It is more a record of personal happenings, lists of engagements, dinners, etc., than of biographical events of general interest.

However, the record is a commendable one. It reveals a man of high ideals, indefatigable in the pursuit of his business, and altogether trustworthy. It will be highly valued by his personal friends and admirers of whom there are a great multitude.

Lord Redesdale

FURTHER MEMORIES OF LORD REDESDALE. New York. By E. P. Dutton & Company. $3.50.

Those whose expectations in opening the new volume from Lord Redesdale were based on the first publication of memoirs may feel some disappointment in opening the new volume. Not that the essays are not all charming and redolent of the many sided culture of this finished citizen of the world; all that he says of Japanese gardening, the religion of Buddha, pen portraits from the Commune, and Russia of the sixties, is interesting and has the Redesdale touch of charm. But the volume seems disjointed even to those who have nimblened of wit to follow the facile mind of the author. The chapters on the Commune and those on Russia are perhaps the most interesting, though some of us may feel that the author is a bit casual as regards the claims of Russian literature.

The Gospel of Osiris

THE GOSPEL OF OSIRIS. A LAY OF THE LADY ISIS. By William Norman Guthrie. New York: Brentano's. $1.50.

Here is the noble imagination and the romance of the religious and philosophic spirit of the ages, sung in a courageous lay of the Lady Isis, avatar of the Divine womanhood, being an epic cento and paraphrase of ancient fragments depicting in blank verse, the great priestess, prophetess, typical woman of the mystic Egyptian lore whose personality, as it were, is the forerunner of the Christian ideal of womanhood, all beautifully printed on cream paper and bound in the best Brentano style and carrying the imprimatur of serious scientific scholars of Egyptology who have imagination enough to see the charming literary possibilities of Dr. Guthrie's spiritual interpretation of the age-renowned Gospel of Osiris now dedicated to the memory of Francis Wright D'Arusmont (Fanny Wright), who gave her able services and fortune to liberty and progress and, by her expression of the eternal ways of true womanhood, did much to make the modern woman a person possessed of the glorious virtues of the days of old and the high accomplishments of the days that are new.

A Russian Anthology

A RUSSIAN ANTHOLOGY IN ENGLISH. Edited by C. E. Bechhofer. New York: E. P. Dutton & Company. $1.50.

Lovers of Russian literature will welcome this admirable Anthology in English, giving access, as it will to many, to Russian authors with whom they may not be familiar. The volume contains selections admirably made from Russian prose, Russian verse and Russian drama. In the volume Volynsky alone is new to English readers. We turn, upon opening the book, naturally to the characteristic passage selected from Dostoievsky. We find gratefully that the editor gives us the scene where the idiot finds Nastasia. This gives us confidence and we trust the editor to guide us into the heart of other authors with whom we may not be so familiar.

C. A. I. L. DISCUSSES LABOR BILLS BEFORE LEGISLATURE

Protests Against Bill Depriving Bureau of Statistics of Initiation

NEW YORK CITY.—At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor at the Synod House, the Rt. Rev. Charles S. Burch, D.D., presiding, the subject matter of several bills of interest to labor, now before the Legislature, was discussed at length, after which it was unanimously voted to endorse certain of these measures.

The Walker Bill, No. 389 Int. 362, in the Senate aims to give classified civil service employes the right of mandamus. At present no civil service employe has the legal right to be heard. This measure was endorsed, and C. A. I. L. will work for its passage.

The Bewley Bill in the Assembly, No. 792 Int. 717, "To amend the labor law in relation to mercantile and other establishments"—it was voted to recommend several amendments. This was done and the committee in the Assembly on Labor and Industries was notified.

It was voted to protest against the passage of the Bewley Assembly Bill No. 795 Int. 720. This bill makes inoperative the provisions of Sections 63 and 64 of the Labor Law, or, as the Central Federated Union of New York City aptly points out, "it takes Labor out of the Labor Law".

Under this Bewley Bill the Bureau of Statistics and Information, whose powers and duties are clearly defined in the present act, will be deprived of authority to make investigations or perform research work relating to the economic and social conditions of labor. Neither can it undertake, with the least degree of success, investigations for the purpose of promoting the health, safety and well-being of persons employed at labor. The Speaker of the Assembly, President of the Senate, as well as the Committee on Labor and Industries was notified of C. A. I. L.'s protest.

C. A. I. L. is in thorough sympathy with the Lockwood Bill 1144 Int. 937. This bill which is now before the Senate Finance Committee seeks "to provide increased compensation to civilian employes of the State of New York during the existing war for civilization". C. A. I. L. believes with Senator Lockwood that the smaller salaried State employes should have their compensation raised at this time to meet the high cost of living, at least until the close of this awful War in Europe. According to data published by the Federal Government, the dollar of 1918 will buy approximately only 39 cents' worth of goods that could have been bought by the dollar of 1898, and that in the last three years the retail prices of foodstuffs have advanced 52 per cent.

C. A. I. L. through its members throughout the State is using its influence to promote this measure.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine —double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

COTTAGE MEETINGS HELP

Brooklyn Parish Meets Coal Shortage by This Method

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—The Lenten Season at the Church of the Redeemer began amid many discouragements. The coal shortage made daily services impossible and the Sunday night worship was curtailed. But the congregation rose to the occasion and triumphed over every obstacle.

Every night the rector gathered a group at the home of some member for a study of the life of Christ. A spirit of fellowship developed. Some who came timidly at first got the "cottage meeting habit". The attendance in every instance was large. Distance proved no obstacle. Undaunted parishioners have come in taxis, though once the rector, the Rev. T. J. Lacey, got lost in the wilds en route and the meeting was delayed in consequence.

The Bishop of Washington to His Clergy

TO the Clergy: I am impelled by the urgency of our need of Divine guidance and power in these critical days to ask you to add to such words as you may have in mind to speak to your people my earnest hope, as their Bishop, that they will spend these days of Holy Week in penitence and prayer and in withdrawal from the world for this Season that they may be thus alone with Him.

I especially urge upon them diligence in family prayer, as well as daily attendance upon Divine worship; well knowing that you, my brethren, will give them every opportunity practical for enjoying this privilege, and that now as always you will lead them. It would be well if the opportunity for Holy Communion with Intercessions were made frequent during the continuance of this Western Drive.

Faithfully yours,

ALFRED HARDING,
Bishop of Washington.

Mission Study Courses Announced

NEW YORK CITY.—The educatioal secretary of the General Board of Missions announces that the subject for Mission Study during the coming year is The Church's Mission in the United States. There will be only two textbooks published in connection with this course. The senior book, entitled Winning God's Country, is by the Bishop of South Dakota; the junior book is being prepared by Miss Dorothy Giles, and will be published under the title of His Star in the West.

Contrary to the custom followed in past years, only these two textbooks will be published, but the Suggestions for Leaders of Classes will be thoroughly and carefully graded. These Suggestions are now being prepared by expert teachers, all of whom are preparing to lead normal classes in the use of the textbooks at Summer Conferences this year.

It is expected that the textbooks will be published and ready for distribution the middle of June. The series of Suggestions, however, will not be issued in the final form until later, in order that they may be thoroughly tried out at the Summer Conferences, and the writers there have the advantage of practical experience in putting the Suggestions into final shape.

Death of Rev. J. Leighton McKim

MILFORD, DELAWARE.—The Rev. John Leighton McKim died at his residence in Milford on March 20 at the age of [illegible]. He was the son of the Rev. John Linn McKim, who was at the time of his death in 1910 the senior clergyman in the Episcopal church, having been ordained under Bishop White in 1835.

The Rev. J. Leighton McKim was ordained deacon by Bishop Lee of Delaware in 1859, priest by Bishop Odenheimer of New Jersey in 1860. He was successively assistant at the House of Prayer, Newark, under Dr. Shakleford, rector of St. Timothy's, Roxborough, Pennsylvania, rector of Christ church, Milford, Delaware, for forty-two years, rector of St. Mark's Hall, Burlington, New Jersey, from 1887 to 1887, rector of St. Paul's, Georgetown, Delaware, and for many years in charge of St. Stephen's chapel, Harrington, Delaware. He was for seven years member of the Standing Committee of the diocese of Delaware and represented Delaware in nine general conventions.

The funeral services were held in Christ church, Milford, on March 22 with burial in the church-yard at St. Peter's, Lewes.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning"

NEW YORK CITY.—On the day following the death, as a result of an air raid on London, of Mrs. Lena Guilbert Ford, the author of Keep the Home Fires Burning, four hundred army nurses, assembled for a patriotic service in Old St. Paul's chapel, joined in singing this ballad as a memorial of the author, and the Rev. Wm. Montague Geer, S.T.D., the vicar, read the prayers

IDDLE WEST GIVES WARM WELCOME TO ARCHBISHOP

. Montgomery reading the Lessons. ishop Rhinelander read the Litany and d the concluding Collects. The Revs. R. L. Nisbett, A. H. Hord and W. H. rk were also in the chancel.

Bishop Rhinelander in a short and adrable address introduced the Archbishop. e latter took for his text "Behold Thy ng Cometh Unto Thee", from the First sson. Speaking without manuscript he oke with a remarkably sweet voice and the choicest diction. He referred symthetically to the memories of the old urch and to the Revolutionary history the Colonies. It was affecting when referred to the great battle now raging r the safety of the world, and said that would rather be alone and in prayer an in a crowd, for the men who were ar and dear to him were in that battle.

He spoke simply and plainly on the ritual lessons of the War, without at all eaching a war sermon, and urged upon his arers to bear in mind that the King was ays coming. The man himself with his ave, gentle message, in the awful circumnces of the hour, made an impression hich none can ever forget.

A very large collection was taken up for e benefit of the British and the American d Cross. The church was most handmely decorated with flags and banners, cluding the banners of the arms of the ocese and of the Archbishop.

On Monday morning, the 25th, the Archishop spoke to the clergy of the dioceses Bethlehem, New Jersey, and Pennsylnia at St. James' church in Philadelphia. shop Talbot was in the chancel with the shops of Pennsylvania at the Communion rvice. The Archbishop was the celebrant, shop Garland read the epistle, Bishop inelander the Gospel. Some thirty of the ergy in their vestments served as the oir. The rest of the clergy, about 300 all, filled the body of the church.

His Grace seated in the episcopal chair as introduced by the Bishop of the diocese, ho welcomed the chance to commit the ergy to the care and the direction of the stinguished guest. Rising and standing address the clergy, the Archbishop said:

"The ordeal through which the world is lled to go is like the overthrow of Rome, the time of the Renaissance or the Reformation, or the French Revolution. If is is a trying ordeal for the State, it is ore so for the Church. Our ministry is eant to mean more at this time than ever fore. Has the Church yet faced this ing, the meaning of this time? This is Day of the Lord, a judgment of the old vilization, the opening of a new civilizaon.

"If this is so—the Christ must have great ncern about it—and we are now His ewards. His messengers and watchmen. cannot put the responsibility that rests on us into words. The mission of the hurch in this tremendous time is a proetic one. We must see what this all eans in God's sight. We must hear and ter God's voice to the people. Patriotism not enough for priests. The only reason at young clergy are exempted from milry service is in the higher importance of their spiritual work—if the State sees this, so must the Church. We dare not be content to play the echo to patriotic note of the day—but we must see and set forth the message of God."

Speaking of the difficulty of getting the clergy in England to see that they must be more than patriotic, he continued: "Here it will be still harder—for you are more remote. But you here have the help in the almost prophetic words of your President. I wish the clergy here might reach the height of high, clear and noble sense of God's issues in the world situation that Mr. Wilson has set forth. I wish that England might have had her aims set forth in that same way so well. I have read the speeches of some of your clergy, and I am sorry to say that they seem a bit too much like a mere waving of the flag and a beating of the drum. They seem not to have listened to God's voice nor to have told it to their people. We were so for a while; then there came a shame at being only echos of patriotism."

His Grace then described the organization of the national Mission of Repentance and of Hope, and urged the clergy here to try some such scheme. He urged the need of prayer.

"Simple people losing sons and fathers will want a new philosophy of God and we will have to teach them. God is more a word than a reality with most men. We must teach them in prayer a new and greater sense of God's sovereignty. We must get them to see in the oft quoted words of your Lincoln—that it is most important that we be 'on God's side' in this war.

"Prayer first—and then penitence, though it will make the clergy very unpopular as it did at home. The people will claim that the cause is good, our motives high—why then penitence? Is there not for you, in your ideal of making Democracy safe for the world, a real danger of the spirit of the Pharisee? of thanking God that you are not as other nations? If you preach smooth things you will win applause, but you will win God's approval only by setting forth the true things. This is a very day of Judgment.

"People are hungering for news of the unseen world. 'How does it go with my boy, with my husband over there?' There is no real answer in the hymns, yet that is about the only place that this Church of ours has tried to set forth a teaching of the other side. Multitudes have gone to spiritualism to find a link that will bind them with those who have gone. We must think out these things for those who want more reality than we have in any official teaching.

"Then too we must have a new vision of the meaning of Christ in human life. Men in the War are now sure of two things:

"1. Jesus is the most potent Person in the world—but—2. He is not found in the Church of His Name. The first is our opportunity, the other our judgment.

"Why have we lost from the Church the potent sense of the presence of the Christ? Is it in part due to our neglecting His real presence in a call of humanity? He is not only, not primarily, in the Temple of His Sacraments, Creeds and Rites—but in the heart of the great stirring, striving and moving mass of humanity. We would prize, and others would value more highly, His covenanted Presence in the Church if we saw Him more in humanity and its hopes and aims."

Prays for Those in Battle

HARRISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Archbishop of York and his chaplain arrived in Harrisburg at 1.30 on the 23rd. He was met at the station by a committee headed by the Governor of Pennsylvania, the Bishop of Harrisburg and State Librarian Montgomery. The chimes of Zion Lutheran church greeted the party as they emerged from the station and drove to the Bishop house.

In the Bishop's Chapel of the Holy Spirit the Archbishop prayed earnestly for the soldiers giving their lives at the front. He then ascended to the Great Hall, where he addressed the crowd of citizens and soldiers. The party then went to the Capitol where the British flag was waving for the first time in the history of Pennsylvania. In the House of Representatives, reputed to be the only legislative chamber which rivals the House of Lords in splendor, the Governor, the Mayor, Rabbi Haas, the Rev. Dr. Mudge of the Presbyterian church, and Mr. A. S. Patterson of the Chamber of Commerce voiced their welcome. The Archbishop then delivered a masterly tribute to America's place in history and her opportunity this critical hour of peril, closing with prayer for the boys at that very moment falling in the greatest battle in human history.

RELIGION IN THE HOME

Dr. Van Allen Lectures to Parent Guild of St. James' Church

NEW YORK CITY.—The family is older than the Church or the State. Both exist for the sake of the family, said Dr. Van Allen to the Parents' Guild of St. James' church, New York. The meeting was held at the home of Mr. Stephen Baker on the evening of March 22.

It is difficult to convey the charm and originality of Dr. Van Allen's lecture without giving his inimitable phrasing. He pictured the family religion that has passed away, and as it still exists in some old English homes where the father of the family is priest within his own household. Without family religious life there can be no real family life. The lecturer deplored "mixed marriages", where Christian women married men who were not Christian. Such a marriage is not a real marriage. Institutional churches should make provision whereby girls and boys could meet together under the roof of the church buildings, encouraging thereby the marriage of church boys with church girls. The whole family should go to one service on Sunday as a family and as a matter of course. He would almost be willing to restore the family pew if thereby he could bring back the family idea of worship in church.

Family prayers, including servants, grace before and after meals helped to make the home a religious home. With fine humor the lecturer described the modern Boston family where each member chose his own religion and separated on Sunday morning, one following a Hindoo cult, another was "in Science", another an Episcopalian.

Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, Noted Author and Divine, listening to his Ampico in his home at Edgecliff Terrace, Yonkers, New York. (From a photograph.)

A Letter from Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady

"What It Means to Me"

"You come home from a day's work thoroughly tired out. You find the evening papers flat, stale and unprofitable; the war news adds to your depression. What can relieve it so well as a little music? The great Godowsky is playing to-night at Carnegie Hall, or the fiery and passionate Volavy is to be heard in recital at a nearby theatre; and there are other exponents of the great art available. But you feel strangely disinclined to don your evening clothes and adventure forth in cold or rain. Pipe and slippers, easy chair and fire, win the day, or the night, rather.

"And then you reflect that you are not going to lose anything after all. For while you take your ease in your house Mr. Godowsky and Miss Volavy and all the rest play for you exclusively, and for you alone, unless you share the pleasure with a friend or neighbor. Your wonderful Knabe-Ampico in an adjoining room brings all these artists into your own home, to play for you whatever you want, as often as you want, and in their best manner; for when they make these wonderful records for that wonderful instrument, they make them at their best, and have opportunities for the correction of mistakes which they do not enjoy in concert.

"It is a pleasure beyond belief unless one has experienced it. The sheer joy in good music takes possession of you. With each repetition you discover new beauties, and with each purchase of new records you go higher. As you listen your pipe goes out—truest test of absorption—and you forget your surroundings and are transported to the elysian fields of romance and harmonies divine.

"And then, one day, you read that some favorite artiste like Teresa Carreno is dead. Her hands will witch no more noble music from the keys. But she being dead, yet plays on. The frail records give her immortality. You need not long for the magic touch of vanished hands. It is there. You have it, at your command. For the Ampico, which gives permanence to the evanescent, which embodies the immaterial, is an immortal instrument. Favorite of the gods is he who can manage to possess one by whatsoever sacrifice.

"At least that's the way I feel about it."

Cyrus Townsend Brady

The wonderful pleasure the Ampico has brought into Dr. Brady's home you may have in your own home. Come hear the Ampico. We would be glad to have you hear an informal concert of the playing of great artists.

OF recent years various expeditions, American and foreign, have been at work in Bible lands, unearthing all sorts of astonishing facts regarding the life of the early Christians. The result of their labors is now reported in an intensely interesting volume,

AN EASTER MESSAGE

(Written by the Very Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins, D. D., for the Women's Bible Class, Auburn, New York.)

"Very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun."—Mark 16:2.

It was loyalty which brought these women to the sepulchre. It was not confidence or hope. They brought with them spices to complete the burial, not palms to strew before their risen Lord. But when they reached the sepulchre, a radiant revelation was awaiting them. They in their weakness had been loyal, but the God of grace and glory had been faithful in His strength.

It is over this path of personal allegiance that we must make our way to the Holy Sepulchre. Our pilgrimage, too, must follow the path of loyalty. It must lead us to contemplate the sinlessness of Jesus, the only sinless life the world has known. It must lead us to the foot of the cross on the great day of his Atonement, and show us the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. And then, when we have gazed and gazed, until our minds are captivated by His goodness, and our hearts have gone out to Him in adoration, then and not till then the path of loyalty brings us to the sepulchre of the Saviour. And behold! we are not surprised to find it empty. For out of our recognition of the character of Jesus, out of our allegiance to Him, out of our loyalty, we gain the grace to recognize God's loyalty, and to believe that He has raised from the dead His well-beloved Son.

For Country

A VERY IMPRESSIVE service was held in St. Paul's church, Richmond, recently for the men of Base Hospital No. 45, known as the Medical College of Virginia Base Hospital Unit, who left the following day for Camp Lee, Virginia. The Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D.D., rector of the church, who is chaplain of the unit, preached an inspiring sermon on "Strength". Dr. Bowie was assisted in the service by Rabbi E. N. Calisch of Beth Ahabah Synagogue, and several militant hymns were sung enthusiastically by the unusually large congregation present.

MANY FALSE REPORTS have been circulated concerning the chaplaincy. Conditions have changed in such a way as to make false the statements that some time ago may have carried truth. How often one hears that the chaplain really does not have a chance—but new conditions have come and General Pershing's cablegram is representative of the present spirit in the Army. The equipment that previously has not been supplied is now available, both for use en route on the ship and for use with the troops in France. The backing that regular Army chaplains have felt the need of is now given to all chaplains through their denominations, the Chaplain Committee and the Federal Council. Hitherto men entering the chaplain service have not received training, but now a school has been established that will adequately meet this need.

BISHOP MCCORMICK, sent by the War Commission to France, has received a commission as major, and has been placed in charge of all Red Cross chaplains under General Pershing.

ON A RECENT Sunday All Saints' church, Providence, Rhode Island, entertained forty Naval Reserves from Newport. On arrival at the church at noon they were taken home by members of the parish for a hospitable afternoon. A special service for them was held in the parish house in the early evening, when the rector, the Rev. Arthur M. Aucock, D.D., made a patriotic address.

A MEMORIAL SERVICE was held recently at St. Mary's church, East Providence, Rhode Island, for Mr. Donald E. Cameron, a cadet aviator of the American Expeditionary Forces, who was killed in France in an aeroplane accident. President Edwards, of the Rhode Island State College, where the deceased was a Junior when he enlisted, made a memorial address, and the Rev. W. H. Jordan, locum tenens of the church, spoke in behalf of the parish. Fifty cadets in uniform were present from the State College.

A HANDSOME SERVICE Flag, the gift to Kenyon College of Mr. James H. Dempsey, '82, of Cleveland, was hung before Palm Sunday in the college chapel. The flag is nine by sixteen feet in size and carries on the white field in circular arrangement 221 blue stars, while three memorial gold stars are placed on the red border. After the return from France of President Peirce formal presentation of the flag will take place.

The Peking Language School

A missionary's first year in China is almost invariably spent in constantly studying a baffling language. Its delicate shadings and sounds and complicated inflections put a heavy strain upon the ear and upon one's vocal cords. The written language is really a picture language since there is no alphabet and every character stands for an idea. This makes it largely a matter of memory.

One of the recruits in the Hankow Mission who went to the Hankow District last Summer and is now studying in Peking, writes:

"The methods used in these language schools are wonderful. Even my dull brains can grasp a few Chinese sentences already.

"Our language study begins at 8:45 a. m. and lasts until 3:30 p. m. with an hour for noon recess. We alternate from class to private teacher all day. The first period we are given the new words for the day, during which time our teachers sit in the back of the room busily taking notes. Then we disperse either into small class groups or into our private studies, where this new work is repeated until we understand it and are able to construct sentences on it.

"Not a word of English is used, so if we once understand the meaning of the word in one use, it is tried in another, and sometimes we may spend two days trying to get one word. We are not permitted to take notes nor to consult with others in class about the words, and the first three months we were not permitted to use a text-book of any kind nor to know any characters. The object is to get us to speak as early as possible and it is wonderful how soon we do speak.

"We also have a splendid course in phonetics during the first term, which helps us in learning how to get correct Chinese sounds. I am glad I did not spend any time in studying this subject last year, because this one has given me more help than any I could possibly have had in New York. We have the Chinese with us to test conclusions drawn, which we would not have found in America."

Our Contributors

THE uncertainty of the mails made it impossible for us to receive our Easter message from Mr. Campbell. However, two or three articles are now safely pigeonholed in the editorial desk, giving us a sense of security for some weeks ahead.

Louise M. Haynes is a New England contributor.

The Rev. John Howard Melish, the rector of Holy Trinity church, Brooklyn, has been foremost among those who have awakened the social conscience of the Church in this country. The establishment of the Social Service Commission is in large measure due to his vision and energy.

Florence Converse is now a member of the staff of the Atlantic Monthly, but for a number of years she was with THE CHURCHMAN. We are very happy to introduce her beautiful Pentecostal romance, The Knight of the Labyrinth, which will run from Eastertide until Whitsunday. Its mystical beauty and deep meaning should bring comfort and reassurance to many of our readers.

The Rev. John F. Scott is the rector of St. John's church, Providence, Rhode Island.

The Rev. Arthur R. Gray, D.D., secretary for Latin America of the Board of Missions, gave us a most interesting article last January on the Dominican Republic, where the Board of Missions has been able to send a missionary to care for the many communicants of the Church of England resident there. A crush of material which had to be published at once has kept the companion to that article, Haiti and the Negro Problem, waiting for many weeks. But those of our readers who have read of the fine beginning made by the Rev. Mr. Llwyd who went to Haiti about the same time Mr. Wyllie went to Santo Domingo, i. e., in the early part of this year, will read with deep interest Dr. Gray's discussion of the problems and opportunities awaiting us in the "Black Republic".

Eugenie Du Maurier is a Baltimore contributor.

George Herbert Randall is the Executive Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and Editor of the St. Andrew's Cross. "I have been urged by good friends," writes Mr. Randall, "to put my hand to paper on a subject that is very near to my heart and which I have not seen touched upon recently in any Church papers, namely, the responsibility of a father for providing his son with the right sort of Christian home". An abridged article on the same subject appeared in the St. Andrew's Cross for March.

The Rev. Robert P. Kreitler, who reviews the recent literature of Religious Education on the book page of this issue of THE CHURCHMAN, is the rector of St. Luke's church, Scranton, Pennsylvania, and one of the leaders in religious education in the diocese. He is a member of the Council of the G. B. R. E. Many of our readers know him through his initials appended frequently to book reviews in our columns.

Our Easter

A SOLEMN but glorious Easter! The gloom and anxious waiting of Holy Week had given way to hope as brighter news came from the armies at the front. Not for a moment could our worshipers forget while singing their triumphant hymns the scenes of horror and desolation in lands across the water, but by our faith Calvary and the Resurrection blended into victory. We saw them as one experience.

It has been given to men and women of our generation to see the Atonement and the Resurrection released from the close air of theology into the clear, palpitating light of our common experience. He is indeed a perverse teacher of religion who need repeat by rote this year the worn phrases of theology. The humblest intellect could see in the lurid light of what is going on in the world today why Christ died for us and how the Son of Man is eternally crucified for man's redemption. The man least trained in theology can understand that by the power of love giving itself for the world humanity rises from death to life.

There is reason to believe that the Atonement will never again be made one of the hard sayings of Christianity. The little child can understand it. Theology without the help of the theologian has put itself into simple phrasing through the cataclysm of this War. The theologian and priest may see mystery and occult facts in the Atonement and the Resurrection which the plain man does not feel. But the most untutored can feel and see today all that is vital and needful for him to know to worship with understanding gratitude at the foot of the Cross and at the tomb of the Christ.

So it was on this Good Friday and Easter Day! We saw the Cross standing within the battle lines. We saw the Son of Man outstretched upon that Cross. We knew why He died for us and understood how love alone can save the world. That conviction mellowed our faith. It humbled us to the dust. We acknowledged our share in the Crucifixion. We knew how little was the measure of love which we had put into the life we dared to call by the name of the Master. And yet we knew that Christ had won in spite of us. The stratagem of general staffs and cannon belching forth death are not equal to the conquering power of love. All the while men are killing one another with weapons of hate, Christ is piercing the hearts of men with the shafts of kindness. Easter scattered our doubts. By faith we trusted the promise that love will build new worlds upon the ruins of our selfish plans.

The Resolution

EASTER meant to the serious minded something utterly new this year. If there were not a burning resolution deep in the heart of Christendom on Easter morning, we should say that this world-wide crucifixion of man had been almost in vain. He is indeed a hard man who did not resolve as he went to his Easter Communion that these men and women of our generation shall not have suffered and died in vain. They have given their lives for the sake of that better world that is to be. We shall be sharers in the benefit of their death. They ask of us more than lip gratitude. They require of us a cleansing conviction and a great resolution. It is for us to say whether the world that they made ready for us shall slip back into the old, sordid, selfish paths which led to this twentieth century crucifixion. A kinder world has risen from the tomb. Let us not be niggard in the offering we make to that new life! Out of the tomb of the old world a new industrialism, a new order of society must emerge. We must see to that. The powerful on earth know today, if they did not know three years ago, wherein their code was cruel, selfish, unchristian. Statesmen see that they must meet the new day with new convictions. The humility of the Christ that wills to give and not to hold must be the sum of all the virtues of the new order. These millions of boys have died to teach and to enforce that truth. They may not have seen or understood the meaning of the sublime deed which they have done. But we see its meaning in the light of this Eastertide.

"Christianity is the power to be glad against all odds." But that gladness is not merely the emotion of grateful hearts. It springs from a faith in the transforming power of a loving will. The shattered glory of the Cathedral of Rheims is a symbol of the disintegrating forces that brought to ruin the old civilization. The will to power has laid the world in ruins. The will to love must create a kinder world. We have pledged ourselves this Easter Day to take upon our shoulders the cross that has dropped from the weary fighters on the fields of Flanders and France—yea, and from the innocent victims among her own people whom Germany has sacrificed in behalf of her will to power. Let us see to it that the measure of our gift to Christ be not mean. We see a vision of the world grown young again as Christendom breaks its Alabaster Box and pours all its garnered beauty upon the risen life.

England

THE heart of America has been beating with pride over the heroic feat of English arms on the battle front during these anxious days through which we are passing. The word Verdun thrills the soul whenever it is spoken; but despite the claim that America with her diverse heritage has a score of fatherlands, there are many of us who still cherish the old tradition that England is our mother and all her honorable deeds belong to a heritage that is our birthright. So when we read what the boys of England have done and are doing at this critical hour along the line of the Somme, our hearts respond to the sound of this new Verdun in a quite new way. England, our mother, is guarding the citadel of freedom.

There has been no time, during the fierce onslaught of battle, for England's generals to tell the world what glorious deeds are being done by British soldiers. But Mons and Gallipoli have prepared the imagination to measure the glory of those deeds. Between the lines of Haig's brief reports, we read a story that thrills the blood. It makes us proud; but it also ought to make us humble. Men and women of our generation probably never before lived through such anxious hours as those of Palm Sunday when we crowded into our churches to tell to God our fears and hopes. Our faith in Christ's Kingdom compelled our belief that God would not deliver over into the keeping of German guns the ultimate decision of right; but as we read of the onslaught of waves upon waves of German soldiers equipped for destruction on a scale that stuns the imagination our faith was strained almost to the breaking point.

What filled us here in America with humility was a knowledge of something we should like now to forget. We have said some brave, fine words about freedom and humanity on this side of the water. Three years ago millions of Americans were ready and eager to give their lives, their sons and all that they had for a share in that atoning sacrifice that English boys are now making. We not only were not permitted to help, but we were forced to sit by and see the months of danger advance while our country was getting converted to the conviction that there was need of preparing for the great emergency. Those were cruel days for some of us. But we doubt whether they were quite as hard to live through as have been these hours of watching when England and France are calling to us to hurry. Their boys are getting worn; they need us; they need us now. We can hold on, they tell us, but not forever.

Faith without works is dead. We dare not think of the humiliation we should feel, if our help should come too late. We dare not think, if things should go wrong, of the remorse of those who did not trust America to see the issue and accept its share of the sacrifice. That is past now. It is idle to talk about it. And yet what wouldn't we give to turn back the hands of the clock six months or a year that we might now be a substantial help to that fagged, worn line of English boys making a wall of their bodies between us and the foe. We are looking anxiously to our Government at Washington to speed America's help. We believe that the Government is doing its best to produce guns, equipment, ships, soldiers. It is useless to dwell upon mistakes. We believe that those in whose hands lies the direction of affairs are doing their level best.

There are some things that we individually can do which ultimately will tell for victory. We can do all and more than we are asked to do towards the conservation of food and the giving of money for war charities. Most of the people who worship in our churches and who perhaps may read these words need not be urged to increase their saving and sacrifice. It is a pretty serious minded people which gathers Sunday after Sunday in our churches. They have given more than money; they are doing more than to comply with Mr. Hoover's demands; they have sons and husbands and brothers in France or in training at home. But cannot some of us give more than we are giving? Every morning mail, every daily paper brings petitions for money-aid. There is no hunger in America; but there are starving children, mothers, old men and aged women in all the war-stricken zones of Europe and Asia. These we can help with our contributions of money. And the prisoners! Don't let us forget the prisoners! After this drive, thousands of the heroes who were left at their guns to protect the retreat, little companies of men fighting back the foe, will be lying in German prison camps. Every time we read an appeal for help for prisoners, let us give, give again and again. We were not ready to take our place on the battle line. Money is a poor substitute, but those of us who cannot give a soldier can give material help. Let us give that and be very humble about our share in the world sacrifice!

And then morale! Not for one moment must America harbor a thought of defeat. We hope what England hopes, that the settlement of this war will be so decisive that militarism will be forever destroyed. But meanwhile militarism has not yet been destroyed. If this war does not do it, another war, unless victorious Germany should be converted, will have to be fought. We can't risk the future by trusting any longer in soft words. As a nation we must dedicate everything we possess to the battle against militarism till a real peace be won. Let us put away luxury, vanities, even some necessaries and buckle down to the stern tasks of war. America is not yet entirely redeemed from frivolity.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

America's Hundred Thousand

THE best that America has to give are pouring over the roads of France towards the Somme. It is only a little army as armies are accounted these days; it can do very little, perhaps, to change the fortunes of the mighty conflict in which they are shortly to be thrown. It is not the size of that army that we are thinking about as we follow them with our hopes and prayers. What matters to us here at home is that that army of American boys moving along the roads to the battle front symbolizes to us the best in the American soul. If there is such a reality as a "representative America", we shall find it there. They were born in families who have been accustomed to take deeply to heart the honor of the Nation. For three long years these real Americans knew that the War must be our war; they burned with eagerness to do their part; they gathered into mass meeting to urge our participation in the War; they sent petition after petition to the Government to act. Then when the hour came their boys, these real American boys, went forth eager to give their best.

However small and weak, counted in numbers, that little army may seem to the enemy and to our allies, it is to us who sent them over the waters the biggest thing in the whole world at this hour, for in giving them we gave all that we had to give. May God be with them and with those whose eyes are following them from home.

Journalistic Bombs

THE Odell bomb evidently did precisely the damage which the Atlantic Monthly hoped it would do. It got everybody talking. If the letters published in the Contributors' Column in the current number of that popular monthly are an indication of the amount of intelligent discussion which Mr. Odell's article produced we wonder whether the editors are not feeling the retribution of chagrin.

We are glad to read, however, in the April issue of the Atlantic, the very able reply to Mr. Odell by one of our own clergy, Mr. George Parkin Atwater of Akron, Ohio, entitled Peter Stood and Warmed Himself.

The whole article deserves reading, but we quote one admirable passage:

> "The clergy today have a serious task. This is a day of false alarms. Street-corner orators vent their spleen upon every institution of mankind, hurling invectives at the educational, commercial, and religious granaries in which is stored the wealth of the labor of ages; reviling the granaries which these orators themselves did not by constructive effort help to fill, while having no further foundation for their vituperation than the soap-boxes which they did not help to empty. Political parties and newspapers raise clouds of dust by their cunning manoeuvres, both in the hope that the public vision will be clouded thereby, and also in the hope that their crocodile tears of lamentation will turn the dust to mud with which to besmirch those whom they would destroy. Amid the public turmoil stand the clergy, representing a higher order of things. Realizing the moral weight of their collective judgment, every partisan would invoke them, as Balak invoked Balaam of old, to curse his enemies. But the clergy are not to be convinced by clamor."

Just as We Should Be

WE quote below what one of our bishops thinks about the all rightness of the Episcopal Church. It is designed to further the good work of church unity which, judging by our professions, we have so deeply at heart. The following is taken from Bishop Sumner's address to his clergy and laity:

> "We are hearing frequently in these wartime days of 'The Challenge to the Church'. My own feeling is that there should be a challenge from the Church to you of the laity and to lay people everywhere in this Christian world. I am not in sympathy with the statement, so oft expressed, that there is much the matter with the Church. Remember, if you will, that the Church is a divine organization, founded by Christ Himself. Those who belong to religious bodies which lack historical position, may well fear that there may be something the matter with their organization. That there is the Church has proclaimed for centuries, and therefore it is nothing new. But for us, in the Church, we need have no fear because 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world'."

We suppose that the most urgent reason why our Presbyterian, Congregational and Methodist fellow Christians are so active and efficient in good works for the Master is that not having "valid orders" they must make up for it by getting out and hustling for all the other good causes of which the Gospels approve. It is just this lack of validity that saves them from the sin of complacency. Isn't it almost time that our "Orders", like so many other good things the Master has bestowed upon us, became a precious possession of which we are only subconsciously aware? They are there, bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh; but like breathing we ought, most of the time at least, just take them for granted.

The Easter Parade, Munitions and the Liberty Loan

THE New York newspapers commented on the fact that the 1918 "Easter Parade" was noticeable for the predominance of khaki among the men and last year's suits and bonnets among the women. Personally we were in a church far removed from Fifth Avenue at the time, and so do not consider ourselves in a position to pass judgment on the extent to which the War has sobered the butterflies, be they male or female, of the country. Contemplation of the shop windows, however, is not encouraging. From parasols to 1918 automobile models, it looks as though an appallingly large number of people were engaged in the production of non-essential luxuries.

Every one of these workers is needed, desperately needed to stand directly behind the men who are battling today on the banks of the Somme. The money that is spent selfishly and thoughtlessly for new automobiles, new victrolas, new clothes, unnecessary tobacco, wasteful confections, is urgently required by the Government. What good is depression over the news, sympathy, flaunting patriotism, if it is not at once translated into action, economy, Thrift Stamps and Liberty Bonds?

This is what Rudyard Kipling had to say on this subject to the people of Folkestone:

> "Remember, too, that everything we waste in the way of manufactured goods, from a match upwards, as well as everything we buy that isn't absolutely necessary to get on with, means diverting some man or woman's time and energy from doing work connected with the War. And war work, which means supplies, food, munition, ships, is the only thing that is of the least importance now. Everything outside that necessity is danger and waste.
> "The road has been cleared of all obstacles to saving. The interest on what we save helps to make us personally independent: the money we lend to the Government helps to set our land and our world free."

The Coming Storm

"THERE is gathering headway in this country such a movement for the social application of religion as I have never dreamed of seeing." This is the comment of a Churchwoman who is acting as one of the special student secretaries appointed by the Y. W. C. A. to meet the situation which they have sensed but of which most people are in profound ignorance. "It won't be spectacular, but it is so desperately real that unless the Church will meet students in it, we are going to lose them completely. On the other hand more than one student is facing an experience of penitence that will send her back to the Church if the Church's ministers are ready to understand."

We are too apt to look upon the undergraduate as a combination of ingenuousness and frivolity who will settle down to fixed opinions and beliefs only when contact with the work-a-day world brings an appreciation of realities. Whether this indictment has had truth in it in the past is not the question. The fact today is that the whole American student body has been jolted into an awareness of the stark realities of life almost more forcibly than has any other single group. There is an earnestness in their groping for God and their insistence on the dedication of their lives to His Kingdom that will not be denied. They are ready to overleap whatever seems to them a barrier. Their idealism, more brilliant perhaps than penetrating, is ready to overthrow a Church that does not measure up to the stature of the Christ they have newly discovered. They are not willing to tolerate the slightest sham, the least reserve in their gift of self for the betterment of the world. Can the Church supply the leadership they need and crave? Or will she let them drift into the churchless vagueness whither they seem by many signs to be tending?

The Five Forces

"THERE are five great Forces of Religious Education: The Home, The Church, The School, The College, The Seminary." So runs the Foreword of the initial Bulletin of the Board of Religious Education of the Province of Sewanee. The rest of the Bulletin is devoted to a succinct summary of the power available and the use made of it in each of these Forces.

As a guidepost for parents the Bulletin should prove of especial use. Of course clergy and teachers will also find it suggestive, but they usually have easy access to the information here so admirably brought together. It is fathers and mothers who are most apt to leave unfilled the simple obligations of religious training and to grope in vain for the right school or college for their boys and girls, simply because they neither know nor have the clue to the information. The list of Church schools is especially valuable for this reason. We can not think of a more helpful thing for a diocesan or provincial Board of Religious Education to do than to print and circulate among parents, as well as among the clergy and teachers, similar bulletins.

Holland

APPARENTLY our seizure of Dutch ships has created a good deal of bad blood in Holland. Judging by reports from the Dutch papers, our side of the question is not generally understood among the masses in Holland. We may be sure that Germany's version of the affair is admirably understood; for Germany is not only able to fight enemies upon every front, but she has time to look after the newspapers in most of the neutral countries. The Allies have been sublimely indifferent to these minor details of war. We neglected utterly Russian psychology; we are probably neglecting it now. Can we afford to let Dutch public opinion be entirely taken care of by the propagandum?

America has a good many orators with time on their hands. Commissions seem to be the order of the day. The Japanese Commission that came to this country did a great deal to create better understanding between this country and Japan. Why not send a commission to Holland? They could tell our side of the story; they could reach the public ear. Part of the heavy task we have undertaken for ourselves of making the world safe for Democracy is to make the people on the other side of the water understand what are the purposes and feelings of the American Democracy. Send some of our orators to Holland.

The Red Cross in France

WHAT the Department of Military Affairs of the Red Cross in France did in 1917 is only a faint foreshadowing of the scope its work will attain in 1918. Nevertheless the report just issued by the Director of Military Affairs to Major Perkins, Red Cross Commissioner in France, should be read by all who desire to appreciate the size of the job we have assigned our Red Cross. "The Military Affairs Department is the ally of the French and United States Armies," the report begins. It has acted as a "stop-gap to bridge over the period between the time America entered the War" and the period when our soldiers are bearing their full share of the burden. It has supplied "to the French soldier material evidence that America was in the War". It has concentrated its energies on canteen work for the French soldiers where it is able to give "ample hot repasts to 20,000 men a day". In the metropolitan canteens nearly three million men have been fed in the last four months. Here the American soldier is beginning to be a frequent visitor. Several of the independent American hospitals, those who kept the American flag flying in France during the first three years of the War, have been taken over by the Red Cross. Perhaps the research laboratories in connection with these are most worthy of special mention. The dispensary system that cares for the sick civil population of the devastated regions, the diet kitchens, the medical and surgical information bureau, the rest stations, etc., all give evidence that our Red Cross if adequately supported by the American people, are able to meet the increasingly great demand which the War will impose upon it.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

Foregleams of Immortality

By THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."—Psalms xxx—5.

A LITTLE while before the Lusitania went down, Charles Frohman stood on the deck with some of his fellow passengers calmly discussing the possibilities of death. And he said, "Why should we be afraid to die? It may be life's most beautiful adventure."

I want to show tonight that what he presented as a probability and Jesus has presented as a certainty; that divine revelation of Easter morning, is endorsed not only by our own instincts, but by the profoundest reasoning of which we may be capable.

And the first fact which I want you to note in support of this splendid hope and expectation is that we long for immortality; that man is an embodied hereafter. We are so made that we yearn for a continuance of personality beyond the veil. And that is one evidence that we are to have it. Our aspirations for it are intimations of it.

We see the restless tiger moving ceaselessly backward and forward in his cage, and we know that the cage is not his home; that his dwelling place is in the jungle far away. We see the fluttering of embryonic wings in the fledgling in the eagle's nest, and we know it was not made to remain within that nest forever; that it was destined to sweep the stars. And one of the strongest proofs of immortality is that we are restless until it comes. There could be no reaching out after these things, unless there was within us something divine and indestructible which reaches out. The only unsatisfied being on this earth is man.

And then consider further,—and if you will think of it, this is one of the most singular facts in human nature,—that no matter how long we live, every one of us has a secret consciousness of unfulfilled destiny. The universal testimony of mankind from the beginning has been, that this life is at the most a period of expectation; never of complete satisfaction. If it is to be perfected at all, the perfection must be beyond. If this is all, then alas,

> "When the veil from the eyes is lifted,
> The seer's head is gray.
> When the sailor to the shore has drifted,
> The sirens are far away.
> O why should the clearer vision,
> The wisdom of life's late hour,
> Come, as in Fate's derision,
> When the hands have lost their power!"

The more we think upon the matter, the more certain we shall become that this strange Something within us, which we call the soul, or the breath of God, or what you will, does not exhaust itself in the performances of this life.

We have within us the consciousness of greater power than we have ever found the opportunity to wield. And there is not one of us who has honestly tried to do a man's work, however eagerly he has labored, however successful he may have been, who is not ready to cry out, in view of the slumbering and unused possibilities which he feels within him, "In aspiration infinite! In accomplishment infinitesimal!"

Theodore Parker on his death bed said to Frances Power Cobbe, "I am not afraid to die; but I wish I might carry on my work. I have only half used the powers that God gave me." "Where shall we bury you?" they asked of Socrates when he was about to drink the poison; and he only smiled and answered, "Anywhere if you can catch me." "My friends," said Joaquin Miller, "I cannot prove to you that the dead will rise again. I cannot prove to you that the sun will rise again. But I surely believe it. And I surely believe the dead will rise again. O why should man perish utterly? Blow a little thistle seed far away; a little thing no bigger than a pin-point. Let it fall on the dark earth, even though it be in the farthest corner of the world, yet it will in the springtime come forth a lovely flower, perfect in its kind. And man is surely as much to God as a little thistle-down."

Such is and has been the testimony of the greatest minds the world has ever known. "I am the back-bone of an angel!" said Victor Hugo. And when he came to die he wrote: "I feel in myself the future life. I am like a forest which has been more than once cut down. The new shoots are stronger and livelier than ever. I am rising, I know, toward the sky. The sunshine is on my head. The earth gives me its generous sap, and heaven lights me with the reflection of unknown worlds."

"You say the soul is nothing but the resultant of bodily powers. Why then is my soul the more luminous when my bodily powers begin to fail? Winter is on my head but eternal Spring is in my heart. . . . The tomb is not a blind alley; it is a thoroughfare. It closes in the twilight to open in the dawn. . . . The thirst for infinity proves infinity."

Have you ever stopped to think what it means that we have the possibility within us of thinking of things higher than we have ever seen or known; that it is possible for us to have an ideal? What makes humanity dream such things unless they are to be? You tell me that knowledge can only come from experience, and I believe it. We do not know anything except from experience. This dream of perfection is not knowledge of such a sort. We have never seen it. We have never known it. Then where did we get it? To me it is incomprehensible, unless we have within us the spark of a divine life, which, perfect in itself, can only be satisfied with perfection; and which dreams, because it has foregleams; a vision of that which shall some day be attained.

Let me remind you that these, and many more if I had space to refer to them, are fundamental instincts of life, and that fundamental instincts of life are always trustworthy.

There is no fraud in the constitution of things. Nature is truthful. No instinct that our Creator has ever implanted within us has proved to be an imposture. "He is a faithful Creator!"

Now read carefully. One of our most imperious instincts is that of self-preservation. In the moment of danger we strike out to defend ourselves, quickly and almost without volition. But notice! There comes a time when this instinct of self-preservation is made subordinate to a higher instinct: the instinct of self-sacrifice. Deep down in the human soul is laid the conviction of moral obligation; of the binding necessity of right, even though it may sometimes bring to us the enmity of those we love, ignominy, yes, death itself. What is the meaning of this sense of obligation which contradicts all our natural instincts of self-preservation? It has no meaning at all if life at the grave is to vanish like a ring of smoke.

Why should we feel within us any demands to observe a moral law? Like the other animals, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die. It is a problem which requires immortality for its solution. It is the only rational basis upon which you can account for these phenomena of human experience.

Grant an Easter morning to the soul, and then, but then only, that contradiction is explained; instinctively we know that we are not thereby sacrificing our real selves but only the brief and mortal part of us, for that which is to live forever and forever. On no other hypothesis except that each of us is a yonder-minded being can the omnipotent voice of duty within us be satisfactorily explained. The reason why a man obeys his conscience when it is to all his apparent interests to follow his lower tendencies, is because he feels within him the flutter of wings. There is a Something within him greater than he, which tells him, though perhaps he has never consciously recognized it, that "it is not all of life to live nor all of death to die"; that "weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning". And that Something is God.

Hymns 398, 396, 404.

The Mystical Consciousness

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

THE mystics have always been consistent in their testimony that there is a higher state of consciousness open to every human being who is willing to ulfil the conditions for its attainment here and now, a :ate of consciousness as much above our present normal elf-awareness as the mind of a man is superior to that f a child. And, despite differences of phrasing and omenclature, it is clear that all the great mystical :riters are also substantially agreed as to the steps or tages by which this great experience is to be reached. But at the moment we are not concerned with these but :ith the validity and significance of the experience itself. There are probably very few people who have not at ne time or another had glimpses of it or at least brief ntimations, however fleeting, of the existence of a eightened and intensified mode of being compared with :hich our ordinary familiar consciousness of ourselves nd of life as a whole is

> As moonlight unto sunlight
> And as water unto wine.

Let us endeavor to understand just what this implies nd no more. It is not a question of swoons and ecstasies, till less of dreams and delusions; nor is it a temporary ending of the veil that separates seen from unseen, terestrial from celestial. The point of importance is that he every-day waking consciousness of the ordinary man r woman—our individual self-knowledge of the outside world, the sum total of the perceptions, feelings and impressions which make up our awareness of personal dentity as over against the rest of existence—can be, and ometimes, though seldom, is, immeasurably enhanced nd glorified, so that the person undergoing the change eels himself or herself to be another being without easing to be the same—a greater and more wonderful eing, no longer imprisoned and held in bondage by naterial things but lifted above them and utterly free, nd gifted with an insight which makes earth's woes and roubles seem but the tiniest shadows against an infinite ackground of eternal splendors and joys. This is as ear perhaps as we can get to a description of what is neffable. It is but rarely that any soul is privileged to aste of it in this world, but those who have once done o can never be the same again; and there is abundant vidence that gifted ones, souls with one master passion—he passion for God, and willing to dare everything for he love of God, have at times broken through, as it were, into this effulgence of divine light and ever thereafter borne something of its radiance about them. Thus Wordsworth speaks of

> Those obstinate questionings
> Of sense and outward things,
> Fallings from us, vanishings;
> Blank misgivings of a Creature
> Moving about in worlds not realised,
> High instincts before which our mortal Nature
> Did tremble like a guilty thing surprised.
> . . . . . .
> Though inland far we be,
> Our souls have sight of that immortal sea
> Which brought us hither,
> Can in a moment travel thither,
> And see the children sport upon the shore,
> And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.

It may be too much to say that everyone knows something at first hand of this experience. Most of us are very earthbound, very sharply conditioned by our mortality, very gross, very evil; we cannot easily obtain vision of supernal things. But suppose it to be true, as all God's initiates insist, that a higher than our ordinary normal consciousness is possible to every man, a perception of reality before which all earthly glamours flee, what then? Well, for one thing, we should see that there was little left to trouble about; we should smile, not only at the trivial things which engross men's thoughts from day to day, the cares, and worries and dreads of life, but at most of its greater sorrows and tragedies too. Our whole focus of interest would be shifted; we should marvel at human blindness and folly, at the sheer futility of the ends which the great ones of the earth commonly pursue—at the craving for wealth, power, honor, prominence, success. We should mourn the wickedness and wrong-headedness of rulers and empire makers, no doubt, but we should discern infallibly at the same time that they were grasping bubbles and that the substance of good had never been in their hands or left to them t make or mar. Hindenburgs, Ludendorffs, Hertlings, Trotskys, Bolos—so many pathetic swaggerers that strut their little hour upon a miniature stage and disappear to learn how little difference they ever made to humanity's good or ill. We should discover that people we have never heard of may be immeasurably more potent than those we have; we should learn a different scale of magnitudes and acquire a new perspective when gazing upon naked souls. We should see how little anybody matters—and how much. We should know with a knowledge nothing could deceive that no evil has ever yet befallen any man from without but only from within; we should estimate at its true value, which is nothing, the fussiness and pretentiousness of those who think they are directing human affairs because they splutter and mouth on the outside of life. "Little Man," we should say to the potentate who takes himself most seriously, as to the most obscure member of a parish council who pants for recognition, "you are of no account; you never were; you are merely contemptible; bigness and smallness are not at all what you suppose or any of your flatterers." Even the consolation of being a terrifying criminal, a person who causes perturbation in heaven because of the vastness of the evil he has wrought, will be denied the sinner. His heart may be black enough, his intentions accursed enough, but he has never deflected a hair's breadth the august purposes of God.

And what of those who weep and mourn and will not be comforted? What of the millions who have suffered that others might prosper, who have shed their blood that their masters might gain a sordid advantage? What of grief, and tears, and slaughter, and outrages too vile for mention that cry to heaven for vengeance? The very same. God can afford to be silent and still, though never an indifferent spectator of man's inhumanity to man. We shall awake from the dream presently to find that not pain but sin was the soul's menace and that no true heart has ever lost its treasure. Ours is a troubled slumber, but let our eyes open for an instant to the glory about us and all the terrors of the night are gone.

Only one thing matters in this world, and that is so to live amid the shows of sense that the consciousness which will be ours in heaven may even now arise within us in such wise as to illumine and transfigure for us all that is dark and grievous in our earthly habitation and disclose to our trusting gaze the portals of our eternal home.

A Ship of Mercy

By LOUISE M. HAYNES

THE sea is green
Like an opal,
The sunset sky a pink seashell,
Floating on the waves.
Far on the soft horizon
Is a ship,
Each topsail aglow
With light—
The sun's blessing—
As it goes out to sea
And France.

Backward and Forward

By THE REV. JOHN HOWARD MELISH

Faith

IN this day of reconstruction, when the Church is thought by some to be the bulwark of conservatism, it is well to recall the spirit of other generations. The monks were revolutionists who believed that no half measures could cure the ills of the world. Nobody could join their fellowship until he disowned all that looked most precious in the light of the existing social constitution. The worship of the bones of the saints signified revolution in the beginning. For who were those saints who left their bones to be worshiped, but men of low degree, representatives not of the glory of war or the splendor of state, but of elemental humanity? Even the medieval dogma of hell, which was conscience in colors, asserted the eternal value which dwells in the common man.

Most people within and without the Church imagine that the social question has been sprung upon our time by economic changes. They should read and re-read the Genesis of the Social Conscience by Henry Sylvester Nash. It is the theme of that book, which, though one of the first, remains one of the most original in a rapidly growing social literature, that the social question is spiritually inevitable. Dr. Nash traced the pedigree of the modern reformer's conscience to the establishment of Christianity in Europe. The social question when run to the earth, says Dr. Nash, reads as follows: Is it possible to individualize the downmost man, to make him really count as one? How shall the downmost man bulk large enough before the terrestrial reason and conscience to force them to take cognizance of him?

The reformer will not get far before he awakes to the fact that there is no answer to his social question merely in economic changes, which aim to shift the balance between the lean and the fat. Nor is pity the inspiration of the reformer. Pity will land him sooner or later in the monastery. The one and sole permanent sprig of reform is reverence for humanity. And what is the fundamental life that is common to all men, the life which by common agreement in the past is called God? Is it creative or contemplative? Christianity declares that this fundamental life, conceived as one and self-consistent, is Desire or an infinite missionary force. In this fundamental life, dynamic and not static, in whom every man counts one, Dr. Nash finds the source of social life and inspiration.

The right of the downmost man to become an individual was to be worked out, according to former centuries, in eternity. Now, however, the social movement recognizes that an opportunity must be given to exercise this right in time. It is the supreme obligation of society to help to this right. In order to insure this success humanity has endowed the State with a large share of the spiritual capital of the Church. The modern free state exists in order that the downmost man may be given a chance to live nobly. And the reformer's conscience claims the right to audit the books of society.

Works

If Dr. Nash's book is a declaration of glowing faith in a new order, where shall we find the works without which faith is dead? Something more than the will to do good is needed if the world is to become altogether good. If good will were enough to save humanity, the Church, which contains a larger number of men of good will than any organization known to history, would hold a higher rating among reformers than it does. The recent report of the British Labor Party on Reconstruction after the War is commended to all constructive Churchmen as worthy of their serious study. The New Republic of February 16, 1918, performed a useful service to Americans by republishing that report in full.

What first strikes the religious reader of the report is its religion. On this side of the Atlantic we are not accustomed to hear men of labor quote scripture. "We are members one of another", says the British Labor Party. "No man liveth to himself alone. If any, even the humblest, is made to suffer, the whole communit and every one of us, whether or not we recognize it, i thereby injured." The writers of this report apply thos Biblical and Christian principles to humanity as a whol not to a section of humanity or to a group called out o the common humanity. Have they not caught the visio of the Christ?

The report sets forth a deliberately thought-out, sys tematic and comprehensive plan for the immediate socia rebuilding of the British Empire. Those men of labo are concerned with nothing less thorough and radica than a new social order. Recognizing that they are build ers, they put forward, as a policy of action, what the call the form pillars of the house that is to be: (a) th Universal Enforcement of the National Minimum; (b the Democratic Control of Industry; (c) the Revolutio in National Finance; and (d) the Surplus Wealth for th Common Good. Leaders among American labor me have been deeply stirred by the declaration of their com rades in England, and are studying the application o those same principles to American society. Wha America needs, first of all, is a union of Labor and th "Intellectuals", as in England.

Prayer

Every great movement, the end of which is the goo of man, sooner or later is found upon its knees befor God. The soul, when deeply stirred, prays. The socia movement, long spiritually inarticulate, has begun to fin utterance in some stirring prayers. The finest collectio of social prayers still remains that of Prof. Rauschen busch, in a little book entitled Prayers of the Socia Awakening.

Though lacking the rhythm and liturgical form t which we Prayer Book Churchmen are accustomed, thei social prayers have soul and vision. One feels in then the heart throb of a new age. The language has dignit without being antique. Modern facts find expression i them without grating upon the ear. Why should we no pray for the co-operative commonwealth if that is wha we mean by the Kingdom of God? The prayer for a sorts and conditions of men doubtless includes mothers But strong men are helped by remembering before Go in their prayers the mothers who bore them in trava and loved them the more for the pain they gave; and a men grow in self restraint by praying that girls may pre serve their bodies and minds in purity and strength fo the holy task to which the future may summon them.

We do well to pray God to send down upon ou bishops and other clergy the healthful spirit of Hi Grace. But would it not help both bishops and clergy sometime to be specific, and pray to be freed from al entanglements that have hushed their voice and boun their action; for grace to look upon the veiled sins of th rich and the coarse sins of the poor through God's eyes for a new light and a new message, for prophetic visio and apostolic sympathy? Business men are performing a necessary service to humanity, and are beset by peculia temptations. Would it not be well for prayer to tak note of these modern facts, and to give wing to the ideals hopes, efforts of business men? We who rejoice in th noble heritage of a great liturgy need to vitalize ou religious life with prayers of a social character.

"THERE are some foul souls, kneaded together o filth and spawn, incapable of other delight than tha which comes from gain or the avoidance of loss; inquisitive and eagerly hankering after the smallest farthing their whole attention taken up by their debtors, everlastingly uneasy about the rise and fall of money values weighed down and smothered by contracts, title deeds and parchment. Such men are neither friends nor citizens, nor, perchance, are they men; what they want is money."—La Bruyere, as quoted by Emile Faguet.

The Knight of the Labyrinth

By FLORENCE CONVERSE

ONCE there was a King's daughter, and she was dumb. No one knew why. Physicians came from far countries to look at her little pink tongue, and went away saying they found naught amiss. Nevertheless, she could not speak. Merlin, the great enchanter, that was counselor to King Arthur, journeyed from Camelot at her father's entreaty to discover if by good hap his learning might avail. But so soon as he had set eyes upon her he said, "Magic may not meddle here". And at this time she was six years of age, or thereabout, and she made as if she would sign the sign of the cross upon Merlin's brow, but he avoided her. And they that saw him ride forth the hall said that the tears ran down his beard. And the years passed.

Now, there were those who whispered that because the King, her father, had sinned, the princess was dumb. But if this were so, who shall say? Howbeit, true it is that her father had sinned, and the manner of his sinning was in this wise:

His father, which was grandfather to the princess and the man of most cunning in Britain at that time, except it were Merlin—and some said he was a greater than Merlin, for that he wrought his miracles without magic—had fashioned for his own pleasure, and to learn the folk wisdom, for so he said, an inscrutable labyrinth whereof only he held the clew. Notwithstanding, any man might enter therein, whether Knight or churl. And the old king said to his son,—which was father to the dumb princess, howbeit at that time she was as yet unborn,—"Son, I will that thou search the labyrinth to discover the secret place". And the son said, "Yea, Father, I will well," for he was ever courteous. But he went not. He had liefer sup and sing songs with his friends. And again the old king said, "Son, I will that thou search the labyrinth to discover the secret place". And again the son made answer courteously, "Yea, Father, I will so to do". But he went not. And when the old King was on his death bed, and the priest at hand to shrive him, he said, "Son, so long as thou lingerest to search the labyrinth, so long as thou knowest not the secret place, even so long shall this realm of mine lack a wise ruler, and a just and a merciful. Nevertheless, thou art mine heir; thou must do what thou wilt". And his son wept, for he loved his father; and he said, "Father, I will well". And the old King answered him, "Mea culpa," and presently he was dead.

And within a while the young King put off his mourning weeds and took unto himself a wife, the daughter of a king. And when the year was run this lady was delivered of a child and died the third day after. And this child was the princess.

Now herein the King did sin, for that through sloth he disobeyed his father, and by that disobedience he brake the commandment which saith, "Thou shalt honor thy father and thy mother". And also he lied to his father in that he did not that which he said he would do. But if this sin were cause why the King's daughter was dumb, who shall say? And the years passed.

And it began to be noised roundabout that a knight should one day win to the secret place within the labyrinth and find therein the wherewithal to heal the princess of her infirmity. And whether it was Merlin that first let publish these tidings, or who it might be, no one knew. Notwithstanding, the rumor spread through all lands; and knights, and earls' sons, and the sons of kings, Christian and Paynim, came from the ends of the earth and the far isles unto the realm of the Slothful King to essay the labyrinth. And many knights of the Table Round rode forth on that adventure at this time. For those were the days before the Quest of the Holy Grail, and the Fellowship was not yet scattered. But there was none might win to the secret place. And the princess was seventeen years of age, or thereabout.

II

Now there dwelt at Arthur's Court in those days a fair youth that was kinsman to Sir Launcelot, for his mother and the father of Sir Launcelot were brother and sister, wherefore he was cousin likewise unto Sir Galahad; and King Arthur was his godfather and held him at the font, and his name was called Hugh, which was afterward called Lepenseur, for to set him apart from another Hugh that was likewise page to Queen Guinevere. And this Hugh Lepenseur served esquire to Sir Gareth that was brother to Sir Gawain. And at the High Feast of Pentecost, what time the Court was at Winchester, King Arthur made him knight. And he kept his vigil before the high altar of the Cathedral of Winchester.

Then said King Arthur, "Rise, Sir Hugh Lepenseur; ask, and thou shalt have". And Sir Hugh answered him, "My Lord the King, that I may go on the Quest of the Labyrinth, to discover the secret place and to succor the damsel that cannot speak".

"Now alack!" quoth King Arthur, "I am very loth to grant thee this boon: for knowest thou not that thou art dear to me as mine own son? And knowest thou not that from this quest none ever returneth?"

"Sire," said Sir Hugh Lepenseur, "Sir Fentris is returned."

"Oh, sweet friend, alas and weylaway!" said King Arthur, "He is blind."

"Sire," said Sir Hugh, "Sir Mordaunt of the chilly forest is returned."

"Sir Hugh, sweet friend, sweet son, hast seen him?" quoth King Arthur. "He that was once so hale hath a shaking palsy."

"Sire," said Sir Hugh, "Sir Graeme Grahame is returned."

"Fair sir, my heart's friend," said King Arthur, "Knowest thou not that what time he taketh food he hath a colic, and this endureth day after day and may not be cured? And whether suffers most Sir Graeme or the Lady Custance his wife, who shall say?"

"Sire," said Sir Hugh, "there be many more returned."

"Say you so?" King Arthur cried thereupon. "Say you so? And all they be clean gone out of their wits! Is this to return? By my troth, I think not so. Oh, Sir Hugh Lepenseur, Oh, thou, dearer than son of my body, wherefore wilt thou forth upon this adventure?"

"Sire," said Sir Hugh Lepenseur, "for that dumb lady's sake. She sings to me in my dreams."

"Now fare thee well, Sir Hugh," quoth King Arthur. "This is thine adventure and this is thy quest."

And on the morrow after Mass, they armed him in clean armor and set him on horse with his spear and his shield. But as yet there was no device graven on his shield, for Sir Hugh Lepenseur said, "When I have achieved the quest, by God's grace, and when I have entered into the secret place, then shall the labyrinth be graven upon my shield".

And Sir Gareth buckled on his spurs, and Sir Launcelot belted him with his sword, and King Arthur kissed him as he had been his own son. And when the Bishop of Winchester had blessed him he rode forth right joyfully upon his quest.

And for many a day thereafter men said one to another, "What tidings of Sir Hugh Lepenseur?" But there were no tidings.

THE portals are open, the white road leads Through thicket and garden, o'er stone and sod.
On! Up! Boot and saddle! Give spurs to your steeds!
There's a city beleaguered that cries for men's deeds,
For the faith that is strength, and the love that is God!
On through the dawning! Humanity calls!
On to the walls! On to the walls!
On to the walls, and over!

The New Order

By THE REV. JOHN F. SCOTT

Mark XIV:54 "Peter sat and warmed himself by the fire".

UNDER the caption "Peter Sat by the Fire Warming Himself", the Rev. Joseph H. Odell has delivered himself of what he calls a "volcanic eruption". In strong and unsparing language he accuses the clergy of the Christian Church of gross and absolute failure in fulfilling their prophetic function between August, 1914, and April, 1917.

He is calling attention to the fact that no man or group of men in the name of the Christian Church has stood forth as a representative of righteousness and justice and pointed the way for this people to go, as, for example, Cardinal Mercier in Belgium—and that is right. There has been no common leadership in the Christian Church here; the various branches have not got together and said: "Germany's aims and methods are the very antithesis of what we stand for. They are in the spirit of anti-Christ. We cannot and we will not stay idle and allow this thing to go unchallenged." The Christian Church, I say, did not do this thing, as it undoubtedly ought to have done. And no denunciation can be too scathing, no arraignment too severe, for the Church's woful failure. It does not lighten the guilt one bit to point to our divisions into God knows how many denominations and sects, and to say therefore common utterance and leadership is impossible here as in Belgium. As a matter of fact, this is the very reason for the Church's weakness in the face of this world catastrophe. And we may well thank the Rev. Mr. Odell for shaming us to our face for our smallness and consequent incompetency when brought before large issues. The Churches have been busy—oh, feverishly busy—in the past building their denominational fences, and they have built those fences so high that they are unable even to look over them, to say nothing of climbing over them. They have lost touch with their neighbors, and because their vision has been thus narrowed they have come to believe and to assert that their respective sectarian claims are coincident with the Kingdom of God, and that the only way thereinto is through their special gate. And now we have the unlovely and deplorable spectacle of the various Christian bodies clamoring for proportionate representation in the army and navy chaplaincies—each one still thinking, of course, that the forces will go to ruin without its special brand of Christianity. And, what is even worse than that—here at home energy and material that ought to be used for the salvation of the world is being wasted in strengthening our differences.

Such a state of affairs must not be—it cannot be. With all the world casting aside the inessentials in secular pursuits, with the elimination of waste and the concentration of energy, with millions of men facing the unadorned, elemental facts of life and death, the Churches will not be suffered simply to feed their denominational fires. There is far bigger business on hand than that. The great fire of democracy is ablaze in the world. If it is to do its best work and warm the hearts of mankind it must be spiritualized. Men must be shown that democracy is not simply a matter of politics and economics. In its framework it doubtless is that. But the thing that can give it life and warmth, that can make it a vehicle through which men may express themselves, is the spirit of love, which is the spirit of God. Oh, the opportunity is so large today for a united Church to fulfil its mission as the representative of the Christ! The world is wearying of the old order of strife and competition; it has had enough of autocratic potentates political and commercial; it is sick unto death of servitude and inequalities and injustices. The vision has come of a new order of peace through co-operation; of democratic government and industry; of freedom and justice and brotherhood. The Churches can, if they will (not make the vision come to pass, for that will be done anyway); but the Churches can enhance the value of what does come to pass. They can make the new order satisfying and permanent; they can put a heart into it and make it throb with life and love; they can make the coming democracy of man into the republic of children of God! But to do this thing which is really their task, they have got to rise from before their comfortable braziers in the courtyard of the world's judgment hall where they are constantly denying the spirit of their Master for the sake of their own comfort, and follow Him through the fiery trial before priest and king even to Calvary. Then shall the Church be rid of those garments which hinder her progress and of those thoughts of self which are making her forfeit her right to live, and she will stand forth to light the way to peace.

One thing is certain: The day when the Churches can thrive on differences of doctrine and polity is gone by. The Churches have got to put their whole energy into the common task of humanity; to create conditions in which men can live together in peace and brotherhood; and the Churches cannot do this while petty jealousies and rivalries prevent any real unity of action. The crying need of the world today is for concerted action on the part of all the forces of righteousness; and that means, among other things, some sort of Christian unity.

The editor of THE CHURCHMAN remarked in one of the recent issues that there were four chief barriers to Christian unity: the Roman Church, the Greek Church, the Episcopal Church, and all other Churches. And I am afraid that is the plain truth. We have grown to think so much of our organization that we cannot think of Christianity in any other terms. But, we shall have to shortly. These are days when the world is talking and thinking in terms of the simplest essentials: and the Churches must do likewise.

And what are the essentials of our religion? We have but to go to the New Testament to Jesus' own words: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul, mind and strength" and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Here is the sum of all the law and the prophets. To love God is to love the things He stands for: righteousness, justice, mercy and truth. To love one's neighbor as one's-self is to live by the golden rule. Here is our religion in its simplest terms; and the basis of it is the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. We naturally honor and revere the man who illustrated these principles so completely in His own life; somehow we cannot separate the teachings of Jesus from Jesus Himself and so we call Him Lord and Master. (But it must be said, I think, that Jesus was not nearly so concerned over proper respect for Himself as he was for the godly and brotherly life.) The sole purpose of the Christian Church then is this: to stand in Christ's stead in the world and inculcate such a love of God the Father as will manifest itself in righteousness and sincerity of action and in loving co-operation with our fellow men.

What could the Churches not do if they would only face the enemy with a united front: divided by temperament, but together with God.

What would happen to the liquor-traffic and its ally commercialized vice, in this country if all the Christian Churches would put their shoulders together against these two insidious evils which destroy manhood and spread misery in their wake?

What would happen to our industrial injustices, which enrich a few at the cost of the many, if the Christian Churches could unite on the platform of a common brotherhood with equal opportunity for all?

And what would have happened, think you, if in 1914 when Belgium was ravished and later when the Lusitania's human cargo was sunk, the Christian Churches had stood forth in the name of God and humanity and said: "America cannot stand for that because Jesus Christ cannot stand for that"?

It makes one sad when one thinks of the great need in the world today for the truth about God and men which Jesus taught and lived and of the Church's failure to meet the situation. The (Continued on page 474)

Haiti and the Negro Problem

By THE REV. ARTHUR R. GRAY, D.D.

SINCE the fell day on which that fine old saint, Bartholomew de Las Casas, who by the way ought to be in our diptychs, made the ever memorable blunder of suggesting African slavery as a method of obviating the necessity of forcing labor upon the Indians, the Negro problem has been upon us. The only bright spot that I can find in it is a dark one, namely, that we can take heart when we remember that a man like Fray Bartholomew could make such a mistake. God knows he lived to rue the happy thought, as he imagined it to be—for about five minutes.

However, the problem sits athwart our chest like some dread nightmare, and the sooner we remember that there is no use indulging in our pet Caucasian weakness of trying to reduce swollen facts with ointments of theory the better.

And so I would thrust under your nose this enigma for the purpose of awakening you to the crushing fact that there is a way of partial solution, a way which is blessedly free from theorizing and entirely concerned with facts. I say a partial solution, for it only pretends to accomplish a certain amount of what has to be done; but, as we have learned from our cradles, half the job is in the starting.

To put it in prescription-like brevity, this is the theme I have to develop: Haiti is the beginning to the solution of the Negro problem; by concentrating on work in that island the Church can accomplish more for our brethren than in any other way. Let us see.

What is the Negro problem anyway? Can we ask and answer honestly, without giving offense? I hope so, and shall let my record of good will stand against any possible misinterpretation. If the slippery lead with which I write betrays me into some apparent flippancy or sophistry, forgive me and believe me that I am on my metaphorical knees as I write upon this solemn and dread subject.

The Negro problem is not, as Mr. Chesterton would put it, the Negro problem but the Caucasian problem. It is not the Black Man who makes the difficulties but the White Man. By which I mean to say that the alarms we hear on all sides are due to the Anglo-Saxon's proficiency, super-proficiency, rather than to the Black Man's deficiency. To aver anything else is to take the position of the gilded youth who claims that everybody obstructs his passage when he wants to burn down Michigan Avenue at forty miles an hour. The slow-moving vehicle or body is the average body, and this is a world wherein the average person has the right of way. Our laws and customs are based upon the rule of the average man, and the Anglo-Saxon, to revert to our metaphor, with his high-power car is really the one in the way; that is to say he is in the way so long as he forgets his good manners and faults others for blocking the road. When, arrogantly, he thinks that his kind, numbering a few hundred million, can elbow off the road those, numbering several billions, who cannot move so quickly, one really feels it's time to call in the traffic cop. If we were using nautical parlance we would refer to the rules of right of way, according to which in all the harbors and seas of the world the sailboat has the right of way over its more fortunate steam-driven rival. Oh, for some race manners and a dose large enough for Behemoth of noblesse oblige—German papers please copy.

Such is the Caucasian problem which brought upon itself that by-product, which we call the Negro problem, four hundred years ago. You remember how it happened; how our impetuous forbears in order to speed up the development of the New World imported thousands of their slower-moving brethren from the West Coast of Africa. Strange irony of fate that they got their slow-moving brethren to enable them to go faster. They did not have to have them, it was merely a case of not being willing to open up the Western wilderness at a rate, let us say to maintain our metaphor, of ten miles an hour. They had the get-rich-quick scorpion in their bonnets and, as we would say in these days, were ready to suspend any and all immigration laws to accelerate the gathering in of gold.

When common sense overtook them, and they dropped their brethren, they began talking, oh, the folly of inspissate youth, about the Negro problem!

The second point I want to make is that whatever efforts are put forth to solve this secondary problem, one must remember that the United States is a White Man's country. Japan is for the Japanese, China is for the Chinese, Africa is for Africans, and America is for the Anglo-Saxons. Our saying so doesn't make it so because God had the determination of this matter long before our vocables came into use. There is no use blinking and talking about the homes of the free, etc., for that is merely to drop back again into anointing facts with theories; into putting, let us say, chloroform liniment on a major fracture.

Joyfully we can and will make our brethren of other colors at home in this land. Gladly we shall always treat them as honored guests and put them in our best spare bedroom and kill hecatombs of fatted calfs for them—but it gets you nowhere. We can give both hands of fellowship to the Japanese, but their habitat will always be Japan, and we can pour out gallons of good cheer upon Africans, but their home will never be here—they can at best be our honored guests.

This at once suggests the serious handicap under which such schools as St. Paul's, Lawrenceville and St. Augustine's, Raleigh, and Hampton and Tuskegee labor. To what can they point their graduates beyond participation as guests in the progress and good things of America? How would Groton feel if it knew that none of its graduates could ever really be at home in the land? Every time this thought strikes me I want to go literally down on my knees and pray for noble leaders like Archdeacon Russell and Archdeacon Delaney and many another man of God who finds himself in their position. The enormity of the crime which we white joy riders of civilization committed in bringing our slow-moving brethren over here was so great that a world court today could scarcely do less than hang us—unless some statute of limitations could be made to apply.

So much for the situation. What is the panacea without the pan? My answer is Haiti.

Down to the south of us, occupying the western third of the old island of Española is the Black Republic. A land it is of inconceivable fertility. The million and a quarter who live there today could be increased to fifteen million without taxing the resources of the soil. Given a fair chance, the people can and will increase in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and their critically minded fellowmen. Being one of those who believe outspoken that eventually the Black Man will be capable of governing himself I assert that the whole thing is merely a matter of time, of speed. The mythical sons of Ham differ from us not in kind but degree. They are today where we were, let us say, in the thirteenth century. Some day they will reach the twentieth and will make of Haiti a republic of which they can well be proud. Give them time and a chance; don't yield to the journalistic fault of judging the whole world from a twenty-four-hour point of view. Sub specie æternitatis ought to be burnt into the brain of every newspaper editor in this land. I get desperately tired of their taking a day's or a year's experience as a criterion, and this applies particularly to the productions of so-called scientific and literary people.

A good beginning has already been made in Haiti. Uncle Sam has sent down a splendid lot of Marines who are busy teaching the people how to administer their finances and how to organize their police, and indirectly how to run their schools; in other words how to govern. But men with guns can do no more than schoolmarms with switches behind their backs, particularly in Latin America. They must be helped by scientific diplomats and that is where the Church comes in. If we will but send down in sufficient force and place beneath the benevolent tutorings of the soldiers the kindly ministrations of the Church, the progress of the people along the road to the twentieth century will be greatly hastened.

After years of waiting the Board has at last sent a man to the Black Republic. It was at the request of the people themselves that he is a white man. There is no use discussing that problem here. The important fact is that the Church of Haiti, which has been without sufficient guidance for many years, is at last to be taken under the serious guidance of the American Church.

This Winter the Rev. A. R. Llwyd has made what we hope will be a triumphal entry. He is to be the representative of the Bishop of Porto Rico, the dignitary having ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and under him we hope to see the work so bravely begun by Bishop Holly take on new vigor.

Just what forms of activity will be developed it is not for me to say, though I hope it will be schools, schools, and more schools. Above all I hope it will be industrial schools, since democracy will only rest easy on busy-ness. Idleness, lack of reasons for being interested in public welfare, absence of that striving which comes from personal ambition, these will never provide a foundation for democracy—and of course our duty down there is to teach government of, for, and by the people. Only those who are home owners, property owners, and business owners will have that personal and selfish anxiety about the affairs of government which compels men for their own sake to vote intelligently. It is the old story I have quoted so often, that while a man will get a gun and fight for his home he will never lift his finger in defense of his boarding house. Neither Haitians nor Hanoverians can develop public spirit until their private interests compel them to think about the bono publico. Is this utilitarianism? It all depends on how you interpret it—I at least don't mean it in that way.

Some years ago the business men of Jacksonville rose up and expelled the racetrack because they found that it hurt their business by undermining the character of their employes—that was utilitarianism but not of the John Stuart Mill type.

What we must do is to get the Haitians sufficiently interested in the development of their island's resources to cause them to rise up and expel any and all revolutionists and ragamuffins who interfere with the lawful occasions of commerce. Mr. C. W. Barron has recently applied this same reasoning to Mexico in his excellent little book The Mexican Problem. His chapter heading "Business and Not Politics Can Redeem Mexico" is worthy of inclusion in some modern book of proverbs. Business and not politics, provided the business be tempered with the gospel of God, can redeem all Latin America and in particular Haiti. Therefore I cast my vote for industrial schools in the Black Republic. Give us enough of them and the land will come to its own.

The only other place on earth where an independent Black Republic is possible is Liberia, and its future is problematical. There is nothing uncertain, however, about Haiti since we shall never annex it. It is merely a question of their developing sane democracy and of our doing all we can to help.

By this time some one will be saying "Silly scribe, he wants to try again the old game of solving the Negro problem by wholesale deportation". Far from it. I would never dream of such an impracticable scheme. I said that my cure was a panacea without the pan, a partial solution, and what I meant was that in part the problem will be solved if the Negroes have a nation of their own. The Japanese in America do not mind its being a White Man's land since they know there is also a Yellow Man's land—it gives them a sufficiently comfortable feeling to prevent difficulties arising. The Black Man on the other hand is a man without a country, and until he gets one he will be like Hale's unfortunate, a nondescript. I often wonder whether the solution of the Hebrew problem is going to be found by providing them with a home in redeemed Palestine. Make of Haiti a clean, strong republic, and you alter the atmospheric pressure. At once your slow-moving brother will find himself in the position of the Japanese or the East Indian, whose situation as guests is entirely satisfactory. If I went to stay in a man's house as his guest and knew that I had no home, I would never be at ease. But so long as I knew that there was a little corner which I could call my own, it would be possible for me to live out my days as a guest with perfect self-respect.

Therefore, I say, let us get behind Bishop Colmore and Mr. Llwyd and their native Haitian priests. Let us pray for the Church in that island of radiant possibilities, remembering that every milestone passed by its people means just so much nearer have they come to a solution of that problem into which the saintly old Bishop of Chiapa plunged us four hundred years ago.

The Easter Bells

By EUGENIE Du MAURIER

IT happened a long time ago, in Austria, in the very little town of Feldkirch. It was during the time when the great Emperor Napoleon was having some of his dreadful wars. Massena was the name of one of Napoleon's generals. Massena went one Easter Eve to capture Feldkirch. He took with him more than 18,000 soldiers.

When the sun rose and shone in all its golden light over the mountain tops, the people of the little village could see the bright sun-rays gleaming on the swords, and cannon, and guns, and on the armor of the soldiers, as they were scattered over the hillsides. The poor people of Feldkirch told each other that it was useless for them to fight and in any way try to defend their town. They were not prepared. They had been a peace-loving people. They never thought that the great Napoleon would consider them of sufficient account to battle against. So they agreed among themselves that the better part of valor for them was just to allow the soldiers to enter their little town. They would treat them as guests, show them how they loved their little town, how they tilled their ground, and were living like men and brothers together among their hills.

After they had come to this decision, the minister of the little old church rose, asked the Father's guidance and protection, and then said:

"You all know what day this is. It is the Day of our Lord's Resurrection. The day of passion, the day of crucifixion, suffering and death—these days in our Lord's life are over. This is the Easter Morn. It is a day for joy and not for foreboding and sorrow. Look over yonder in the East. The sun is dancing glad hallelujahs of rejoicing. The Lord is risen! 'Let us go up to the House of the Lord' and praise Him as freely and gladly as all nature is doing. Go, make the bells of the church ring out their melody! The strife is over. The battle won! We will have our service as usual. God will help us if we trust Him."

The people all agreed that the church service should be held. So the bells began to ring out their glad music to tell all the people that it was Easter Day. Soon the streets were filled with the carefree and happy villagers hurrying to the church.

The soldiers camped on the hillsides could not understand what it all meant. They saw the people going through the streets of Feldkirch on their way to church. They heard the bells ringing their joyful music. And they began to think that somehow these simple-minded mountain folk had some special reason for their gladness and rejoicing. They conferred with Massena. They soon decided that the people of Feldkirch, perhaps, had a great army of soldiers hidden away in the cellar of their little church. So before the bells stopped ringing the soldiers of Napoleon's army under General Massena on the hillsides around Feldkirch, had broken camp and departed.

And so there was a real Easter service held in that little Austrian village church that day more than a hundred years ago.

A Father's Part and Duty

By GEORGE HERBERT RANDALL

EVERY patriotic American must deplore the exaggerated accounts of immorality in our camps, cantonments and naval stations. Young men going into these can find, if they are bent upon doing so, the bad side of life as well as the good But to find the bad they must put themselves to inconvenience It is not being thrust in their faces, reports to the contrary notwithstanding. As this War and the enlistment of the world's young men are the greatest ever known, so the forces for good have been mobilized much more rapidly, completely and effectively than in any previous war. Not only that, the Government and our military authorities, sensing the immediate and great need for preserving the moral and physical purity of our armies, have been unhesitating in their endorsement of all those recognized means of helpful and clean recreation, moral protection and religious culture with which the good men and women of the land have sought to surround our boys in the uniform.

But this is not saying that every young man is clean minded, of lofty ideals, and immune from temptation. The danger does lurk in hidden places for many, and the tempting of the devil is so cunning and well devised as to make gross immorality possible to those who are seeking it. Let us be fair as a nation of well meaning citizens and face the fact that the greatest dangers are now menacing those young men who in their boyhood days have been without the inspiring as well as restraining influences of Christian homes in which religion has been a vitalizing feature rather than merely a symbol of respectability. What your boy is today seeking as recreation while serving in the Army or Navy is very likely to depend upon what sort of home you have provided him with during his years of moral and educational growth. "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Neither will he be likely to depart from it when, separated from parents and sisters or from wife and children, he finds himself merely an atom assimilated into the impersonal fabric of our mighty engine of war.

The fathers of young men may well reflect in these days upon what they have or have not done in a positive way to lead them into outstanding and effective Christian lives. For such religious training as they have received how much are they indebted to the uplifting and exalting influences of a truly Christian home—Christian in fact rather than merely in name? The days when parents may well look back over their own lives and ask themselves how far they have been careful personally to safeguard their boys—these days have arrived. A mighty revolution in conditions has taken place, and the fathers and the mothers whose days are now passed in peace of mind as to the moral and spiritual security of their boys are those who minded them well in the days of their youth.

There are exceptions to the rule. There are moral perverts—perverts in spite of the refining influences of a home where God's altar has been set up. But these but prove the rule, they are the rare exception. Taken by and large the young man now in uniform who feels himself with God's help secure against the temptations to wrong-doing is he who has a father at home whose life has been to him an unerring example of the strictest moral rectitude and the closest devotion to his God; and in whose home the reading of God's Word, the habit of family prayer, the saying of grace at table—some of these or all of these—have effectually supplemented the ministrations of the Church in service and sacrament.

We did not look for this War and the tearing asunder of our homes. It is all an unexpected thing, and it has introduced a new set of conditions. Too many homes have been taken unawares. The War has come as a thief in the night, and from many homes has taken away that which is more precious to the father than life itself. Because of his love of righteousness and his devotion to country, he bears the separation with faith and confidence if he has set the feet of his boy in safe places; with regret for his own failure and fear for his boy's moral —not less than his spiritual—welfare, if he harks back upon days of so much preoccupation in the mammon of this world that he has withheld from his son his rightful possession of a home of positive and inspiring Christian ideals and practices.

It is bad enough when heads of households are so remiss before the very eyes of their sons that they refuse to make even a decent contribution to the definite work of the Church as they have opportunity in the various channels of parish life. It is worse still when they stimulate an attitude of contempt for the worship of God by appearing in their pews only so often as is necessary to retain their "good standing" in the parish and community. The smug intolerance of things deeply religious on the part of too many so-called "pew holders" and their definite refusal to bear their share—if we may so limit a man's duty—of the work of the Church, constitute the chief barrier that hinders multitudes who otherwise would do so from casting in their lot with the Church. Such negligence on the part of a parent, and particularly in these times, should bring the blush of shame to his cheek, if he have the capacity for such an emotion.

That, however, is only a part of his remissness. For the home of many a Churchman is so destitute of the exalting and inspiring evidences of a strong religious life as to dull in the mind and heart of the average youth all the promptings toward a vital and outreaching witnessing for Christ through His Church with which—let us hope—he was born. No Bible reading from one week's end to the other, not even five minutes of daily united family prayer, not a thought of thanksgiving for food and shelter, never a word to the boy as to what he is thinking about concerning his Christian life!

What criminal folly! Many of our boys in the camps and trenches are realizing for the first time in their young lives what all these years they have been deprived of. The letters of some of these young men indicate it. They are experiencing in their barracks and huts a more vitalizing atmosphere of positive Christianity than they ever experienced at home. And this means that, although they are too loyal to bring the indictment openly, the fault may almost invariably be traced to the doorstep of the preoccupied and indifferent head of a so-called Christian home. Surely, the blush of shame born of sincere repentance should spring to the cheek of such a parent!

If, on the other hand, you have tried consistently to make your boy's home all that it should have been, if true religion and undefiled has been the most significant feature of its adornment, then thank God that your boy is now true and pure and straight, and that you have helped him to be so. He is the finest patriotic sacrifice you can make to your nation—the finest any man can make. No war is mighty enough or wicked enough really to take him from you. He may die in body, in trench or hospital or on the sea; but if his home has been through your efforts one of high ideals and holy living, his last earthly prayer will be one of gratitude to God —and to you—that that was so.

A Prayer for Our Enemies

O FATHER of every nation, give to our enemies the freedom which Thou hast given us; deliver them from rulers who exercise lordship, forgetting that they are servants of all; and grant them to see with joy the coming of government of the people, by the people, for the people in the whole earth, wherein they and we shall be brethren together under one Master, Jesus Christ.—Amen.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

NATIONAL CAPITAL GREETS THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK

Preaches 3 Easter Sermons—In Philadelphia and New York Holy Week

The Archbishop of York preached three sermons in Washington on Easter day, and received an enthusiastic ovation from members of the diplomatic corps and other prominent representatives of the various governments and armies.

During the first part of Holy Week he was in Philadelphia, as recorded in these columns last week, and later was in New York, where he addressed the clergy of the Dioceses of New York and New Jersey at St. Thomas' church, Tuesday, and conducted the Three Hour Service at Old Trinity on Good Friday.

His itinerary this week included Baltimore and Pittsburgh. From the latter city he goes to Ottawa, where he will be the guest of the Duke of Devonshire. He will return to New York City to attend the meeting of the House of Bishops, on April 10. On that evening the Church Club will give him a dinner, and on the following day he will make his last address in America at Columbia University. The university will confer upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws.

In New York Holy Week

NEW YORK CITY.—"The Cross is always the touchstone of human life. Just in proportion as the Cross is near to us or far away can we judge a man's life. The difficulty is to bring men into real relationships with that Man on the Cross. But here the Cross is near to us, and speaks today in the ordeal the nations of the world are passing through."

These, the opening words, were the keywords of the Archbishop of York's preaching at the Three Hour Service on Good Friday at Trinity church. By half-after eleven it was impossible for anyone to find even standing room. Never was there a similar service at Old Trinity where the worshipers passed in and out so little and when a deeper spirit of devotion and humility marked those who had assembled to watch through the Three Hours at the foot of the Cross. The minds of many went back to Good Friday, 1917, when in the same pulpit Father Huntington held up before the congregation in prophecy the cup of sacrifice and suffering which he bade the American people unfalteringly take into their hands.

"Good Friday will always be memorable to you," the Archbishop continued. "I bid you have in remembrance today those men who are in the midst of the most awful battle in human history. . . . The Cross of Calvary is not a single event. Christ is ever giving Himself. . . . The Son of Man is wholly identified with man. We are beholding afar another Calvary,—I ought to say the same Calvary."

Throughout the Three Hours His Grace made the congregation conscious of a vigil spent not simply on the Calvary of Palestine but also on the Calvary of France. Through those who were at that moment engaged in battle on the Somme, who were writhing in the agonies of wounds just received, who were dying before the onslaught of the enemy, the meaning of the Saviour's wounds and death was interpreted; and through His Triumph on the Cross the meaning of the present Calvary illuminated.

The meditation on the First Word gave help to those who have found it difficult to pray for the enemy. "Does prayer for our enemies come from our hearts?" the Archbishop began. "If we fail here we can go no further. The rough and ignorant soldiers, . . . it was easy to pray for them. . . . But what of those who do know? The crowd of those who had rejected Him surrounded the Saviour. . . . We do not pray for our enemies to be let off the consequences of their sins. We pray in the Litany that God will 'turn their hearts'". "As our Brother," His Grace said in his meditation on the Second Word, "He passed through the overwhelming experience of the Cross, and as a Brother he spoke to the penitent thief. . . . The rough, goodhearted, undisciplined soldiers now meeting death in this awful battle . . . in the chivalry of sacrifice" will be given opportunity to complete the development only begun; will, as a young officer prayed just before he died, "be given another chance elsewhere".

Perhaps the most beautiful meditation His Grace made was that on the Third Word. In this time of "severing of friendships," he said, "when not a man in the Army, not a woman or girl in England but has lost someone very dear", we find "a Friend in the heart of humanity". "He will save and restore our friendships for us." And meanwhile He bids us be mother and son to those who have been bereft. "We are called to perfect our use of the great gifts of friendship."

The meditation on the Fourth Word was a call to loyalty to God. "This is the darkest day in the life of the human race," said His Grace, "the hopes of three generations are dashed to the ground. An evil spirit is abroad. Nations are committed to destruction. Men are drawn up against each other eager to kill. . . . From humanity goes up the dying Saviour's cry, 'My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?' Why? The answer is not yet. . . . But if man will hold just that invincible loyalty to God, keep just that assurance of the sovereignty of God, he will have something he can trust and use. . . . The lesson of Good Friday is that if a nation will believe in righteousness, will hold on to righteousness and will stay on God, it can not be defeated. Christ's assurance is that righteousness is the one thing in the world that can not be defeated."

The absolute certainty of the presence of the White Comrade on the battlefield was the dominating impression left by His Grace's meditation on the Fifth Word. "Never has there been a time of so much

IRISH CHURCH PLAYS PART IN STRUGGLE OF DEMOCRACY

Editor of "Irish Field" Tells Story of His Own Friends

Dropping into THE CHURCHMAN office the other day, Mr. J. Henry Carleton, editor of the Irish Field, brought an inspiring story of the part the Episcopal Church in Ireland is playing in the Great War. Mr. Carleton is in America during these days, as a result of the suspension of his journal for the remainder of the War, owing to the economic stress on publications in Ireland. Here is the statement he gave concerning things in the Church of which he is an ardent communicant:

"It was a beautiful day in April, 1916, when the Rev. James Owen Hannay, Canon of St. Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin, and well known to millions of readers as the great fictitionist of Irish life, heard the call of the troops for army chaplains—and went. Possibly the American Churchman will know him better by his pen name of George A. Birmingham. Loving Ireland—its people, its rugged shore, its fishing glens and its vast mountains—Hannay accepted the call and went to France to do 'his bit.' Three weeks before he went into the great adventure he sat in my office in D'Olier Street, Dublin, and discussed the making of flies, the choice of bait and the thousand and one other things dear to the heart of an enthusiastic angler in the early springtime.

"Duty called him and he went, manfully and unafraid, although he was many years beyond the allotted age for service. After many months at the Front he came home to spend a few days with 'the kiddies.' I saw him in their midst, strong, capable and loving—the same Canon who went away—the same Irishman who could always find reason for laughter in everything. After the children went to bed we sat in front of the cheerful fire and he told me things out of his war experiences that would make one's blood run warm—for the things our troops were accomplishing—and cold because of the barbarities of the Hun monster.

"Canon Hannay was not the only Irish churchman who heard of the need of chaplains with the troops and who went forward. The Rev. James E. Powers of Carlow, the Rev. Edward O'Connell-Lyne of Athy, the Rev. James J. Farnsworth of Naas, the Rev. James E. Bruen of Kilkenny and the Rev. James J. Atkinson of Abbeyleix are among the men whom I know well who are giving of their all in order to help and guide the boys who are carrying the flag to victory.

"Strange as it may seem to many Americans, whose ideas of Irish affairs are conceived from cursory newspaper reports, the solution of the much-vexed question of political autonomy for Ireland is very near. Churchmen throughout Ireland are speeding the day towards this much-to-be-desired result. Redmond, the genial, moderate 'conciliator,' who died a few weeks ago, was the most prominent and capable advocate of parliamentary methods. He had the almost unanimous support of the Irish Church.

"No matter what Ireland's political fate may be, however, the big fact stands out that Ireland's Churchmen are doing their duty in the great World War and in this admirable manner helping to stimulate a kinder feeling between Ireland and the Empire, as well as acting as a bond to weld into happier conjunction the discordant elements at home."

Read and Be Patient!

IN requesting our readers to be patient when their paper is delivered to them late we have felt that our explanation was not, perhaps, clearly enough stated. We have often imagined that our subscribers do not appreciate to its full extent the terrific congestion in the New York Post Office. We are therefore going to tell them a little story which has the merit of being true.

Perhaps you do not know that all copies of THE CHURCHMAN are put in bags by the printer and delivered by a truck to the General Post Office in New York City. There this truck is unloaded, and the mail bags transferred to trains.

One day recently the truckman with his bags of THE CHURCHMAN drove up to the Post Office and there found a line of trucks stretching several blocks. He took his place in line.

This was four o'clock in the afternoon. Six o'clock arrived and he was but a little nearer the entrance. Slowly the hours passed, but more slowly did his truck advance. The night grew bitterly cold. At twelve o'clock he was beating his arms to keep from freezing; but he dared not leave the truck or his place in line would be taken. Gradually time passed. Numbed and frozen he at last managed to send a small boy who was passing for a pail of hot coffee. This revived him sufficiently to enable him to keep up his night-long vigil.

Slowly the East brightened, the sun rose, morning was here—but his truck with the precious mail was not much nearer the entrance of the Post Office.

Finally—and this is not exaggeration—at two o'clock the following afternoon he delivered his bags at the Post Office and drove home to a well-earned rest.

This is merely an example of the state of congestion at the New York Post Office. Perhaps our readers will realize the difficulties under which all publications are struggling by having the fact brought home to them by such a story as this.

We hope that you will be patient. Your papers will arrive eventually; and in the meantime we are doing everything in our power to speed up deliveries. Remember that this is war time and that war materials have precedence over everything else on the railroads. We assure you that you are not being neglected.

ARCHBISHOPS APPEAL FOR MINISTERS AND TEACHERS

G. B. R. E. Says America Must Face Same Problems for Future

NEW YORK CITY.—The General Board of Religious Education in its quest for a War-Time Education Fund of $45,000 to meet the conditions in education brought upon the Church by the War, is calling attention to the appeal recently made by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York for ministers and teachers. The appeal says:

"By its Divine commission, and by its long association with the national life, the Church of England is called to take a foremost place in the spiritual renewal of the nation and of the world. For the fulfillment of this high endeavor it must now be girding up the loins of its mind and will. It must secure a material equipment worthy of its spiritual mission.

"First, the power of the Church to show forth and to set forward the Kingdom of God must largely depend upon the leadership of the clergy. In other words, the Church must have a ministry adequate in numbers and in training. But there is now only one source from which in the first years after the War the ranks of the ministry can be filled. It is the manhood of the Nation now serving in the Navy, and especially in the Army. Unless a great number of these men are ready to offer themselves for ordination it is hard to see how the Church can rise to meet new calls or even carry on its necessary work. . . . We have felt bound to give an assurance that no man whose fitness for the ministry has been tested and found true shall be debarred by lack of means from following his vocation or from receiving the best training that the Church can give. The Church must ultimately provide a very large sum of money if this assurance is to be made good.

"Secondly, on the teaching of religion in our schools must depend the tone and spirit of citizenship in the days to come. What gives reality and effect to the teaching of religion is the personality of the teacher—the teacher's own personal character, ability, faith. Through the men and women trained in its own colleges the Church has and must keep its place in training future generations of citizens.

"The responsibilities laid upon us, the men and women of the present generation, cannot be met by relying on the bounty of our ancestors. They can only be met if we can prove that in the sacred cause of the Church we are capable of sacrifices not unworthy of those which we are willing to offer in the service of our country."

The G. B. R. E. says: "These will be the needs of the Church in America as the War wears down the Nation, and in the days that follow victory. Subscriptions to the War Time Education Fund will increase the number of both.

"Pledges and checks may be sent to Harper Sibley, chairman of Finance Committee, Sibley Block, Rochester, N. Y."

ECUMENICAL CONFERENCE OF MANY NATIONS PLANNED

Invitations Sent to Pope and 25 Protestant Communions

NEW YORK CITY.—The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has received an invitation, signed by H. Ostenfeld, Bishop of Seland, Denmark; Nathan Soderblom, Archbishop of Upsala, Sweden, and Jens Tandberg, Bishop of Christiania, Norway, to attend, through its chosen representatives, an international ecumenical conference, to be held probably either at Upsala or Christiania. The Pope and other prelates of the Roman Catholic church have been invited, with twenty-five Protestant communions and certain special groups.

At a special meeting of the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council it was agreed that it was not advisable for the Federal Council to take definite action on the matter at this time.

The subjects proposed for discussion are:

(a) The spiritual unity in Christ of His disciples, without loss of loyalty either to the talents and duties entrusted to nations or to the creeds they profess; facts and their expression.

(b) The shortcomings of the Church with regard to the realization of Christian brotherhood and of the spirit of Christ in all human relations. Penitence of the Church.

(c) Possibilities and duties of the Church in counteracting the evil passions of war and promoting that frame of mind which makes for righteousness and good-will among nations.

(d) The Christian Doctrine on the sanctity of law and on the work of international legislation.

(e) Actual church problems viewed practically and universally, e. g., The Mission Field.

WHOLE VILLAGE DOES HONOR TO MEMORY OF CHURCH BOY

Clergyman's Son First of His Town to Give His Life

SAG HARBOR, LONG ISLAND.—Paul Howell Baer was the first volunteer of this place, where his father, the Rev. Francis V. Baer, is rector, to give up his life in the service of his country.

Since the war broke out between this country and Germany, the lad, not quite twenty-one years old, had been seriously considering how best he could make his life count in behalf of the cause for which the world is in arms against the Central Empires. Finally securing his parents' consent, he enlisted in the field artillery. His body was brought back to his stricken home just seven days after his noble resolve. Prior to his death, which took place March 19, from pneumonia, Paul was a student in Trinity College, Hartford, in preparation for the Church's ministry.

The funeral service, which was fully military, was held on March 22, being conducted by the Rev. John A. Howell, rector of Christ church, Ballston Spa, New York, assisted by the Rev. Messrs. E. S. Bourne of Easthampton, S. C. Fish of Bridgehampton, and W. R. Mulford of Sag Harbor.

The funeral was the largest and most expressive of sorrow in the history of the village. The public school was dismissed, the flags were at half mast, and rich and poor alike vied with each other in showing the heart-broken parents that their son's life and character would never be forgotten. The Roman priest and the Sisters at the Convent were particularly kind in their expressions of sympathy and regret.

An Appeal for the Third Liberty Loan

By the Archbishop of York.

Come to England and France quickly with money, ships and food. There is a terrible strain upon my countrymen in the trenches. We are not whining and asking for sympathy, but you will be cheering us to new hope, if we know that all the power and resources of your country will be given to the future of civilization.

You cannot send as many men as you wish, but you can send other things. Send money. Where men cannot go, money can. The ocean cannot stop it. Your dollars are the only bullets that will never miss their mark. You are going to have a great Liberty Loan soon. Put all the vigor into it that you can. Don't delay. We are asking you, as brothers and partners, to come and help us. Every man, woman and child can help in this fight to free the world from the menace of German domination.

We have to settle whether the spirit of irresponsible autocracy or the spirit of freedom is to prevail among the nations of the world. So vast and fundamental an issue naturally draws all the free nations of the world together. It must be settled now and forever, cost what it may.

The world must decide whether it will submit to the domination of a spirit which, if it were to prevail, would plunge the nations of the world into a long restless career of military rivalry. On such an issue there can be no such thing as compromise. We must be worthy of our task. We must recover for the world the atmosphere of freedom.

SEND BOOKS TO ALASKA

The request is made that all who have good magazines which they no longer need will send them to St. Matthew's Mission, Fairbanks, Alaska, for distribution among the miners and trappers in that part of Alaska. This distribution has been carried on for a number of years. Of course, if any prefer to send to the cantonments, we do not desire to interfere in any way with that work, as that is most necessary, but there are probably many who have used magazines which they will send to us here in Alaska. If there are any individuals or Sunday Schools who have juvenile books, especially for boys and young children, I shall be grateful if they will send them to St. Matthew's Sunday School, Fairbanks, Alaska, where they will be appreciated and well used.

CLERGYMEN ASKED TO HELP FOOD-PRODUCTION CAMPAIGN

Leaders of All Religions to be Enlisted by the Government

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Every Christian clergyman and every rabbi in the United States is to be asked to join in the campaign that aims to insure this year record-breaking crops of every farm product.

The United States Department of Agriculture, through the States Relations Service and by co-operation with the Federal Council of Churches, is sending a special letter to all clergymen in the South asking their assistance in the Food-Production Campaign. They are being asked to get in touch with county agents and with the State extension service, which represents the State agricultural college and the United States Department of Agriculture, and to devote as much time as possible during April to enlightening their people regarding the necessity of local food production. They are being furnished with data regarding the great burdens upon the transportation system of the country, and, in sections where the food production is insufficient for local needs, a special message is being sent to urge increased production to meet local demands.

This message is being sent first to 45,000 ministers in the South, but will reach those in the North and West before the planting season.

KENYON PRESIDENT IN FRANCE

Letter Home Tells of Work at Front —College Hears French Lectures

GAMBIER, OHIO.—The first word received recently from President Peirce since his arrival in France was over three weeks en route, and tells of busy days on behalf of Red Cross work. Storehouses, canteens at railroad stations, tuberculosis sanatoriums and military hospitals had been inspected, wounded men visited and poilus met informally at station canteens.

A Larwill Lecture in French was given at Kenyon College by M. Cestre, professor of English literature in the Bordeaux University of France, on Friday, February 8. M. Cestre is this year exchange professor at Harvard.

On behalf of the movement for the "Cercles Francais", a branch of which is formed at Kenyon College, an address in French was given by M. Delemar. Informal musical programs have also been delightfully rendered by the three French musicians, Monsieur Albert Larrieu, Madame Genevieve Lecomte and Madame France Ariel.

Parish Shows Growth

BAYONNE, NEW JERSEY.—Calvary church has come into a new spirit and is on the way to better and bigger things. With a communicant list of nearly 600, a Sunday School of 200, and a church, the seating capacity of which is 180, the work is handicapped by small equipment. There are two distinct congregations, morning and evening. The parish is in the growing part of Bayonne, thirty new families having come into the church since the last six months. On March 28, Bishop Stealy confirmed a class of fifty.

PARISH IN SPARTANBURG HAS REMARKABLE SERVICE

Flag Presented by Family of New York Boy Who Died in Southern Camp

SPARTANBURG, SOUTH CAROLINA.—A service of unusual interest was held in the Church of the Advent on Sunday morning, March 17. The occasion was the presentation of a memorial flag by Mr. William H. Rowe and family, of Ossining, New York. On the ninth of December, 1917, Charles Watson Rowe, a member of Company I, 107th New York Infantry (the old 7th New York), died of pneumonia at the base hospital. The funeral service was conducted at the Church of the Advent by Major William E. McCord, Chaplain of the 107th Regiment, and Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, Rector of the church. It was the first military funeral held in the church.

By order of the commanding general certain members of Company I, including Corporal George Rowe, a brother of Charles Rowe, were excused from duty to attend the service. Major Mazet, in command of the 107th Regiment (in the absence of Colonel Fisk), was also present. Fifteen pieces of the regimental band were furnished to assist with the morning service. Officers and enlisted men from the 107th and other regiments were present in large numbers.

The same bugler who had sounded "taps" over the young soldier's body stepped forward and sounded the call to the colors. In the stately building, accustomed to the quiet dignity of the service, the effect was thrilling. At the first note of the call, Corporal George Rowe appeared in the doorway bearing the beautiful flag. Reaching the chancel steps he stood at attention. The band then played "The Star Spangled Banner", and the whole congregation, largely made up of soldiers, stood at attention. The Rev. G. W. Harris, rector of Trinity church, Ossining, New York, in behalf of the family, presented the flag to the Church. The rector received the flag with appropriate reference to the meaning of the occasion.

Major McCord, Chaplain of the 107th, was absent in New York. His place in the service was taken by the Rev. Herbert Shipman, D.D., rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York, and chaplain of the 104th Field Artillery. It is difficult to put into words the thrilling interest of this service. It is the first memorial of any sort placed in Spartanburg in connection with the presence of the army at Camp Wadsworth.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Rowe were present, with their son, William H. Rowe, Jr., who, on account of physical disability, has been rejected for the army, but who has not yet relinquished hope of securing a place in the service.

The beautiful flag will be displayed at every important service at the Church of the Advent in proud and grateful memory of the young soldier who gave his life for the great country which that flag represents.

CONSECRATING OUR MONEY

Mightiest Force in History is Invincible Aspiration for Freedom

NEW YORK CITY.—In speaking of the coming Liberty Loan the Rev. J. H. Jowett, D. D., Minister, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York, said:

"Liberty Loan is not merely an investment of our money, it is a consecration of our money to a sacred cause. We shall never feel the constraint to put our money into it until we have a glorious ideal of the liberty we want to defend. If liberty means little or nothing, then we shall hand over our money as it may best serve our own material ends.

"But if liberty is a tremendous thing, part of our most precious inheritance, we shall willingly lay down our money, not for any pecuniary return, but because of our ambition to retain liberty as one of the cherished possessions of our race. Happily the passion for freedom is one of the rarest of spiritual flames and it cannot easily be quenched. Again and again militarism has sought to crush it, but it has seemed to share the very life of God.

"No menace of material strength has ever been able to destroy it.

"The mightiest force in all history has not been the power of threat, and powder, and sword, but the breath of invincible aspiration for freedom which is the very breath of God. In all the centuries men have been willing to defend their freedom with their blood. Many of the men of our own country are ready to make that great sacrifice. It may be that we shall not all be called upon to lay down our lives in the sacred cause; but surely we shall all be ready to lay down our money! He is a poor patriot who is not ready to bleed for his country! He values his liberty only as a pawn who will not lay his all upon the altar!

"I have confidence that the people of America will pour out their substance with unbounded consecration, and will hand down to a succeeding generation the liberty which we have received from our heroic fathers."

New Bishop for Fukien

LONDON, ENGLAND.—The Rev. John Hind has been appointed to succeed the Rt. Rev. Bishop Price as Bishop of Fukien. Mr. Hind became one of the missionaries of the Dublin University Fukien Mission, working under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society, in 1902, and from that year until 1909 he was stationed at Funing. For a short time, in 1909-11, he acted as curate of St. Mary, Belfast. On his return to China in 1911 he was appointed principal of the C. M. S. Middle School.

American Church Building Fund Helps 14 Parishes and Missions

NEW YORK CITY.—The action of the American Church Building Fund Commission at its meeting on March 21, held at the Church Missions House, seems to indicate progress in advance of the Church's material well-being. Loans amounting to $24,000 were voted to the following parishes and missions: St. James parish, Fresno, California; St. Peter's church, Lake Andes, South Dakota; St. Paul's church, Brookings, South Dakota; and St. Michael's mission, Wind River, Wyoming. Gifts amounting to $5,700 were voted to the following parishes and missions: St. Mary's church, Waynesboro, Pennsylvania; St. John's chapel, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; St. Paul's church, Kumagai, Japan; Grace church, Broad Brook, Connecticut; Church of the Atonement, San Diego, Texas; St. Andrew's church, Port Aransas, Texas; the Church of the Good Shepherd and Holy Comforter, La Grange, Georgia; the mission church at Guadalajara, Mexico; Grace church, The Plains, Virginia, and Christ church, East Norwalk, Connecticut.

By the action of the Board gifts for churches, rectories and parish houses are now available, the scope of the work of the Board having been enlarged by permission of the Supreme Court of the State of New York.

GIFTS AND MEMORIALS

CLAREMONT, NEW HAMPSHIRE.—Since the coming of the Rev. George Huntington to Claremont as rector of Trinity church a number of memorial gifts have been made to the Church. Mrs. Charles H. Long has given a handsome lectern Bible, American revision, in memory of her husband, the late Col. Charles H. Long. A Prayer Book and hymnal for use in the chancel are in memory of Edward T. Hendel, the gift of his mother. A Litany book in memory of Col. Austin Lovering, the gift of his sister, Mrs. C. W. Barrett. Six Vesper lights in memory of Mary Windsor Dow, given by her sisters, Misses Susan and Elizabeth Dow.

Mr. E. W. Humphreys Dies

BAYONNE, NEW JERSEY.—In the death of Mr. Edward Walsh Humphreys on March 22, Trinity church, Bayonne (Bergen Point), has lost one of its oldest and most prominent members. He had been connected with this parish since its formation in 1858, singing in the choir, as a vestryman, and for a number of years was its senior warden. He was the son of Solon Humphreys, who, with the late Captain LaTourette, gave the land, consisting of a city block, on which the church property is located.

Tells Presbyterians Why

NEW CASTLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Rev. Bruce V. Reddish, rector of Trinity church of this place, spoke, during Lent, in the Presbyterian church on the subject, "Why I Am an Episcopalian". The pastor of the Presbyterian church has been asking men of different denominations to make a frank statement of the fundamental tenets of his denomination.

concentrated pain. Hundreds, thousands of men while we are eating and sleeping are in unimagined pain. Ceaseless streams of wounded men form part of our daily life. . . But only men who like myself have been on the battle line can realize it. . . . The unseen Brother, Comrade, knowing, understanding the bitterness of it all, is surely with them. Otherwise, I could not account for the marvelous patience, courage and magnificent spirit of simple, ordinary men. Someone greater, stronger, nobler than themselves is with them in their pain. . . . And He it is who said of the cup of cold water, 'inasmuch'. It is He who is inspiring the wonderful ministry of healing. . . . A lad in hospital, writhing in fearful agony, said to me as the nurse left him, 'I thank God for the touch of a woman'. But the touch of that woman was also the touch of the Son of Man."

"There is a deeper pain and thirst we are less able to understand and meet. . . . We know where alone that thirst can be found. . . . Yet it is not to us that our brethren turn. They have found the religion of Christ hard, cold, conventional. They take themselves elsewhere. They have turned to broken cisterns. With the woman of Samaria the woman whose boy is killed cries to us 'Give me this water that I thirst not.' . . . When has the message committed to us been more desperately needed than now? It is a secret the world has not possessed, that of the Living Water springing up into everlasting life."

"Finally there is the thirst for a fuller share of human life," were the words with which His Grace concluded this most thought-provoking of all his meditations. "There is a deep and growing hope that out of this War may come a better and juster order, of social life. . . . The civilization for which working men have given so much will surely give more to them. . . . With them this hope is almost equal to the hope for victory,—that they may come back to a fuller life. . . . I call upon you to dedicate yourselves here to the ministry of the more abundant life."

Then coming to the Sixth Word, His Grace repeated what he has emphasized so often during his visit here, that only as the will to love becomes dominant can we hope to cry with our Lord His triumphant "It is finished". "There is something of the spirit of the Cross in the words 'With malice towards none, with charity towards all,'" he said, repeating in full Lincoln's great utterance. "It is not a feeling or an emotion that we need. We need a principle of life."

The church bell was tolling when His Grace spoke the Seventh Word. Linking again the great ordeal of today with the Cross, he dismissed the congregation with an assurance of trust and triumphant in God that will remain with them and keep them in inner peace throughout the days to come. "The one final reality is the will of a Father," said His Grace. "That is the summary of all philosophy. As children, look up at the Cross and say 'Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit'".

In Washington for Easter

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—The Archbishop of York preached three sermons in Washington churches Easter day, declaring his faith in the allied armies meeting the great German attack in France and voicing England's gratitude to America for her heartening support at a critical time. In the congregations were many members of the diplomatic corps, high officials of the Government and Army and Navy officers.

"This Easter," said the Archbishop, "makes a demand upon the strength of our faith such as perhaps no other Easter has ever made since its light has shone.

"There came a time about a year ago when we asked ourselves whether it was really true that we were struggling for things upon which the future of the world must depend. There came the first and faint element of division and discussion.

"Dispute and doubt, and then it was that this great nation arose and said in words spoken from this city, words so redolent of a proud faith that all the world must needs hear and hearken, 'These things are so absolutely at stake and so vital to the future of the new world as of the old that we will forsake all our past traditions, abandon our prized security and cross the ocean and make the struggle of the free peoples of Europe our own.'

"For that vindication of our faith these nations and my own will never cease to thank the President of the United States and the people of this great country."

Last Talks in Philadelphia

By the Rev. Irving A. McGrew

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—While in Philadelphia the Archbishop addressed several other meetings besides those reported in the columns of THE CHURCHMAN last week. More than 3,500 gathered in the Metropolitan Opera House on Palm Sunday afternoon to hear him speak to a mass meeting of the citizens of Philadelphia. It was one of the most remarkable audiences ever gathered here. More than 70 of the leading men of the city were on the platform—the British Recruiting Mission and officers of our Army and Navy were present in uniform. The inspiring singing was led by the men of the Orpheus club. Mr. Charlton Yarnall presided.

On Monday afternoon in Holy Week the Archbishop of York spoke to some 800 Vestrymen of the Diocese of Pennsylvania at a service in the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany in Philadelphia.

On this day the distinguished visitor spoke also to a large group of students at the University of Pennsylvania.

On Tuesday afternoon the Academy of Music was overcrowded with the women of the city who had gathered to hear the Archbishop of York deliver a message from the women of England to the women of America. His grace was visibly impressed with the sea of faces of the women who are spending themselves daily for the men in the service of the Nation.

At the Metropolitan Opera House meeting the Archbishop asked that his titles be forgotten, that they were more accounted of here than in his own land. He said that he had felt more at home in Philadelphia than elsewhere in this country. "Your very streets seem to indicate a security and steadfastness—you seem to share with us a belief in grandfathers." He felt mos at home in passing Indcpendence Hal "where I realized that though the Mothe had stupidly refused to give her daughte the birthright, and had compelled her t take it, yet that birthright breathes an speaks of the old home. That Liberty w both love is now seen to be unsafe, an must be saved. As we meet here we mu be thinking of the men and of the struggl that they are engaged in to save that Lib erty for the world. I would ask you t think of those men as citizens and civilians they were miners and millmen, clerks an men from the fields. Now they are with standing the fast and full pressure of trained and prepared professional army, th worst pounding of artillery that the worl has ever imagined."

"It had seemed last summer that the Cer tral Powers must realize that no settl ment could be won on the West—then Ru sia broke down. Now we have entered on new stage, and only God knows how lon it will last. Italy is at bay and breathin hard; France is worn to the bone; th United States must save the situatio America must see and settle for the wor what Lincoln saw and settled for Americ the world must be made free for all me 'we cannot exist half slave and half fre As a man who cares for Peace more tha he can express, I know that that Pea must be one that we can respect, and o children can preserve.

"We are in this encounter. Let us get far in that at the center we shall meet o conscience and our God, and not con out until we can bring for ourselves a for our children the Peace of the wor vindicated and secure".

At the meeting for women on Mond the Archbishop eulogized the women England "without whom it would have be impossible to have the country stand stea and keep the cause. Three times in Yor shire a munition plant blew up, he said, a each time the women returned there work, saying 'this is nothing to what o men have to stand over there'; we pro ised to 'deliver the goods' and we shall.

To the Wardens and Vestrymen H Grace said:

"Now that you are in the war, it belon to you to be the keepers of the Natio ideals, you must keep them pure and brig and high. You are the guardians of t conscience of Democracy; you must ke it linked in close touch with God. Y have more to do than to throw your all giance into the cause of the country. The are dangers in patriotic fervor. War br talizes as much as it exalts a people, unl a power is kept lifting them. You mu keep other citizens free from passi ferocity and vindictiveness.

"We are called to fulfill our Churchma ship in the most critical hour of the wo and of the Church. The old civilizati that ignored the Christ is being done aw the new civilization has now its chance heed Him. He is moving through t clouds of the War, seeking to destroy spirit that seems bent on continuing that was wrong with the nineteenth c tury. Now He is saying to us in H Church 'Ye are My witnesses'. Perso significance or the lack of it is no exc —as your Lincoln said, 'We cannot esc history, we shall be remembered in sp of ourselves'.

NEW YORK

Easter Day—With blare of trumpets, the music of a brass band and the singing of patriotic songs the clock in the Metropolitan Tower was advanced to three o'clock two on Easter morning. Thanks to the minute directions given by the city clergy, church people had not forgotten to advance their timepieces, and were on time at their morning services. Although the day was mild and balmy, there was an encouraging lack of display in clothes and flowers. The so-called "Easter Parade," said The New York Times, was hardly any different from the ordinary Sunday morning crowd on Fifth Avenue, and murmurs of disapprobation greeted any especially giddy Spring dresses or bonnets. In the churches the flowers were certainly far simpler, and to my mind it was a real relief to see flowers only on the altars instead of banking the chancel steps, and covering every available piece of church furniture with the "floral display" Pastor in Arbe has been condemning recently in these columns. There were men in uniform at all the services, many of whom were the guests of parishioners at dinner afterwards. The Easter sermons for the most part had a war ring to them. In the afternoon there were many children's services where the boys and girls sang Easter carols and presented their Lent mite boxes.

Crowds at the Cathedral—The great need of hastening the building of the Cathedral nave was again proved on Easter. Thousands were turned away in the course of the day, people who had come from great distances many of them, to worship in the Cathedral church. The number that made their Communion at one of the Easter services is the largest in the history of the Cathedral. The offering which as we go to press is reported as $7,500, with more still coming in, is larger than the combined offerings of all previous Easters in the history of the Cathedral. An effort was made for a great popular offering for the maintenance of St. John's, and although of course the sum received is not sufficient for all expenses, it is gratifyingly large, and will be a great help. Dean Robbins preached in the Cathedral, and the Bishop Suffragan preached at Trinity church.

Good Friday Services—Probably never in the history of New York was Good Friday so generally observed as this year. Dutch Reformed, Presbyterian, Unitarian, Swedenborgian churches all displayed signs advertising Holy Week and Good Friday services. Many business houses were closed all day. At the Church of St. John the Evangelist on West Eleventh street a union Three Hour Service was held with addresses by ministers of various communions. A rather interesting fact came to my attention in connection with the Three Hour service at St. Andrew's, Harlem. St. Andrew's, the oldest Episcopal church in Harlem, has never for more than thirty years failed to observe Good Friday in this way, and for at least twenty of these thirty it was the only church in Harlem to hold the Passion service.

To Mark Our Entry Into the War—A special noonday service will be held at Trinity church on Saturday, April 6, to mark our entry into the War. The rector will come up from Camp Upton to be the preacher.

St. John's Chapel Organ at Holy Rood—Easter morning marked the first use in Holy Rood church, Fort Washington Avenue, of the three-manual, forty-stop organ that was formerly heard in St. John's Chapel in Varick Street. It has been rebuilt and modernized throughout, and cathedral chimes have been added.

On Low Sunday special services commemorating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the parish will be held. At the morning service a sermon bearing on the history of Holy Rood will be preached by the rector, Dr. Carstensen, and at the evening service reports of things accomplished and proposed by the various organizations of the church will be made. On Tuesday evening, April 9, a reception will be held in the parish house.

Community Chorus Sings "The Messiah"—The Messiah in the four quarters of Greater New York, free to the people, sponsored by the citizens' Messiah Committee, Dr. George F. Kunz, chairman, and sung by the New York Community Chorus, Harry Barnhart, director, will have its Western presentation, which is the first, in the Great Hall of the College of the City of New York, Thursday evening, April 4, at 8.15 o'clock. The orchestra for the four productions will be the Senior Orchestra of the Music School Settlement, Arthur Farwell, director, with added wind players. There will be community singing and special musical numbers, including the Senior Orchestra, from 8.15 to 8.45. Admission for all four presentations of the Messiah will be by free tickets obtainable one week before each event, at special distributing centres. The chief system of individual ticket distribution will be through the public library branches.

The Eastern presentation of the Messiah, which is the second, will be at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, Wednesday evening, April 10. Tickets may be had for this production by applying on and after Wednesday, April 3, at the box office of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Joint Conference—At Synod House on April 9, afternoon (at 4.30) and evening (at 7), the diocesan Board of Religious Education and the Junior Auxiliary will hold a conference which is significant of the close relation which has been already established between the Church school and the Juniors on the "New Junior Plan". "Win the War—Win the World" is the topic of conference. In the afternoon Bishops Perry and Page and Miss Frances Withers will speak. After supper together in the undercroft, the simultaneous conferences, four in number, promise to be especially suggestive. At 8 p. m. Dr. Gardner and Bishop Thomas will speak. Bishop Courtney, chairman of the diocesan Board of Religious Education, will preside.

LOS ANGELES

Work of the War Commission—At Camp Kearny, near San Diego, several of the churches of different denominations have advanced one step towards the solution of the problem of "Church Unity". They have collaborated together in building a "Clergy Hut". Our Church is one of those to cooperate in the plan, with the result that we now have a resident clergyman for our chaplain at Camp Kearny. There are, I think, a Presbyterian, a Methodist, a Baptist, a Roman Catholic, and a Jewish Rabbi, together with our own representative.

But here, it would seem, unity ends—just where it began. The building consists of several rooms; and each clergyman is assigned to one of these rooms. This affords him a place where he can have private chats with any of the soldiers with whom he comes in contact, and where he may in a private way entertain small groups of men from time to time. Our share in this building has cost our Diocesan War Commission $550. This includes a room in the garage where our chaplain, the Rev. Frank Roudenbush, keeps his car. Camp Kearny is a cantonment of about 40,000 men—a considerable city in itself. Besides the great cantonment at Camp Kearny there are, in and around San Diego, seven other military camps, which form a part also of the Church's responsibility.

Dean Barnes, rector of St. Paul's church, San Diego, and president of the War Commission, is doing his utmost to bring the Church into vital touch with the men in these various camps. If the work continues to increase, an additional clergyman ought to be provided to help him.

At San Pedro, part of Los Angeles, there are four different military organizations, each of them having from one to four thousand men attached. These are: Fort McArthur, the National Guard, Trinity Camp, the Naval Training School and the Submarine Base. About $12,000 so far have been contributed by the parishes in the diocese to the purposes of the Diocesan War Commission. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew have appointed Mr. E. D. Williams of Los Angeles as their representative at Camp Fremont, Palo Alto, and Mr. Williams has gone to reside there as long as there is need for his services.

Bishop Rowe gave a hurried visit to Los Angeles, preaching once in St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral. He was on his way North, after visiting his son who is in training at Camp Kearny.

BOSTON

For Women Delegates—The coming Diocesan Convention will face an early and determined effort to have women delegates admitted from any parish in the diocese that wishes to send them. This action was urged last year in the form of an amendment to the canons, but was lost through a technicality. This year the energetic committee having such amendment in charge are putting their case before delegates to the Convention in advance so that there will be time for adequate consideration and the probability of early action.

The committee recommending this action to the convention consists of the Rev. Frederick B. Allen, financial secretary of the Archdeaconry of Boston; the Rev. Howard K. Bartow, rector of St. Stephen's church, Cohasset and voluntary chaplain at Camp Devens; the Rev. William Grainger, rector of Christ church, Quincy; the Rev. William H. van Allen, D. D., rector of the Church of the Advent, Boston; Joseph H. Beale, Esq., Christ church, Cambridge, and member of the Standing Committee; Mr. William V. Kellen, Trinity church, Boston, and lay deputy to General Convention; Mr. Ralph R. Nauffts, St. John's church, Charleston, and John L. Wakefield, Esq., St. Paul's church, Dedham.

Endorsing this petition of the above committee are the following women of the diocese:

Mrs. E. S. Rousmaniere, Mrs. D. D. Addison, Deaconess Margaret S. Lloyd, Mrs. Charles H. Baldwin, Miss Abbie Farwell Brown, Miss Florence Converse, Mrs. Ralph Adams Cram, Miss Ellen Douglas Deland, Miss Helena Dudley, Miss Geraldine Gordon, Mrs. Bertram Greene, Mrs. Edwin Farnham Greene, Mrs. Francis Peabody Magoun, Mrs. Lionel S. Marks, Miss Emily Morgan, Miss Vida D. Scudder.

The 1918 Convention—The one hundred and thirty-third annual meeting of the convention of the diocese will convene in Boston on Wednesday, April 17. The opening of the Convention this year will be in Trinity church instead of the cathedral. Regarding this change of place, Bishop Lawrence says: "I have made this change in the hope that all the members, clerical and lay, will find it possible to join together in the celebration of the Holy Communion, the service which ought to mean so much to us all as we undertake the work of the Convention".

The "Hand Book" of reports of various permanent boards and committees is already published and in the hands of clerical and lay delegates.

Personal—The Rev. Arthur W. P. Wylie, curate at All Saints', Ashmont, has left his parish to join Base Hospital Unit No. 44, made up from the personnel of the Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, Boston. This unit went to their training camp two weeks ago and will doubtless be heard from in the not distant future in France. The Church in this diocese now has three of her priests as chaplains of base hospitals sent out by large Boston hospitals. The unit from the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital was the first to go and had as its chaplain the Rev. Malcolm E. Peabody, curate at Grace church, Lawrence. The Massachusetts General Hospital sent the next unit and the Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, curate at Trinity church, Boston, went as its chaplain and now Fr. Wylie is about to go with the third of the large Boston hospital units.

Great Church School Service—Bishop Lawrence has written to the children of all the Church Schools of the diocese that on April 13 there will be a great diocesan service in the Cathedral at which the missionary offerings of Lent will be presented and the Bishop will address the children and others on the great opportunities of the mission field,—made incomparably greater by the War.

NORTH DAKOTA

Entire Easter Offering for Missions—It is always gratifying to find laymen alive to the highest interests of the Church and there is an increasing number of them who are thus awake. At the last meeting of the Chapter of Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, it was unanimously voted to give the entire Easter offering to the general mission work of the Church. If those dioceses which failed to meet their apportionments last year could only catch a little more of this spirit there would be no difficulty about the future finances of the Church's Mission work.

Clerical Changes—The Rev. Frederick Gunnell, who was recently advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Tyler and who has done faithful and efficient work for several years at Linton, North Dakota, has received and accepted a call to the Diocese of Washington, D. C.

The Rev. Frederick H. Oehler, rector of the Church of the Advent, Devils Lake, North Dakota, since 1914, has been called to St. Luke's church, Willmar, Diocese of Minnesota, and expects to leave for his new field of labor directly after Easter. Mr. Oehler's going will be a distinct loss to the district of North Dakota as he has not only done good and effective work in his parish at Devils Lake, but has been active in diocesan matters also, being on the District Board of Missions and the Board of Religious Education and also one of the examining chaplains. The best wishes of many friends go with both Mr. Oehler and Mr. Gunnell.

In response to the call of the general war-time commission of the churches the month of March was observed by all of the churches of various communions in Fargo, uniting each Friday evening in a service of prayer and intercession. It was a source of help to many to find that we could thus get together in these crucial days and find we have so many things in common. A large mass meeting was held one Sunday evening when special speakers were sent by the Government in the interest of food conservation. All of the churches gave up their evening service and united in a meeting at the city auditorium which packed the building and many hundreds were turned away unable to find standing room. There was a brief religious service preceding the inspiring addresses, presided over by Bishop Tyler. An offering amounting to several hundred dollars was taken for Armenian and Syrian relief.

Clergy in War Work—Quite a number of the clergy in North Dakota are taking an active part in war work in various ways. The Bishop, the Dean and others are serving as four minute men. The Rev. Jonathan Watson of Grand Forks is serving as chairman of the Junior Red Cross organization for the eastern section of the State and the Rev. Geo. Buzzell in the same capacity for the western section of the State. The patriotism of some elements of North Dakota may be called in question, as indeed is the case in many other States, but the rank and file of the citizens are loyal subjects and when it comes to the clergy and the people generally of the Episcopal church there are no more loyal, self-sacrificing, devoted supporters of the Government and "Old Glory" to be found anywhere.

Resumes His Work—The Rev. J. W. C. Johnson, rector of St. John's church, has been ill during most of the season of Lent. His illness has not been critical, only that he has been confined to his house and unable to take but an occasional service in his church. The doctors promise that he will be able to be on duty Good Friday and Easter Day. During this period the Rev. T. C. Page of Bedford, the Rev. F. H. Craighill of Wytheville, Virginia, the Rev. T. F. Opie of Pulaski, Virginia, the Rev. C. E. A. Marshall of Radford and the Rev. G. Otis Mead have given services at St. John's.

ERIE

Great Mission Closed—The Rev. H. V. Stowell, Field Secretary for Missions in the Province of Washington, has closed a series of Missionary Missions and campaigns in the parishes of Grace church, Ridgway; Cathedral, Erie, and Christ church, Meadville. Trinity and St. Mark's churches in Erie combined with the Cathedral for a city-wide mission with excellent results. Large congregations everywhere greeted Mr. Stowell, and the services were inspiring in that for the first time many people realized that the missionary work of the Church is only for practical Christianity. Mr. Stowell carries with him many charts and posters which vividly illustrate the religious conditions at home and abroad.

Archdeacon at Camp—The Ven. E. Owen, archdeacon of Meadville and rector of St. John's church, Sharon, is visiting Camp Lee for the purpose of looking up the Churchmen from this diocese who are in the draft army, and discovering ways in which the diocese can help them in the army life.

The Rector of St. Paul's hurch, Walla Walla, the Rev. B. A. Warn, officiated at the evening service, assisted by the Rev. The Rev. G. H. Severance reports growth in his field in the Okanogan country. He has an unusually large field to serve, to which he has recently added the town of Orient, where he finds a keen interest and large congregations are in attendance at the monthly services. Improvements are being made in the property at Republic, and at a recent fair held by the Senior and Junior Guilds enough was made to cancel all debts.

Patriotism of Roslyn—The Rev. W. A. Sharp, of Roslyn, reports that quite a few improvements have been made in the church. Bishop Page presented the church with a national flag. Eight men have gone from the parish to serve their country and their names are on the honor roll which hangs in the vestibule of the church.

Bishop Leonard Confirms Grandniece—During Holy Week the Bishop administered the rite of confirmation to classes in the Cathedral of All Saints, St. Peter's church, and the Church of the Holy Innocents, Albany, and in St. Barnabas' church, Troy. At St. Peter's he was assisted by Bishop Leonard, of Ohio, whose grandniece was among those confirmed.

Rector Emeritus Resumes Work—Following the resignation of the rector, the Rev. F. R. Hallock, the Rev. David H. Clarkson, rector emeritus, was asked to resume the active rectorship of Christ church, Schenectady. Mr. Clarkson retired from duty shortly after the completion of the new church, because of poor health, and he has since resided in Albany.

The Rev. Paul H. Birdsall, who is shortly to relinquish the rectorship of Grace church, Albany, to engage in Y. M. C. A. work among the American forces in France, was the preacher at the Three Hours' Service, Good Friday, at St. Ann's church, Amsterdam. Russell Carter.

CHICAGO

Churches in Third Liberty Loan Campaign—The churches of Chicago, including all the Christian communions and the Jewish churches, have been organized under the supervision of Mr. Albert J. Hunter for the purpose of furthering the sale of Liberty Bonds of the third issue. The city has been divided into districts, with a chairman in charge of each. The churches have been divided into three distinct groups: The Protestant group, under the chairmanship of the Rev. George W. Dixon; the Roman Catholic group, consisting of the churches of the diocese, with the Rev. Father T. V. Shannon, of St. Thomas' Aquinas church, in charge; the Jewish, with Charles Rubens, of Sinai Congregation, as chairman. A call for volunteers was made from every Chicago pulpit on Saturday or Sunday of this week. Sunday, April 7, has been set apart as "Liberty Loan Sunday" by the Chicago Church Federation Council.

Dry Petition Invalidated—The Chicago Dry Federation has suffered an adverse ruling by the Board of Election Commissioners in the matter of the "dry petition" containing 140,754 signatures, which was filed on January 31. In part, the ruling is as follows: "It is ordered by the Board of Election Commissioners of Chicago that the question whether Chicago shall become anti-saloon territory be not placed on the ballot to be voted on by the voters of Chicago at the election to be held in said city on April 2." The ruling was issued on the basis of the report of Chief Clerk Egan that "the petition is defective in that by the number of 7,515 valid signatures it falls short of the number of names of voters required under Section 2 of the Local Option Law". The dry forces claim that the petition really contains from ten to fifteen thousand good signatures in excess of the number required, viz., 106,427, but that from fifteen to twenty thousand of the protested signatures were invalidated on mere technicalities. Mandamus proceedings were begun at once, the petition being filed in the Superior Court by the Business Men's Committee of the Chicago Dry Federation. The decision has not yet been handed down.

Noonday Services at Pontiac—Noonday Lenten services were conducted the last nine days of Lent at Grace church, Pontiac, beginning on Thursday of Passion Week. The preachers at the services were the pastors respectively of the Methodist, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Christian churches, an Evangelist conducting services at the Christian church, and the Rector of the parish, the Rev. Albert E. Selcer. The director of music was Mr. T. J. Killin, the secretary of the local Y. M. C. A.

Oak Park Rector at Camp Bowie—The Rev. Francis R. Godolphin, Rector of Grace church, Oak Park, has been granted a leave of absence by his vestry and has gone to Camp Bowie, Texas, as a volunteer chaplain under the auspices of the Church War Commission. Mr. Godolphin has had some naval training, serving during a cruise of the U. S. S. Louisiana in 1916. The Rev. Sidney R. S. Gray, Vicar of Emmanuel Memorial church, Denver, will act as Locum Tenens at Grace church during the absence of the Rector.

French Army Officer at St. Peter's—The Men's Club of St. Peter's church, North Side, was especially favored in having for the speaker at its March meeting Major L. C. Eckenfelder, of the French Army, his subject being, "The French Army and the French People at War". Major Eckenfelder is one of the officers sent to this country by the French Government for the purpose of instructing the officers and soldiers at the various cantonments. A committee has been appointed to investigate the possibilities for Red Cross Work for men, with the idea of increasing the activities of the club to include such work. All meetings of the club are now open, all are patriotic meetings, and all are planned with a view to spreading the "gospel of patriotism" in the parish.

Girl Scouts in Liberty Loan Work—A troop of Girl Scouts numbering thirty-five, from St. James' church, North Side, of which the Rev. James S. Stone, D.D., is Rector, have volunteered the services of the troop for intensive work in the Twenty-first ward selling the bonds of the Third Liberty Loan. The girls meet twice each week for "military drill", with Miss Bernice A. Chapman as captain and drillmaster.

In the porch of St. James' church, which is the Mother Church of Chicago, there was erected soon after the close of the Civil War a monument containing a tablet bearing the names of all those communicants of the parish who fell in battle. A portion of this memorial was "marred" though not destroyed in the great fire of 1871. Recently the monument was decorated with the flags of the Allies, and the lighting system changed from gas to electricity, so that it might be illuminated adequately at all times.

The Passing of a Pioneer Churchman—Another of the pioneer Churchmen of Chicago has passed to his reward in the person of A. Tracy Lay, of Trinity church, Highland Park, who entered life eternal during the week just passed. Mr. Lay was born in 1825, and came to Chicago in 1849. He was a faithful worker and for a long time a vestryman at Highland Park.

ALBERT EDWARD SELCER.

UTAH

Changes in the Staff—The Rev. Maxwell W. Rice resigned the string of missions centered on Garfield, to accept a call to Wappinger's Fall, New York. Mr. Rice joined the Utah Mission in 1908, originating the work at Garfield and the smelter towns.

The Rev. J. Wesley Twelves resigned the care of St. Paul's Mission, Vernal, to accept work at Danbury, Connecticut. Mrs. Twelves was house-mother of St. Paul's (G. F. S.) Lodge at Vernal.

The Rev. Alfred George resigned the work at Helper and other "coal camps". These places are high up in the mountains and the altitude often affects the hearts of dwellers there.

"News" Enlarged—The Episcopal News is now appearing in enlarged form, under a board of editors appointed by and subject to Convocation. This is a co-operative venture, the cost of publication being divided among the parishes and missions in proportion to the copies received. In this way it is placed in every Church family.

Twelve From Hospital in Service—St. Mark's Hospital has given twelve members of its medical staff as commissioned officers in the Medical Corps and fourteen of its graduate nurses to the Red Cross.

New Church to Be Opened—St. Paul's church, Salt Lake City, will use its present buildings for the last time on Easter evening. The final service will be a "de-consecration service" authorized by the presiding Bishop, after which the building will be wrecked by the purchaser. The new St. Paul's will be opened on Low Sunday.

Work With Indians—The Missionary to the Indians, the Rev. M. J. Hersey, in speaking of services held at Ouray, says: "There were present Indians, cowmen, sheepmen, miners and farmers to hear what the minister had to say regarding those things that are really worth while. This congregation was seated on the floor, counters of the store in which the service was held, on dry-goods boxes, or standing against the walls." There are few spots left in this country where services can be held for such a congregation.

Old-Fashioned "Pound Party"—The Rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd reports an old-fashioned pound party in a new guise. Mr. Hyslop moved into Ogden after the "canning season" was over, but the good women of the parish soon remedied that by stocking the storeroom with a choice display of canned fruits and vegetables.

RHODE ISLAND

Two Serious Fires—Two serious fires have occurred at St. Augustine's church, Providence. One, on March 10, caused a damage of $3,000; the other, on March 25, a damage of $2,000. Both are believed to be incendiary. During the past year depredations upon the church have been numerous, and on one occasion vestments to the value of $70 were destroyed. Anonymous letters have been received by the rector, the Rev. P. G. Moore-Browne, threatening the destruction of the church unless it was closed. St. Augustine's is the only parish of colored people of the Episcopal church in the diocese.

Gratitude—The vestry of St. John's church, Providence, have put upon the records of the parish a minute expressing grateful recognition of the unusual service rendered by a devoted communicant, Mrs. Mary L. Smith. Many years ago she voluntarily took up the task of caring for the altar and for the vestments, and it is only recently that she has laid down the work. Such long and unassuming devotion deserves more recognition than it usually receives.

Quiet Hour for Auxiliary—A Quiet Hour for the Rhode Island Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, preceded by the Holy Communion, was held at Grace church, Providence, on March 22. The Rev. Samuel McComb, D.D., of Baltimore, made the addresses.

WESTERN COLORADO

St. Barnabas' Church—With the building of a house for the missionary at Sherwood Springs two years ago, a general improvement of the Church property became possible. Last summer the church was painted, and the interior freshly tinted. The means for this were most generously provided by Miss Elizabeth Remsen, of New York. This same lady is generously providing for the beautifying of the church grounds during the coming Summer with a hedge of barbary plants and rose bushes.

Appointed Chaplain—The Rev. Philip A. Easly, priest-in-charge of St. Matthew's church, Grand Junction, has been appointed chaplain of Company D, and is also one of the Four-Minute speakers in the moving-picture theatres.

Overpays War Apportionment—The district gave over $200—more than double the amount asked for—in the offering for the War Commission. The Ouray group of missions, Montrose, Olathe and Grand Junction, gave slightly in excess of $50 each.

LONG ISLAND

Killed in Action—"We deeply regret to say that Private John Le Gall was killed in action March 8." This was the message received by his parents a few days ago.

John Le Gall, who was twenty-four years old, enlisted last July in Company G of the Fourteenth regiment. He grew up as a Sunday-school boy, and when he went away was a communicant of St. John's church, Brooklyn, of which the Rev. T. Bond Holland, M.D., is rector. A memorial service will be held as soon as further particulars have been received by the chaplain of his regiment "over there".

A very beautiful service was held at this church recently when a tablet containing the names of all their boys who have gone to the front and a service flag were dedicated.

Novel Method in Raising Money—St. Mary's Parish Record, which is the paper published in St. Mary's Parish, Brooklyn, of which the Rev. James Clarence Jones, Ph.D., is rector, gives a description of their Calendar Club, which raises generous sums of money for objects outside of the parish.

The plan is to get every individual connected with the parish to give a penny a day for one year, beginning January 1, 1918, and extending to January 1, 1919. The rector is the Year; he is to do two things: first, to give a penny a day for a whole year; second, to secure twelve people to act as Months. Each Month is to do two things: first, to give a penny a day for the whole year, and second, to get four persons to act as Weeks. Each Week is to do two things: namely, first to give a penny a day for one year, and second, to secure seven persons to act as Days. Each Day is to do one thing only, namely, to give one penny a day for one year.

Each Day pays to its Week; each Week pays to its Month; the Months send in their money to the rector, who is the Year, and he sends it to the treasurer of the church, who puts it on deposit.

We are told that "an enthusiastic heart is worth more than a purse of gold, in work of this kind."

We hear also that the Sunrise Service held at this church on Easter Sunday was a wonderfully impressive one.

Great Patriotic Meeting—An inspiring meeting was that held at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Girls' Patriotic Service League, which is the girls' division, now numbering about 25,000 members, of the New York War Camp Community Service.

Senator William M. Calder presided. He introduced Lieutenant Joseph Wright, U. S. N., who organized and is still at the head of the United States Naval Reserve in the Third Naval District, of which New York City is the base.

Sergeant Ruth Farnam, once a girl of Long Island, and now the only American woman soldier, held her audience spellbound as she related in a most splendid fashion her experiences, some of which are heart-breaking.

George E. Battle, the colored soldier composer, now stationed at Camp Upton led, and accompanied the delegates from the colored women's branch of the Young Women's Christian Association, in singing its own "pep song", "See It Through". Miss Florence Macbeth, the soprano of the Chicago Grand Opera company, gave some beautiful selections. Cards were given out, to be signed by all present, promising to serve in some of the branches of service named thereon.

Thousands were present, and the enthusiasm was unbounded.

WYOMING

Fiftieth Anniversary for Wyoming—The Eleventh Annual Convocation of the Missionary District of Wyoming is to be held in Douglas, June 21 to 24 inclusive. This convocation takes on added interest by the fact that 1918 marks the fiftieth anniversary of the entrance of the Church into Wyoming. The convocation will be commemorative of this significant fact. Letters have gone out from the Bishop's office to all clergy formerly serving in Wyoming and now living, numbering approximately eighty-five, giving them a cordial invitation to be present.

Clerical Changes—The Rev. J. J. Bowker has sent formal notice of his acceptance of the rectorship of St. Thomas' church, Rawlins, and the charge of the Rawlins deanery. He expects to begin his new duties on May 1. Mr. Bowker comes to us from North Platte, Nebraska.

The Rev. Samuel E. West, in charge of St. Luke's church, Buffalo, has received a call to become rector of St. Peter's church, Sheridan, Wyoming, and has accepted the call, to take effect May 1.

The Rev. Frank J. Chipp, who has been in charge of the industrial work at St. Michael's Mission on the Wind River reservation, as well as doing clerical duties at Wind River, has been transferred from the reservation to Riverton, Wyoming, with charge of a long string of missions, extending from Riverton to Dubois.

LUCY M. TAYLOR.

EASTON

New Organ Dedicated—With a beautiful and impressive service a new pipe organ made by the Moller Company, Hagerstown, Maryland, and costing more than $3,000, was dedicated Palm Sunday at St. Paul's Church, Centreville, the Rev. J. D. Cummins, rector. The organist for the occasion was Mr. George Haydn Bromley, formerly of Detroit. The church was crowded and a special musical program was given, including a solo rendition of "The Palms" with a choir obligato. The evening service consisted of an organ recital with a short service. The organ is the gift to the parish of the entire congregation.

Ill Health Causes Retirement—Owing to ill health the Rev. P. B. Stauffer, rector of Shrewsbury Parish, Kent County, has resigned his parish. During the several years of his rectorship the parish has grown and developed.

Cathedral Reopens—After being closed for several weeks on account of a defective heating system, Trinity Cathedral, Easton, the Rev. J. Harry Chesley, dean, has been reopened for services. During the severe cold weather of the Winter the heating system broke down. Dean Chesley held the services in the chapel and special Lenten services at the Home for the Aged and the Orphanage. Christ church, Easton, the Rev. Dr. Davies, rector, suffered likewise, but as yet the repairs have not been completed. All services are being held in the parish house.

English Church News

Bishop Brent in France—If he had only gone to visit the American soldiers in France, it would scarcely be within my province to record the fact. But Bishop Brent has been doing a work among British soldiers also. His tour is described by the Rev. B. G. O'Rorke, D.S.C., in the pages of the Church Family Newspaper, and very interesting reading it makes. We read of the Bishop, traveling in the latest thing in American automobiles, and wearing the uniform of the American Y. M. C. A., explaining the American attitude to the war to highly appreciative audiences of British soldiers: why America came in, why she could not do so sooner, and the spirit which is animating your country today. Then we read of a sermon on the "two loyalties". We know all about it. For the Bishop left behind him in England the manuscript of a new book which he had written at the request of the Bishop of London, who has written the preface to it. We have all been reading "The Mount of Vision" this Lent, and our laity, who are accustomed to nice little books in easy language, have been a little bewildered in their attempts to sound the depths of Dr. Brent's thought. I could tell a story of a certain dignitary who has been wrestling with it—but I refrain. But even the most superficial reader must have caught up at least two thoughts, first the idea of the "vertical and horizontal" loyalties, which the Bishop expounded to the soldiers in a theater rigged up as a church (with the temporary failure of the electric light, leaving only the altar lights), and, second, the very striking compliment to President Wilson's famous phrase. If the "world is to be made safe for democracy" it is no less necessary, says Dr. Brent, that "democracy must be made safe for the world". A good many Lenten preachers will thank him for the phrase.

Democracy and the Church—For the truth is that even the most staid and conservative churchmen are worrying about this question of democracy in relation to the Church. The accurate mind resents the ipse dixit of, say, a labor leader, as to what is or is not democratic. Looking about for some principles to guide us, we cannot but be grateful to Dr. Frere, Superior of the Community of the Resurrection, for his lecture on the subject, which is reported in the Church Times. The Church, he said, is partly authoritative and partly democratic. Its authority is pastoral, on the model of the parable of the Good Shepherd. In this respect its authority is unlike that which is possible in the state—coming from the people themselves. But the Church has also its democratic side, for all members are parts of the Body of Christ, with the duty and privilege of co-operation. Dr. Frere traced this democratic co-operation downwards from the days of the Council of Jerusalem, with special notice of the practise of St. Cyprian. Sometimes it had been degraded into Caesarism, or in more modern days into "squirearchy". In such cases autocracy would rear its head. In fact, there had been frequent changes in the machinery by which the democratic side of Church government was expressed. The important thing was not that it should be uniform or traditional, but that it should be up to date and efficient: and if not up to date, it should be "scrapped". Modern representative methods were therefore quite admissible. The true democratic idea was government by both Divine authority and by the consent or by the co-operation of the whole. Of the two, co-operation was far more important as an alternative than consent. The two sides of the authority should be balanced, so as to avoid the evils of prelacy, clericalism, and lay sacerdotalism.

Preliminaries Towards Reunion—The name of the Rev. Spencer Elliott is new to me, but he is evidently one of the spiritual forces of the virile North. He is Vicar of St. Paul's, Sheffield, and Diocesan Missioner. A correspondent of the Church Family Newspaper gives an account of an address which he gave to the Sheffield Federation of the Free Church Council on the call to Christian Unity. The preliminary condition of all reunion is "some agreement about the Creed". Interchange of pulpits would be impossible without it, otherwise we should not know where to draw the line: Unitarians, Spiritualists, Mormons, Theosophists, and possibly Buddhists and Mohammedans would have to be invited along with Wesleyans and Baptists. We must rally round some kind of Christian Creed if we are to be united, and so far as our Church is concerned the Bishop's license is essential as a safeguard. In our Church, preaching does not necessarily go with ordination: it depends on the permission of the Bishop. As to ordination, Mr. Elliott made a powerful appeal. The candidate must believe himself to be truly called to the ministry, and the Holy Spirit must be invoked for his responsible work. Is not the laying on of hands the most suitable form? Are we not following the practise of our Lord and His Apostles? Apostolic Succession need be no stumbling-block if it were clear that the grace conferred is "not filtered down through the ages, cold and mechanical, but that it comes new and living, direct from God Himself". The authority to ordain seems, indeed, to demand a linking up, through the Succession, with Christ Himself, but surely Free Churchmen might accept that authority.

The Dean of Lincoln and Social Purity—All honor to Dr. T. C. Fry, Dean of Lincoln, for the brave fight which he is making on behalf of our soldiers in France. He has got two letters into the Times, and is determined to force the subject of maisons tolerées to the attention of the authorities. "If Americans can submit to reasonable control, so can Britishers." He will have it that no further permission be allowed for such houses to exist in the vicinity of base camps, and he calls on the women especially to help in this demand.

Union Noon-day Services

To the Editor of The Churchman:

It may be an inspiration to the readers of The Churchman to hear of the unusual and fine illustration of that "Unity of Spirit which is the bond of peace" that has been given during Lent in the City of Lancaster.

In St. James' church, one of the oldest Episcopal churches in the State, there have been held daily at the noon hour, beginning on March 18, union services, the character of which has made a distinct and, I believe, a lasting impression upon the community. These services were planned by the rector of St. James', the Rev. Clifford G. Twombly, D.D.

Dr. Twombly invited the representatives of the various Protestant denominations in the city and also a number of distinguished clergymen from the Church at large to come into his pulpit and share with him the privilege and responsibility of these "Noon-day Lenten Services in War Time".

The churches thus called upon were the Reformed, the Lutheran, the Presbyterian, the Methodist and the Moravian—two or more clergymen from each of these denominations.

The invitation was gladly accepted; and from the lips of devout, consecrated men of all churches messages of faith, hope and courage have been given to us with such fervor and earnestness that it has seemed to those who heard them as if the Holy Spirit had indeed laid upon their lips the coal of divine fire.

The key-note of most of the addresses has been the vital relation of religion—true Christianity—to real patriotism; and to that end the need of individual soul-searching and reconsecration has been emphasized; the nobility of self-denial and self-sacrifice reaffirmed, and the plea for greater trust in the Love that passeth our understanding and that has promised to do all things well for his children, has been earnestly made.

The very beautiful prayers—some original and others selected—read by Dr. Twombly, have carried the congregation very close to the throne of grace and have voiced the intense longing and desire of those who heard them.

St. James' has been filled at all these services with devout worshipers whose differences of creed have been forgotten as they listened to the same heart-stirring words and knelt side by side in fervent prayer. Surely there could be no more fitting Lenten services than these, in which the church thus testifies to the brotherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, and the unity of the spirit.

Letter from a Layman

To the Editor of The Churchman:

To the many who believe that next to winning the War the most vital problem of mankind is a realignment of the forces of Christianity the document on Church Unity issued by Dr. Newman Smyth and others comes as evidence that the men in the pulpits are fully alive to the fact that the Churches will at the close of the War be face to face with a crisis. Has not the time arrived for each religious body to decide what sacrifice is demanded of it?

As members of the Episcopal Church the first point to settle is whether we are to ally ourselves with democratic Protestantism or with the autocratic branches of the Catholic Church represented by the Roman and Greek hierarchies. This War has surely made plain that the future lies with democracy, and the thousands who have held that our duty was to stand pat in the hope that the others might find the great Anglican Communion a via media must recognize from the Pope's recent pronouncements that Rome will not move an inch in our direction.

Those who conclude, however reluctantly, that our Church's work must be in alliance with our Protestant brethren have then to consider what point of doctrine most clearly separates us from them. The Lambeth Quadrilateral settled that a score of years ago, and in view of the world changes which have taken place since then have we not a duty to perform in reconsidering Apostolic Succession?

One difficulty in dealing with this doctrine lies in the laity hesitating to propose action when in a broad sense the sacrifice involved in its removal falls almost entirely upon the clergy.

Yet the clergy have of recent years been laying emphasis upon the fact that every baptized Christian shares in the priesthood and many believe the outcome of this teaching is to be found in the great work now being done by our lay organizations.

At least the teaching of the laity's co-responsibility has tended to lessen their sense of the supreme importance of Apostolic Succession and it may be assumed the clergy have not been unaffected.

Many would welcome a change in our official attitude, but to others it means a complete readjustment of belief in the very constitution of the Church, and one must plead with these to bear in mind that the whole world just now is being forced to discard supposedly bed-rock ideas.

When the men to whom we owe such a debt find in the white heat of sacrifice in France and Flanders no place for the doctrines that hyphenate our Christianity, can we accept their sacrifice and ignore their plea?

Undoubtedly a variety of arguments can be advanced against our surrender of Apostolic Succession, but that is the stumbling block which the Anglican Communion is responsible for—what are we going to do about it? W. F. Ambrose.

Y. M. C. A. and Card Playing

To the Editor of The Churchman:

Permit me to express our sense of obligation in having two copies of The Churchman sent to our post. It is a personal privilege to read from week to week your constructive, statesmanlike editorials. Some of our periodicals seem to forget, in these intensive, iconoclastic times, if we are to face the future with hope there must also be a definite, constructive policy that shall find and build upon fundamentals. Some of our editors, preachers and statesmen are viewing the gigantic world struggle from a negative viewpoint, disregardful of the positive program which must find an internationalism founded upon justice, reciprocity and kinship of men.

In a recent editorial you severely arraigned the Army Y. M. C. A. for prohibiting smoking and card playing in the buildings. In the matter of smoking, your information is incorrect. Every building and hut used by the Army Y. M. C. A. permits men to smoke. They smoke at all hours during our programs, movies and entertainments here at the Presidio. The only hour in the week when men are asked to refrain from smoking is at our Sunday evening service (and this only in the auditorium set aside for this service). Card playing has been a vexing problem, to which we are giving a good deal of thought and attention. One of the drawbacks to card playing is the lack of room in all our buildings. At night, when the men are off duty, the buildings are crowded by men, reading and writing letters, attending educational classes, lectures or entertainments. The relation between card playing and gambling is one of the real problems which military authorities have to deal with. It is because of the identification with gambling that it is tabooed by many thoughtful military men. I asked the chaplain in charge of the Knights of Columbus work if they allow card playing, and he said they did not because they could not give it the proper supervision. Friends of the soldiers may rest assured that the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. is giving this and every other question related to the welfare of the soldiers the attention they deserve. The one purpose of the Y. M. C. A. is to strengthen the morale of our men.

We owe to the church, its members and ministers the very life of the Y. M. C. A., and in the best sense we are striving to interpret the Kingdom of God among men. We seek to interpret the Kingdom by gracious service, so that when the War is over a large number of men not familiar with the sacraments and worshipful side of the Church will remember gratefully that Christianity which was a ministering power while they were in the Army. We believe the vast number of men in our Army who are daily being served by the Y. M. C. A. will, in the days of peace, identify the Church as the agency which inspired the work of the Army Young Men's Christian Association.

ard Playing and the Y. M. C. A.

the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I have just read your article in issue February 23, "The Y. M. C. A. on Card aying". Having been in this camp for e months as Brotherhood of St. Andrew ld secretary, I feel competent to answer ur article from first-hand knowledge. do not speak as a defender of the Y. M. A. as they are able to do so, but be- use I do admire fair play, and also feel nfident that you have been misinformed. My work is almost exclusively in the rracks, and it is an exception to enter a rracks and not find one or more card mes in operation. I am reliably informed ny of these games are for money, in her words gambling. The Y. M. C. A. nnot prevent this, but by offering a clean bstitute in the way of other games, by least not suggesting the use of cards, pes to accomplish a good work. If cards re permitted in buildings it would tend encourage gambling, in a safe place, so r as military supervision and prevention e concerned. Gambling is forbidden in mp, and the men who are parties thereto so at the risk of detection and punish- nt.

Surely you will concede that an ounce of evention is worth the pound of cure.

As regards smoking it is permitted in "Y" buildings here except during enter- nments. At this time, ladies very often rnish the entertainment or part of it, d to ask a man to refrain from smoking no more than to ask him to remove his t. Smoking is permitted at all times in e social rooms of the huts.

Possibly some one "Y" secretary who is ore of a prude than a real man may have ken an arbitrary stand in the matter so r as smoking is concerned, but he is an ception, and I think the leaders in the " would like to locate him. He is not good fit in his place.

As for cards, I do enjoy a good game yself, but knowing army life, as it really its temptations, etc., I say, leave cards ne and out of the camps.

Corn Puffs

After Children Taste Them Once

This is a time to find out how good corn dainties are.

In Puffed Grains, for instance—Prof. Anderson's wonderful creations. Millions of people now delight in these airy, flaky bubbles.

But not one-tenth have yet tried Corn Puffs. And that's the queen of Puffed Grains. We think every child who knows all three would vote the Corn Puffs best.

Drop-Size Hominy Bubbles

The finest white hominy is made into pellets. Then the pellets are sealed in huge guns.

The guns are revolved for sixty minutes in a fearful heat. The pellets are toasted and their moisture is turned to steam.

Then the guns are shot and the steam explodes. Each little pellet is puffed to a bubble, eight times former size. The result is globules sweet and flavory, toasted, flimsy and crisp.

The flavor is like toasted corn flakes. But the drop-like form and the filmy texture add wondrous fascinations.

They taste like confections. Yet they are just corn hearts made delightful and easy to digest. Every food cell is exploded.

As a scientific food and a dainty, Corn Puffs hold supreme place among the corn creations.

Serve Corn Puffs like any cereal, or mix with fruit, or float in bowls of milk. Scatter them on ice cream, or in soups, or use like nut meats in home candy making.

But try this method too. Crisp them and lightly douse with melted butter before adding the sugar and cream. That makes the breakfast dish twice better.

And keep a dishful, crisp and buttered—like peanuts or popcorn—for children to eat after school.

New Books on Religious Education

By THE REV. ROBERT P. KREITLER

From both English and American publishers have come of late not a few books that give evidence of a common effort to revalue and restate not only the means but the methods of Christian education in the light of the transitional period through which so much is now passing. In brief, the underlying principles and actuating motives of religious education are being subjected to a scrutiny aroused and definitely guided by the trend of events occasioned by the Great War. On the one hand, there is the frank question of in how far religious education has become overweighted with inconsequential aims, methods and machinery to the complete obscuration of the social elements of religion. There is, also, a marked line of cleavage discernible in recent efforts to harmonize past theories both of religion and education with the ideas now appearing as essential in a preparation for the oncoming and new social order.

The preponderance of interest is, however, in a perspective that focuses religion into social interpretations. Not even manuals on familiar themes escape some form of expression work in life. This is seen, e. g., in A Black Board Catechism, by W. Fairlie Clarke (London Diocesan School Manuals, Longmans, Green), or The Catechism in the Bible, by Miss A. H. Walker, a well-constructed and helpful attempt to provide lessons for each Sunday linking the Catechism to Christ in the Christian year (this too by Longmans).

The curriculum, organization, method and, most important, the aims of religious education are again under examination, not judged merely from without but "scrutinized and revised from the sole point of view of religious social effectiveness". Spencer's dictum, "the function of education is to prepare for complete living", is being upheld anew as descriptive of all the educational purposes of the Church in the nature of her members. The best authenticated principles and methods of what most of us will call secular education are being drafted to develop the religious relations so as to function in a social way here in preparation for eternal life. We are not surprised, therefore, to find Gregory's The Seven Laws of Teaching (The Pilgrim Press, 75 cents) again appearing, revised and brought up to date by Professors Bagley and Layton, both of the University of Illinois, and making an appeal to the Sunday school teacher as an offering better to equip her for her own special task. Professor Emil Carl Wilm's little volume (published by the Abingdon Press) entitled Religion and the School keeps open the necessity for a place in the public school system for religion, and contributes a plan whereby some instruction may be given without being sectarian in character. The combination of philosophical and educational points of view in such a discussion freshens the whole subject. In passing let it be said that Kenneth Richmond has pressed into small compass an unusual amount of material in his The Permanent Values in Education (Dutton & Company, $1.25). He examines the educational system of the past, Greek, Roman, Medieval, the Renaissance, to show the great constant principles which, being permanent, reappear in the theories and systems of all outstanding educators. These foundation principles are the stones on which the education of the future is to be built. As such, the student interested in religious education may well examine these "permanent values" and find them not unhelpful in his own field. He may learn at least why education per se is the most interesting thing in the world to the man who gives himself completely to it.

For a happy combination of the practical educator and a Sunday school enthusiast I would commend Dr. John Davidson's Means and Methods in the Religious Education of the Young (Longmans, $1.00). It is a sign of the times from overseas. In spite of some points of view with which we might frankly disagree there is much for an American Churchman to use. For him the objective of religious education is a spiritual state of purpose, ever ready to express itself in a corresponding practical morality. There are two chapters, one on "miracles" and another on "parables," that deserve careful reading for they are both richly suggestive. There is no overstress of theory by this "Master of Method". It sounds workable. Of workable theories a most excellent book has come from Miss Mary Everett Rankin. The title at first seems a little misleading though perhaps not so much so after getting a glimpse of the unusually good treatment of her material. A Course for Beginners in Religious Education (Scribner's Sons, $1.25) covers the kindergarten age for a year, taking into account both the principles of pedagogy and the religious needs of the little child at a time of vital importance. Material, equipment, schedules of lessons, devotional life and social expression, have been arranged by a well-trained and thoroughly experienced teacher of small children. Miss Rankin has had a splendid background from which to approach her subject, being instructor of kindergarten education at Teachers College, Columbia University.

Primary Mission Stories, by Margaret T. Applegarth (published by the Reformed Church in America through the Board of Publication, $1.00) is an appealing group of stories, if we may trust the judgment of a laddie of eight into whose hands this book fell. With such fascinating titles as "The Cradle that Walked on Two Feet," "The Dragon that Swallows the Sun Every Day," "The House that Wears an Overcoat," etc., etc., and with "take home cards," teachers of the primary are here provided with good material for the development of missionary interest among very young children. For a volume of "sermons in the little" there is the Church Year Sermons for Children by Phillips E. Osgood, vicar of the Chapel of the Mediator, Philadelphia. He will be long remembered as the author of the Lenten series of missionary lessons. These Church Year Sermons could not be described better than in Dr. William E. Gardner's own "patronwords" (this departure from the usual foreword is truly refreshing), where he says such efforts as this will "awaken the sense of responsibility among children by filling their minds with compelling imagery, by training their eyes to see visions and by calling forth their deepest sympathy". Full of the suggestiveness of the Church's seasonal year they will without doubt stimulate others to build in like fashion, when speaking to children of the "middle of the road age".

The Beacon Press has just issued a manual likewise for children of eleven years with the title of Heroic Lives. A teacher's manual accompanies the pupil's volume. The aim of this course in a new graded series (Beacon Press, Boston) is to show that the two essential qualities, love and service, are found in all religions. The authors, Albert R. Vail and Emily McClellan Vail, claim that by presenting heroic lives in all great faiths the pupil becomes more loyal to his own. One wonders though, just what the effect will be for the boy whose conception of our Blessed Lord remains as incomplete as that in the chapter on "Jesus, the Heroic Master". There is much extraordinary exegesis in the teachers' notes which if placed in the hands of one untrained might result in a confused and misleading faith.

Of other books dealing with religious education there are three of more than passing worth. They are considered in the order of their value, the last, Dr. Coe's latest work on The Social Theory of Religious Education, marking a distinct advance in the study of the relation of religion to further the democratization of society. For throwing light on the composite character of American Christianity, Dr. Charles Lemuel Thompson, president of the Home Mission Council, has given us a series of studies in national religious origins. The Religious Foundations of America (Revell Company, $1.25) are the influences of stern dry kinds and character, traceable to the uplands of European history. But the uplands for the author are sources of "the Reformation principles, which are ry springs of our national life". Ultra otestant, there seems to be a neglect of at historical perspective which includes debt to times before Luther. Stopping in e events and personages of the sixteenth ntury does not account for all the influces in modern Christianity. It is interting to note that in a carefully selected bliography there is no volume distinctly aling with the Church either in colonial e or after. Dr. Thompson reminds us just now, however, and in doing so aces us under obligation, that our Chrisnity has arisen from many sources and would be well to remember that the posits left upon the American shores vary volume, color and worth.

A veritable mine of information and conructive programs is the Religious Educaon and American Democracy by Dr. Walr S. Athearn (Pilgrim Press, $1.50). For ose who are interested it comes fresh id inviting, ready for the problems with hich democracy and religion are cononted in a changing order. It is the swer of one who has delved deeply into e fundamentals and says "here I propose plan for the organization of religious ducation in an American democracy". very member of our boards of education, ocesan and otherwise, should give careil heed to what Professor Athearn has critically analyzed. His experience as educator in several fields helps him to oclaim with frank conviction for a deocracy made safe by a close union of telligence and godliness.

Of Dr. George Albert Coe's ability to row into the arena of religious education timely discussion there never has been y doubt. In A Social Theory of Religus Education (Scribner's Sons, $1.50) he es more than "start something". In a reefold role of educator, religious philosher, and sociologist he gives a most comehensive social vision. No brief mention what he has done will adequately show l he has attempted in rewriting the aim religious education, which for him "is e growth of the young toward and into ature and efficient devotion to the democy of God and happy self-realization erein". Professor Coe has taken a leap rward in applying to religious education e now generally accepted social interetations of religion itself. In doing so e has placed a milestone on the pathway the aims, means and methods in religus education. As hinted in the first pargraph of this group of reviews, a line of eavage is coming into view. It is widen- the distance between the past and the coming social order. Dr. Coe's work is elping some of us to bridge the gulf. It not a book to be read lightly, rather to studied with an open mind and accepted a challenge to get ready for "the deocracy of God", which term he uses inead of "kingdom of God" to indicate e essential idea of democracy as a part the teachings of Jesus. To sense the artling character and somewhat revoluonary suggestiveness of what he proposes, l we need do is to meditate a while upon e title employed to describe the full plication of social interpretations to the hristian message; think long and carefully on "a social theory" of religious eduation, and see where to it will lead!

The Episcopal Church

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH—ITS MESSAGE FOR MEN OF TODAY. By the Rev. George Parkin Atwater. 1917. Parish Publishing Co. $1.00.

In spite of the great number of manuals for use in the instruction of candidates for Confirmation, no book has before been published, so far as we know, on the plan adopted by Mr. Atwater. And anyone who has had experience in trying to bring home to "the man of the street", to whom they are thoroughly vague, the customs and teaching the Episcopal Church will feel at once, in looking over this book, that the author has faced that problem, and faced it in the only effective manner; he has been wise enough to write from the standpoint of the man he is trying to teach.

Departing entirely from the methods of other writers of books on Confirmation, Mr. Atwater has hit upon the happy plan of casting his teaching into conversations between a little group of men representing different professions who have been in the habit of gathering together in the evening for the purpose of fostering good fellowship. Among the problems of the day which they seem to be in the habit of discussing comes religion. And you feel that the author has merely recorded some of these conversations—those which have to do particularly with the customs and teaching of the Episcopal Church.

Any man to whom this book might be given, who is wondering what the services and teaching of the Church are all about, would find most entertaining and instructive reading. He would feel that he was one of that little group of men, including the Judge, the Major and the Rector, who had gathered about the fire for a pleasant evening's chat. G. E. S.

THE RESURRECTION. An Easter Service. Arranged by Rosamond Kimball. Samuel French, 28 West Thirty-eighth Street, New York City. Price 35c.

This is a Resurrection mystery play suitable for use in the church, which should prove suggestive to those planning a dramatic service for Eastertide. It consists of reading and pantomime, with only a few words spoken in each scene. Appropriate music is suggested, and the costumes are described. If carefully planned and reverently rendered, it should be very effective.

NATIONAL SAILOR DAY NOW SECOND NOVEMBER SUNDA

NEW YORK CITY.—For two years Sailo Day has been celebrated on the secon Sunday after Easter, a date varying fro the last of April to the first week in Ma For the ports on the Atlantic Coast th Spring celebration was quite satisfactor but as it is important that Sailor Day shoul be observed all over the country on th same date, a suggestion from the Pacifi Coast that a day either very early in th Spring or during the very late Fall be sub stituted was submitted to most of the sea men societies in the United States.

After considering these objections, an hearing from the various institutes involve the Joint Conference of Seamen's Soc eties for the Port of New York decide that the Annual Sailor Day should be he on the second Sunday in November.

7,095 Worship at Intercession Chapel

NEW YORK CITY.—At the chapel of th Intercession, which is known for its tre mendous congregations (and before th new chapel was built for its violations o the Fire Law), reached its high-water-mar this Easter. Nine hundred and ten wer present at the early Celebration of the Hol Communion, and 3,572 at the eleven o'cloc service. One thousand, four hundred an seven made their Communions at on of these services, and, including the chil dren's festival service, 7,095 were presen in the course of the day. This record wa kept by men with "tickers" at the doo and are not inflated, the vicar assures us At the eleven o'clock service about 1,50 were "standees".

RCHBISHOP'S CHAPLAIN AT TRINITY MAUNDY THURSDAY

ıe Rev. F. A. Iremonger Preaches on "Hills of Crisis"

NEW YORK CITY.—On Maundy Thursday Rev. F. A. Iremonger, chaplain to the chbishop of York, was the noonday eacher at Trinity church, which was wded with those who were glad to have s opportunity, the only one thus af-ded, to hear him preach.

Mr. Iremonger's book of meditations on alm 130 had already made many of his ngregation aware of his deep understand-; of the Psalms, so that it was not sur-sing to have him select as his text "I l lift up mine eyes unto the hills from ence cometh my help". "Help to learn, live, to suffer, to endure is what the rld is calling for today and will call for re and more as the days go by," he be-n. "The Psalmist's reply is 'Lift up ne eyes' . . . to the one and only Person l Figure Who can bring help."

'The supreme moments of our Blessed rd's life," continued Mr. Iremonger, ere lived on the hills". So the preacher ited his congregation first to lift their es to the hill of the Beatitudes. Here is ınd the keystone to the building of the ıracter of those who would follow the ng. "For 1900 years that Kingdom has nained unchallenged. . . . It was left for ıation 1900 years after Christ to put be-re the world a system that challenges it Kingdom; that gives government the st place, and substitutes the appeal to ght for the appeal to right. Even in their stem of religion they find no place for e Christ. If you wish to prove this, take y volume of sermons published recently a German pastor, and go through it sub-tuting for God the word Christ. You l find it hideous blasphemy. . . . But His ngdom is founded on Truth. To any less n Christ we dare not pray. For anything lver than His Kingdom we can not ask n to die. . . . Lift up your eyes to the ll where the Great Teacher first taught."

Then the preacher bade his listeners lift their eyes to the Mount of the Trans-furation, where men saw the glory of d, where they could understand the only ng worth knowing, the reality and might the Invisible Kingdom. Next the con-regation was led to the hill of Olivet, where ey could learn of our Lord courage to nk to the dregs the Cup the Father puts o their hands. "The men in the struggle liberty know what the hill of Calvary ans; the men and women at home know thsemane. . . . It has been the blessed vilege of my life to live with twenty men who devoted their lives to work ong the London poor. Of the eighty o have been with me at one time and other, almost like sons to me, there are ly three who have not been badly unded, and forty-one have been called give their lives. The mother of one of se came to see me. 'You know this is last,' she said. 'Yes,' I answered, 'you d five and they have all been killed'. I had five more, I should want them all go,' she said. So she passed from my m, and perhaps from my life, but I saw at it meant to take the cup of agony her hands and drain it to the dregs. . . . t we pass now to the hill of Calvary, hill of sacrifice. It is the willingness to die that our Lord displayed as well as the sacrifice of death which our men at the front are daily showing us again."

Mr. Iremonger closed on a note of triumph, for he bid the congregation lift up their eyes to the mystical Mt. Zion of the Revelation "from whence through God may you gain your hope".

Archdeacon Westcott of Norwich Dies

NORWICH, ENGLAND.—The sudden death of the Venerable F. Brooke Westcott, archdeacon of Norwich, has cast quite a gloom over Church circles in Norwich, where he was much beloved. His courteous, gentle kindliness won its way to all hearts, and his tolerance and broadmindedness earned the respect of the Nonconformists. His scholarly attainments were of the very highest order, and he worthily upheld the best traditions of Cambridge for sound and thorough scholarship.

Our School Service Bureau

FOR YEARS we have maintained for the benefit of readers of The Churchman a School Service Bureau, which has aided parents materially in selecting the right school.

Years of experience have given us a knowledge of good schools which school-seekers will find valuable, and it is entirely at the service of our readers.

In seeking advice about schools we ask our readers to give the following information:

The age and sex of the child.
The maximum amount you are able to pay.
The state or section of the country preferred.
If any special training is required.

With such information at hand, we shall be glad to suggest schools to meet the conditions.

There is no charge whatever either to the school or school-seeker for this service.

Fascinating Reading for Sunday or Quiet Hours

OF recent years various expeditions, American and foreign, have been at work in Bible lands, unearthing all sorts of astonishing facts regarding the life of the early Christians. The result of their labors is now reported in an intensely interesting volume,

The New Archeological Discoveries

by Prof. Camden M. Cobern, who is not only an expert at unearthing buried treasure, but a master of fascinating narrative. His pages are as thrilling as romance and as readable as a novel and they bring you facts of the most surprising kind regarding the life and times of the primitive Church.

ASTONISHING PARALLELS BETWEEN ANCIENT AND MODERN LIFE

First and second century manuscripts found in Egypt, personal and business notes, love letters, contracts, mortgages, etc., reveal to us that

Preparedness Was a Slogan in Pharaoh's Day and conscription was advocated by many as being a better safeguard than reliance on a volunteer army.

Excess Profits and War Taxes Worried the Ancient Jews
Trusts flourished and made huge sums while taxation to carry on the imperial government was levied even on necessities.

The Servant Question a Burning One When Cleopatra Reigned
They demanded days off and other privileges or refused to work, and were quite as independent as the help of to-day.

Graft and Corruption Ran Riot Under Caesars and Ptolemies
Politics was a recognized road to wealth, and frauds of all kinds were constantly worked on the toiling masses.

The High Cost of Living Was Enormous in Biblical Times
Three days' earnings went for a bushel of beans, and a month's wages of a laborer would not purchase a small chicken.

Millionaires Dodged Their Taxes in Rome and Alexandria by making false returns and got out of paying their inheritance duties by employing shrewd lawyers to prepare their wills.

Nero's Palace Had Elevators and Hot Air Heating to say nothing of a revolving dining-room, a mechanical water-pump, and an elaborate organ with pipes, stops, etc.

Woman's Rights a Two-Thousand-Year-Old Problem
A newly discovered play of Euripides tells us how suffragettes of his day revolted against man, seized the government, and of the result.

I CALL you to witness, my fellow-countrymen, that at no stage of this terrible business have I judged the purposes of Germany intemperately. I should be ashamed in the presence of affairs so grave, so fraught with the destinies of mankind throughout all the world, to speak with truculence, to use the weak language of hatred or vindictive purpose. We must judge as we would be judged. I have sought to learn the objects Germany has in this war from the mouths of her own spokesmen, and to deal as frankly with them as I wished them to deal with me. I have laid bare our own ideals, our own purposes, without reserve or doubtful phrase, and have asked them to say as plainly what it is that they seek.

We have ourselves proposed no injustice, no aggression. We are ready, whenever the final reckoning is made, to be just to the German people, deal fairly with the German power, as with all others. There can be no difference between peoples in the final judgment, if it is indeed to be a righteous judgment. To propose anything but justice, even-handed and dispassionate justice, to Germany at any time, whatever the outcome of the war, would be to renounce and dishonor our own cause, for we ask nothing that we are not willing to accord.

Things in General

A CHICAGO elergyman gives this account of infant resourcefulness:

His little daughter was feeling a bit under the weather one evening, and consequently was put to bed early. She had not been under the eovers more than five minutes before she called out: "Mother, I want to see father".

"Go to sleep, dear", answered the mother. "Father can't see you now".

In a few minutes she called once more: "Mother, I've got to see father".

"I ean't disturb your father now. He is very busy. Go to sleep".

There was silence for nearly five minutes. Then these words floated down the stairs: "Mother, I am a very sick woman, and I must see my pastor at once".—Everybody's Magazine.

Many interesting facts are brought out in the Rev. Dr. Waterman's article on "How Our Church Came to New Hampshire" in the April issue of The Spirit of Missions. Among them one of the most striking is that the oldest pipe organ in this country is owned by St. John's parish, Portsmouth, where it is still in use. It was imported by Mr. John Brattle of Boston in 1713. He left it in his will to a Puritan congregation, on eondition that they get an organist to play it. They did not meet the condition, and the organ went to King's chapel, then the Episcopal ehurch of Boston. Later it was sold to Saint Paul's church, Newburyport, Massachusetts, and then (in 1836) to St. John's.

This is the way the visit of the Arehbishop to Chicago impressed the society editor of the Chicago Tribune:

There were more interesting things going on last Saturday! First place there was the Archbishop of York, Cosmo Gordon Lang, who was lunched and dined by important men's clubs.

Late in the afternoon the Archbishop took tea with Bishop and Mrs. Anderson at 1612 Prairie avenue and a very limited number of prominent Episcopalians were asked to meet him. The Archbishop, it seems, is a handsome man; enormously tall, with a ruddy eomplexion and silvery hair that turned in a night. Everybody had to remember to say "your grace", for the Arehbishop ranks with the great nobles of England. His chaplain, Dr. Iremonger, is also a very attractive man, and made himself very agreeable to the ladies at the tea, as did, indeed, His Grace by admiring C... cago and praising up our intensive clim... and saying how superior it was to tha... Boston.

It seems that an Archbishop alw... travels with a chaplain. His Grace sp... at the Fortnightly this afternoon, it b... an extra meeting and a very extra sp... occasion. The New Archeological Discoveries

Their Bearing Upon the New Testament

And Upon the Life and Times of the Primitive Church

By CAMDEN N. COBERN, D.D., Litt.D.

With An Introduction by EDOUARD NAVILLE, D.C.L., LL.D.

An interesting and extended summary of the excavations and "finds" of the past two or three decades, in Bible lands and elsewhere, and a careful discussion of the light thrown thereby on New Testament writings and the living conditions of Early Christians. Shows how newly discovered papyri have revolutionized our views on New Testament Greek, and how the latest "finds" in cities and sites long buried have corroborated statements by St. Luke and others, geographical and political, and have shattered much destructive criticism.

FILLED WITH ILLUMINATING AND INFORMING MATERIAL THAT ALL PREACHERS AND BIBLE STUDENTS WILL PRIZE

Reveals Astonishing Parallels Between Ancient and Modern Life

From it we learn, for instance, that "preparedness" was a first-century slogan; that third-century plutocrats dodged their taxes exactly like some of our present-day millionaires; that conscription was a vital issue even in Nero's day; that women's rights were forcibly advocated before the birth of Christ; that the problems of domestic "help" and of Food Conservation were as difficult then as now; and a hundred other details full of historical interest and human appeal.

There are more than 100 illustrations showing numerous portrait busts, recently excavated temples, and other buildings, frescoes, sarcophagi, etc.; one particularly remarkable piece, of which three views are given, being the great silver chalice discovered at Antioch, which is considered by experts to be the finest specimen of early Christian art in existence.

A Veritable Mine of Homiletic Wealth

The mass of information here brought together upon the authorship, language, historical statements, and popular appeal of the New Testament books forms a mine of unparalleled richness as a source of inspiration and argument for sermons, lectures, and addresses, that will be of immense assistance and encouragement to every pastor. It provides innumerable lines of instructive and absorbingly interesting information that can be utilized to stimulate and hold the attention of thinking people of all classes. It puts new life, color and vigor into the Gospel narrative.

Primitive Christianity Made a Living Force

It makes the dry bones of history live anew and pictures for us the daily joys and sorrows of the early Church as intimately as though they were our own. Reading the letters and viewing the handiwork of these long-dead believers of our faith, we seem to take a new grasp of the truths for which they suffered and died, and to see as never before the wonderful practical value as well as the inward sustaining power of the message of the Master and His little band of faithful followers. The familiar story they tell assumes a deeper human interest and becomes a living, breathing reality.

Our Contributors

Lieutenant Harvey, who won the D. C. M. as a Lance-Corporal in the Gloucestershire Regiment in 1915, was taken prisoner last Autumn, shortly after his return to the front and a few days before the appearance in England of his first book, A Gloucestershire Lad (now in its fourth impression.) The German authorities allowed later poems, from which we have quoted the beautiful sonnet to One Killed in Action, to be sent home from the prison camp where Lieut. Harvey then was.

John Jay Chapman did a wide service to CHURCHMAN readers by his contribution in our New Year's number, Faith and the War. It was reprinted by Dean Rousmaniere for distribution among the parishioners of the Boston cathedral; it was recommended for Lenten reading by the General Board of Religious Education; and it has called forth many expressions of gratitude from our readers as well as from those who are not usually numbered in that suggestive group. In this issue we publish another article from his pen, Prayer and Prayer Meetings.

Arthur J. Weston, who has sent us a suggestive little article on Friendliness in the congregation, is a layman of East Orange, New Jersey.

The Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D.D., one of the leaders, and for three years chairman of the House of Bishops, contributes a stimulating article to this number entitled The World's Peace and the Church's Peace. American Church people always listen gladly to a message from the Bishop of Southern Ohio.

The Second Installment of Miss Florence Converse's romance, The Knight of the Labyrinth, appears this week. Many of our readers know her best through another exquisite romance, The House of Prayer, first published in THE CHURCHMAN in 1907, and the following year issued in book form.

We are in debt again to Miss Amelia Josephine Burr for a war poem, Our Prayer. Miss Burr is an ardent patriot as well as a discerning Christian—a good combination when it comes to writing on the present international situation.

These Suggestive Questions are given by Miss Skinner for those using the fifth Heart of the Jungle Tale in the class room:

Why are missionaries anxious to kill one lion in a neighborhood when they are seen?

Tell the story of Livingstone's bravery.

In what way did Bishop Hannington show great resourcefulness?

Miss Skinner also suggests these books of reference as containing more material on the subject:

Life of Livingstone, by Basil Mathews; Taylor's Life of Bishop Hannington; Bishop Hannington's Letters; The Lure of Africa; Blazed Trail Stories, by Stewart Edward White (Doubleday, Page Co.).

Taber Sears, who frequently reviews books on art in our columns, is an ecclesiastical artist and mural painter whose work is becoming increasingly known in the American church. The triptych in the high altar at the Chapel of the Intercession, New York City, and the Epiphany window in Christ church, Hackensack, New Jersey, are two of his most interesting recent works.

The Problem of Candidates

STATISTICS, generally speaking, must be taken with a grain of salt. Things do not, as a rule, work out to their logical conclusion. It is well to bear this fact in mind when we contemplate Mr. Micou's depressing forecast of candidates for the ministry. In the first place, we are in the midst of the war. Nothing that we ventured four years ago to predict about the world's affairs is likely to hold true; the cataclysm has changed the face of things. He would be a bold man who should attempt to map out the future of the Church or of society. The Church will be a different Church, or it will cease to hold its own; of that we may be fairly certain. If the problem of church unity is forced to the front, if it receives a sincere Christian treatment such as it has not yet received, none of the gloom to be gleaned from present statistics of the insufficient supply of ministers need give us any concern. There are even now enough ministers to go round if separated groups of Christians could be induced to worship under the same roof. The present situation, where in every village a dozen or more sparsely filled churches are being ministered to by separate organizations, not only wastes material but it so depresses the religious atmosphere that it discourages recruits to the ministry. The whole problem hinges upon the question whether the ministry and the laymen of our various communions are going to get converted from their present unhappy sectarianism to a generous, statesmanlike Christian handling of church unity. The world cataclysm is effecting mighty changes in the social world. Is it likely to leave bishops, priests and laymen in the same state of mind as that which they shared before the war? The risen Christ who is revealing Himself in humanity this hour, is, we know, going to reveal Himself anew to His Church.

So then, in the first place, we have reason to place confidence in what the new era will reveal. The mighty hopes and dreams which the youth of the world are sharing of a new social structure where fellowship is to be revealed in brotherhood, cannot leave the Church without a witness to that enthusiasm. A revived Church will not fail for lack of candidates for the ministry. Great tasks produce laborers.

But there is another aspect of the problem that has not received the attention it deserves. It cannot have escaped the notice of churchmen that there are all around us laymen who are consecrating their lives to the service of humanity who have no intention of becoming priests. Their skill and enthusiasm have been absorbed in organizations that not only are not under the direction of organized religion but are often suspicious of the churches. Many of these men are deeply religious. Mere philanthropy detached from religion does not satisfy them. They feel the need of the stimulus that fellowship in Christ's army brings. We all know who these men are. We have worked upon committees with them. We have seen with admiration their crusades against vice, sordidness and ignorance in all of our great cities. But they are not kneeling with us at the Lord's Table. They are not in the battle front along with us. It is hard to say whether we or they are the greater losers. That the loss to both of us is tragic, there can be no doubt. The war will not have taught either of us its great lesson, if things are to continue as they are. Settlement house workers know this. Every chaplain at the front is saying it.

Granted that the Church of the future is going to be hospitable, liberal and heroic enough in its vision to welcome these men and women into its working forces, the question arises: are we going to offer any training for laymen? We must not desire to make them over into priests. We don't want them to become ecclesiastical laymen. We need lay-laymen. We want laymen who will take our Sunday schools, our boys' and men's clubs and the settlement work of our institutional churches out of the hands of curates who ought to specialize upon other tasks. Laymen will do this work better than it is now being done and, if rightly trained, they will do it at much less cost. The institutional work of our churches is carried on with fine feeling but for the most part without great skill and with extravagant waste of money.

We know a large city parish which made the experiment of employing the services of eight or ten Y. M. C. A. students to teach Sunday school classes and to manage the boys' clubs. They did the work well. The parish house took on a "male atmosphere". The work done was rugged and fine. But most of the Y. M. C. A. workers lacked something which the rector deemed pretty essential in church work. It is not necessary to specify here what they lacked. Why can't our churches have a great training school for laymen who want to give their lives to Christian work under the direction of the Church? Suppose for example that the Brotherhood of St. Andrew were to create such a school—a school so thorough-going in its methods that men graduating from our colleges would perceive at once that the courses of instruction offered were not amateurish and cheap. How eagerly would the rectors of our parishes seize upon the graduates of such a school!

There are a good many men in our colleges, and there are going to be increasingly more, who have an heroic desire to give their lives to the service of humanity, but who are not finding any serious life work offered them in the Church. Ushering, joining a servers' guild and managing a boys' club under a curate does not take on in their eyes the look of a real vocation.

There is reason to believe that the churches are coming once more into their own. The fine-souled men and women who in disconnected groups outside the churches are devoting their lives to disinterested service are going to be made to see that they belong in the fighting line of organized religion. The twentieth century is likely to see great brotherhoods and sisterhoods within the Church fighting shoulder to shoulder with the clergy for the things that are pure and true, honest, just and lovely. They will probably not wear a habit and they will not take monastic vows; they will not aim to become near-priests; they will work as laymen and laywomen. Imagine Jane Addams at the head of such a sisterhood! Imagine some physicians, and social settlement workers whom we know at the head of such a brotherhood!

It is going to come. God speed the day.

German Sentimentalism

THE Germans have always been a sentimental race. A few generations ago everybody had to weep with Werther. Germany rained its tears upon the world. Now everybody must needs hear the Pan-German soul think out loud, nay, scream Der Tag from the housetops. The German to function normally must feel that the world is looking on. He struts the stage, rattles his spurs and sword, and shouts to his god and shrieks out his will to power. He cannot understand why we do not all admire or fear him. For a nation which teaches the blood and iron theory of society and which wishes it to be understood that it harbors in its heart no soft and womanish scruples about wiping out weaker nations and clipping off the hands of Belgian babies, the German is certainly the most sentimental of beings. He likes a theatrical Kaiser. Not only the Kaiser but the whole German people have been taught to attitudinize before the world. They go to war with éclat. They make their big drive with those spectacular accompaniments, befitting the sentimental psychology of Pan-Germanism. The universe is looking on. Even God, the Kaiser's god, has for the moment suspended attention upon other affairs and is fixing his eye upon the German legions and a German peace. The world must be made to know that the Kaiser stands upon a hilltop with watch in hand to give the signal for the cannon to boom and the hell of war to be let loose upon an expectant world. It must of course be announced for the benefit of the awe-struck allies and neutral nations that all happened "just as planned months ahead to the tick of the watch".

Compare with this sentimentalism the quiet, stubborn methods of the English! Read Haig's sincere reports! No braggadocio, no strutting up and down the stage for the world to observe! Without heroics and with humor the British privates and generals do their duty, but they do not talk—halting of speech but stubborn of deed, as the Archbishop put it.

But is it not possible while pointing to the mote in our brother's eye, to overlook a serious flaw in our own sight? In addressing the clergy of Philadelphia, the Archbishop of York made a remark that ought to give us pause here in America. "I have read the speeches", he said, "of some of your clergy, and I am sorry to say that they seem a bit too much like a mere flag waving and a beating of drums". There has been a good deal of bombastic patriotism among us. The descent from lofty idealism to sentimentality is quickly made. When we have paid for our high professions in the coin of sacrifice as France and England have done, we shall learn the lesson of humility. We must not mistake rhetoric for deeds. We shall offer our deeds; no one doubts that. But let us perform our task in simplicity! What we do, not what we say, will bring victory to our ideal.

The Will to Crush

WHEN Bishop Henderson inquired whether Mr. Wilson's unwavering purpose was expressed in his declaration that "the German power, a thing without honor, conscience or a capacity for covenanted peace must be crushed", it occurred to a good many patriots to ask whether the unwavering purpose to crush a powerful enemy is not dependent for its execution upon certain industrial and scientific details. The will to crush requires rather competent implements. During the early part of the great war our lecturers apprised us of the paramount importance of the airplane service. We were informed that each airplane was equivalent to thousands of soldiers, that the mastery of the air was essential to winning the war. Churchmen are especially interested in this matter because thousands of our own boys are in the airplane service and many more thousands will soon be at the front at the mercy of the enemy if we have the mastery of the air. We have no desire to join the chorus of panic makers, but it seems to us that a little more of the kind of criticism which is now being leveled at the aircraft work of the Government by such competent scientific experts as the members of the Aeronautical Society of America would be wholesome.

No words have ever been spoken by the leader of a Nation at war showing a finer spirit of Christian restraint than those of our President which appear upon the cover of this week's CHURCHMAN. They prepare us and our adversaries for the tremendous import of the final utterance of the President's speech in Baltimore—"force, force to the utmost". The people of every class will willingly give their lives to execute the purpose which our leader has put into words fitted to be heard in every corner of the world. But does it seem captious to say that those who are giving their sons and husbands have a right to demand in turn that the productive facilities of our great industrial Nation be utilized to the full and at once? Such revelations as were made in Congress concerning the aircraft department would, we are given to think, have caused in England or France an overthrow of the ministry. As a people we are infinitely patient with inefficiency. There is a tendency growing in governmental circles to regard criticism as unpatriotic, but this is a war of the American people; it is the people who furnish the man power. Is it to be lacking in patriotism to face disturbing facts?

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Bishop Randolph

AS we go to press a telegram announces the death of the Right Rev. Alfred Magill Randolph, D.D., LL.D., D.C.L., who for thirty-five years has been Bishop first as Coadjutor of Virginia and then as Bishop of Southern Virginia. Bishop Randolph has been an interesting and impressive figure in American Church life. During recent years declining health has prevented his making extensive journeys away from his diocese; his charming personality therefore is not well known to the younger clergy. He belonged to the old school both in churchmanship and manners. He was always simple, free from affectation and pretense. Many of the generation that loved him best are gone. It would have been for them to tell the place the kindly Southern Bishop held in the heart of the Church. That place was secure long before our generation began to battle with the problems which engage us. May we bear our part with the sunny humor, the poise and common sense that have marked the long life of Bishop Randolph.

The Progress of Prohibition

THERE are good and valid arguments against prohibition, but that "wine is declared by our Prayer Book to be a gift of God" is not to our mind one of them. Neither is it an argument against prohibition that wine is necessary for the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. In the mouth of a Churchman such contentions have a reminiscent sound of the debate in England over the Deceased Wife's Sister's Bill and the old arguments based upon Scripture in behalf of slavery. We regret that it seemed proper to a New York Churchman to use such arguments before a legislative committee in Albany. The liquor interests in this country have resorted to so many sordid, selfish and underhanded means to keep business going at the expense of public decency and the community's welfare that people temperamentally and conscientiously opposed to national prohibition have been pretty reluctant to throw any straw in the way of the growing national sentiment against the licensing of the sale of intoxicants of any kind. Men accustomed to their cocktails before dinner and wine when they wish it have more and more been coming over the point of view that if it seems to the best interests of the community to prohibit the manufacture of liquor they are willing to forego an indulgence which in their own case they can perfectly control. THE CHURCHMAN takes its position with those who believe that civilization can limit and control the liquor traffic without compelling abstinence by legislation. Perhaps that cannot be done. If it cannot be done, then by all means let us have prohibition. But the Episcopal Church is not committed by its sacraments or its Prayer Book to the "wets".

Ten States have at the present writing ratified the Federal Amendment.

The Prager Case

IT is gratifying that the press of the country, so far as we know, has been one in denouncing the barbarous episode in Illinois where upon very flimsy evidence of pro-German activity a German was hanged by a mob.

The will to savagery lies very close to the surface of life in a good many of our American communities. Every such outrage blunts the edge of the moral weapon we direct against Germany's record in Belgium.

We hope that Congress will hasten the passage of the bill designed to deal more rigorously with German agents in this country. The way in which many of our courts have dealt with spies and German conspirators has made it a pretty safe business to serve Germany's interests in this country. A few weeks or months in a prison is an easy way to win the prize held out by the Fatherland to such of its subjects as are willing to risk their lives in its service. The New York Evening Post reports the case of a German who in a public speech advised all American soldiers to shoot their officers. The Federal Judge released him on the ground that no American soldiers happened to be present to hear the speech. This kind of justice is likely to encourage mob law.

Another Scotch Divine

THE visit of the Archbishop of York was not yet finished when Americans had the honor of welcoming his fellow countryman, the Very Rev. Sir George Adam Smith, D.D., LL.D., principal and vice-chancellor of the University of Aberdeen. Unlike His Grace, Sir George was no stranger to the United States; his visits as lecturer to Johns Hopkins, Yale, the University of Chicago and the University of California no less than his writings have endeared him to the Americans. Like the Archbishop of York, the eminent representative of the Free Church of Scotland brings us a stirring message to "carry on", and to keep clear before us "the moral and spiritual issues that are at stake in the present conflict".

It Doesn't Often Happen

MOST vestries take the women of the parish for granted. Of course they are really very grateful to them,—that is when they stop to think. They vaguely appreciate the fact that it takes a good deal of hard work to keep the vestments in order, and the sanctuary clean, and the altar brasses bright; they know (especially if their own wives are involved) that the drudgery of a parish bazaar is great; they realize (if their own daughters are teachers) that Sunday school means hurrying through Sunday dinner. But they don't very often register their appreciation in their minutes. It is refreshing therefore to read of a New England vestry that placed upon its records a minute "in grateful recognition of the long and faithful service freely given by" one whose "self-imposed task has been performed with patient and loving devotion" in the hope that their word of appreciation "may add something to the consciousness of good work well done which has been her only reward".

Henry Scott-Holland

IN the midst of the great battle now raging on the Western front there died one of the most widely known and dearly loved clergymen in the Church of England. An appreciation of his life and work written by our English correspondent appears in our news pages. Suffice it here to record the sense of loss felt by American Church people who for many years have shared with Englishmen a deep veneration for Canon Scott-Holland.

At It Again

HOW persistent the Powers of Darkness are! How fertile in excuses! Assemblyman Zimmerman of New York finds it necessary for the furtherance of the war that women employed in restaurants attached to public markets work fourteen hours on Saturdays. His colleague, Mr. Soule, thinks it would help us in our campaign against Hun frightfulness to strike out of the restaurant law the night work provision and to amend the mercantile law so that women employed in lunchrooms or ice cream parlors run in connection with candy stores shall be able to work day and night without time limit. Doubtless this doubling up of hours might release some women for work in munition factories.

There are two other bills before the Albany legislature which would also help: the Brown bill would give the State Industrial Commission power to suspend provisions relating to children and men as well as women; the Klingman bill would do away with any restrictions relating to the employment of children under fourteen years in any industry contained in the Labor Law, the Public Health Law and the Education Law during the war and for six months afterwards. What a splendid program of speeding up: women allowed to work all night as well as all day, babies admitted to munition factories; no more waste of time by the foolish laws which permit valuable hours to be spent in bed or at school.

Unfortunately for Messrs Zimmerman, Soule, Brown and Klingman the Ordnance Department has enforced standards which the Defense Committee says "embody the most beneficial and far-reaching safeguards put out by a nation to protect its woman power". The provisions stress the importance of an eight-hour day and declare that the "standards of wages hitherto prevailing for men should not be lowered where women render equivalent services". Prohibition of night work is called a "necessary protection".

Unfortunately also, probably influenced by the Ordnance Department, the Consumers' League, the Y. W. C. A., the Council of Women's Organizations and the Federation of Women's Clubs in the State of New York, are working hard against these war measures fathered by the above-mentioned members of the Legislature.

A Magnificent Record

THE Church of England still maintains its marvelous record for missionary giving in spite of the heavy drains of war. During 1917 the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel received $70,000 more than during 1916. There was a gratifying increase from every source except legacies. The fact that these fell off $10,000 as compared with 1916 emphasizes all the more the splendid giving of the living donors. The total income for the year was $1,215,000. Only in three other years has the income risen to a higher level, and in each of these some specially munificent bequest raised the total beyond comparison. Never in any previous year have their offerings from parishes and the gifts from individuals been so large as during 1917. The year, with all its difficulties and disappointments, its trials and sorrows, will stand out on the S. P. G. records as a period remarkable for devotion to the great cause which the venerable society has for 217 years so successfully promoted.

"We begin our new year's work," says Bishop Montgomery, "in a spirit of thanksgiving and hope. It is easier now than ever before to plead the cause of the Church beyond the seas. Only those who do not care to have a part in Christ's final victory can venture to refuse to respond to His command, 'Go ye therefore, and teach all nations'"!

In the face of this do American Church people dare to condone the fact that there was a deficit in the 1917 Apportionment and that the 1918 Apportionment shows a serious falling off?

The Zone Postage Bill

OUR President in a statement made while he was Governor of New Jersey concerning the Zone postage system for newspapers and periodicals said: "This proposed new postal rate would be a direct tax, and a very serious one, upon the formation and expression of opinion—its more deliberate formation and expression just at a time when opinion is concerning itself actively and effectively with the deepest problems of our politics and our social life. To make such a change now, whatever its intentions in the minds of those who propose it, would be to attack and embarrass the free processes of opinion. Surely sober second thought will prevent any such mischievous blunder."

That argument in all its cogency holds now. The Zone system will strangle most of the religious press and many of our periodicals. Money plays altogether too large a part in journalism these days. Poor but honest weeklies have still their office to perform in a republic. One need not resort to lurid prophecy to make clear the danger. It is patent to all except the authors of the Zone systems bill.

A petition signed by the editors of The Witness, Southern Churchman, The Living Church and THE CHURCHMAN was presented to the House of Bishops asking the passage of a resolution of protest against the law.

We ask our subscribers, to whom the matter is vital, to read carefully the statement by the president of the Author's League on the back cover of THE CHURCHMAN this week, and to follow his suggestions.

The World's Crisis

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

OF all the Christian paradoxes that which centres in the cross of Christ is by far the most profound. Here we have the greatest tragedy in the world's history become the source and symbol of the world's hope; unrelieved failure transmuted into glorious success; that which to all appearances sealed the doom of a religious movement become its very dynamic; that which can be least understood or explained in connection with the personality and work of our Saviour the very thing on which we lay most stress, the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. Most of all, perhaps, we discern in the mystery of the passion of God for the salvation of man the one clear light upon the problem of the world's woe, the one transforming fact that reveals the sacredness of sorrow and the love in the heart of pain.

To all outward appearance the death of our Lord on Calvary was no more and no less a martyrdom than that of many thousands who since that event have died in His cause or than pioneers of truth and righteousness have had to endure in all ages at the hands of ignorance and bigotry. Socrates drinking his cup of hemlock was no less a victim of intolerance and obscurantism, no less a sufferer for truth and righteousness, than was Jesus sentenced by a Roman magistrate at the instigation of the rulers of His own people. But there was a difference somewhere nevertheless. That cup of hemlock has not become the emblem of the redemption of mankind, and the cross of Jesus has. Wherein consists the difference; why should the execution of one poor helpless victim of tyranny and malice—one out of hundreds of thousands upon whom was inflicted the very same penalty at that cruel period; two others suffered it along with the Man of Sorrows Himself—why should this one judicial murder out of myriads have become to us today the central event in the age-long conflict of good with evil, the supreme crisis in the moral history of our race, the grand declaration of our release from the bondage of corruption? It can only be that that death was more and other than it seemed. Nothing else can account for the wonders it has wrought and is still working in the hearts and lives of men and women, not to speak of human society as a whole wherein its influence is no less manifest but more slowly apprehended. Up to a point the passion of Jesus was simply part of the passion of all sentient life; beyond that point it was unique. In externals it was merely what attends all faithful service to an ideal; in essence it was something greater. We might in truth turn the statement the other way round and say that what Jesus bore on Calvary was the consummation of what humanity has endured since time began and at the same time the promise of our deliverance therefrom. It was not the manner of the death but the worth of Him who died that made the difference. All generations were represented in that sacrificial act. It looked back as well as forward; it gathered up into itself all the blood and tears of all the centuries and bore them to triumph. Calvary is not an episode in history; it is history epitomized. It is not explained as part of what man suffers; it is the whole of it.

It has been said that from all eternity the cross is in the heart of the Father, and surely this is true, but we only know it to be true because of the cross set up on a little knoll outside Jerusalem long ago. That which then became manifest as a fact in history had been a fact of the spiritual order all along. God is no silent detached spectator of the agonies of His children; like them and with them He bows to the law that only through the gateway of sacrifice can the perfect good become revealed for what it is and in the revealing flame into glory. From all eternity God is what He is and never can be other, but it will take Him to all eternity to live forth what He is; and among the things impossible to omnipotence, as we have previously remarked, is the task of manifesting eternal perfection without the cross. It is in the nature of things that it must be so; there is no avoiding it. The expression "The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" may be a mistranslation, but it represents an indefeasible truth.

When our Lord rode into Jerusalem on the first Palm Sunday He was, so the eschatologists tell us, engaged in forcing an issue. He was compelling Israel to accept Him or reject Him, to save its soul alive by enthroning Him or fill up the measure of its iniquity by destroying Him. On the face of it this is indeed true, but the issue was other and deeper than it seemed. It was not the visible with which He was mainly concerned but the invisible, not the material but the spiritual. It mattered little what priests and Pharisees might do, but a great deal what the forces of evil that acted through them might do. His real conflict was not with flesh and blood, but with all that in the universe was in rebellion against God, and upon His sacred head all the fury of that opposition was concentrated; either He must break its power or it would break His will. If it could have succeeded in making Him like itself in any degree, bringing Him over to its side in however small a measure, penetrating His soul, so to speak, with its own virus, it would have prevailed, whatever might or might not happen to the outward man. But this was just what it could not do. It could tear His life away from Him, wrench soul and body apart, rend the veil of the flesh wherein dwelt the Light of the World, but it was helpless to do more. Truly spoke the eternal Son of God as the ordeal drew to a head: "The prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me". By allowing evil to do its worst to His mortal nature, while Himself remaining unchanged in spirit and purpose and obedience to His Father's will, Jesus vanquished and overthrew it and turned its seeming triumph into utter defeat. Earth knew nothing of what was at stake, but heaven knew, and so did hell. It will take long for the results of that victory to be gathered in, but nothing can undo it or forfeit what has been done. On Calvary's tree all humanity fought and conquered a hitherto invincible foe.

The question has been asked, What would have happened had our blessed Redeemer been worsted in His lonely grapple with the powers of darkness as our head and representative long ago? And it is more than speculation to answer: The whole spiritual future of the race trembled in the balance just then. Humanly speaking, nothing could have saved mankind from utter decadence and reversion to a degraded type or worse. Creation would have been a failure. Everything pointed downward; corruption had seized upon society in every part of the civilized world; the forces of death were steadily gaining ground and icy despair had fallen upon all sensitive hearts. Jesus turned the scale and gave the world a new start, a new hope, a new life. Let us thankfully remember this in the dark hour upon which we have once more entered. He is the Throne and the Sceptre of dominion is in His hand.

To One Killed in Action

By F. W. HARVEY

MY undevout yet ardent sacrifice
Did God refuse, knowing how carelessly
And with what curious sensuality
The colored flames did flicker and arise.
Half boy, half decadent, always my eyes
Sparkle to danger: Oh it was joy to me
To sit with Death gambling desperately
The borrowed coin of Life. But you, more wise,
Went forth for nothing but to do God's will:
Went gravely out—well knowing what you did
And hating it—with feet that did not falter
To place your gift upon the highest altar.
Therefore to you this last and finest thrill
Is given—even Death itself, to me forbid.

Prayer and Prayer Meetings

By JOHN JAY CHAPMAN

THERE is a Cerberus who stands at the threshold of heaven. He stands with watchful eyes, and throat extended, ready to bark at the approach of any soul towards its native paradise—the Unconscious. The name of this watch-dog is Intelligence; but when Orpheus has put him to sleep, and he no longer impedes the soul's progress, we may, in his dreams, call him Intellect.

The poet, the musician, the conjurer, the sportsman, the orator, must all beguile this porter with the perfection of their art before the inward theatre of that art begins to take up the motion of the planets, and the artist disappears in his work. The fine-arts are highly specialized and difficult languages; but they have this in common with religious feeling that they impose their laws on the mind. They are man's masters, not his servants. They deal with him, not he with them. The artist is always wrestling with an angel, and conquers only through submission.

So of all religious experience: the symbols melt imperceptibly with the forces behind them as the mystery begins. In both art and religious feeling there is an element like sleep, which cannot be explained, but is an experience—a process which comes by practice and which practice—not doctrine—inculcates.

The art of self-surrender, the art of letting go, must be learned by every one in the inner chambers of his own life. Nature comes behind him and lifts each foot into place, saying "Walk now; you see how it is done". He catches the gift of submission from someone's example, from tradition, from the social air. The talisman is passed from hand to hand and from generation to generation, like a trade secret. If all the music in the world should be stopped for a century an infant Mozart would find it hard to turn a tune.

The wind bloweth where it listeth, and men are born of the spirit in various degrees and forms. Some men grow into a Platonic intellectual conviction that all we see and know is a mere cipher, a secret language which expresses things that are above our apprehension yet related to it. Through contemplation they draw life from the stars. Many men of another sort can express their reverence for the higher powers only through conduct. They are inarticulate priests of morality; but their heads are bowed, and their inspiration is indubitable. There is also a simpler kind of emotional and ordinary men and women, to whom God discovers Himself, and whom He endows with the language of prayer—a very old language, older than music or poetry and easier to learn and to understand

This is elemental religion—when a man is able to speak to God. Thus only can the insufficiency of his spirit be satisfied, thus only can his desire go out to all men at once. Prayer is a mixture of much silence and little speech; and when several people pray together their spirits intermingle and their minds are taken up into a still whirlwind. The place where they pray vibrates like a violin to inaudible music and a magnetic path is cut through the solid earth and divides the ether in the heavens beyond.

The cathedrals and books of ritual have been built and written to house this shaft of power. But the power does not wait for the machinery; a barn or a basement will shelter the current. All the services and singing, the responding and preaching in our churches appear, at times, to join forces with the carpets and cushions of the pews. They deaden, they muffle, they interrupt devotion. "I must kneel down now? But I was on my knees. It is time to stand up and find the hymn? But I was singing—" One often hears a truer service when a church is empty than when a function is in progress there. This is because of the stillness. Silence itself is a church and awakes the "service of the mind and soul", as Hamlet calls it. The manikins walk out of the great clock, and strange, powerful dramas that are independent of our will begin to enact themselves. A calendar is called, causes tried; litanies of errors and forgotten regrets are recited, and the desk of the spirit is cleared of business. One ought not to pray about particular matters, but let them do their praying themselves. If they have not the mettle to present themselves and make their petitions, let them be off! It is not yet their day. Very unpleasant matters arise and stalk towards us; things we had especially decided upon as finished take the centre of the stage and threaten disturbance. These, too, must be welcomed, for behind them come those we care for. You cannot take them up out of their order, for this is the spirit-world. These are the realities. The pigeons you release from their balcony will fly to their true homes. Cares enough come crowding. For what mind has not its cares and its creditors? What heart is there, not occupied with longings, endeavors, blessings? Let them flock and be released with prayer, and in the end, when they have exhaled themselves, you will be alone with God awhile and rise up stronger in mind and body. The old Jewish analysis is accurate: the sacrifice of a "troubled" spirit. So long as you are troubled you are on the high-road to power. I never get used to the strangeness of this discovery, nor to its prosaic truth.

In every church there should be some short hour set aside for silent prayer, when people might come in and go out at will and where nothing in the way of a service should take place, except perhaps some not too audible prayers muttered from time to time beside the altar.

Friendliness

By ARTHUR J. WESTON

HOW true it is that in some congregations there are members who hardly know each other. They may worship together in the same house of God and yet not have even a nodding acquaintance with each other.

The problem of creating a closer spirit of friendliness amongst the members of the congregation has been partly solved by at least one suburban church. There is a very flourishing men's club in that church, and the members took it upon themselves to call at the homes of those who attended the church. The parish was divided into zones; a special Sunday was set apart; the men sat together at the morning service; the sermon was appropriate; and in the afternoon the men went in twos to the places assigned them. As a result the congregation has developed a better spirit.

The writer had some objections to the plan at first; he hesitated at what seemed to him to be thrusting himself upon strangers or near-strangers; he was uncertain as to the kind of reception he might get. He recalled his experience from living in New York City where one might not even see, let alone speak to, his next door neighbor; and he knew these suburbanites were really New Yorkers. But one of the men in the club told him of a custom his rector back in England had. This clergyman had different members of his congregation call on certain other members three times a year, before Christmas, before Easter, and before Ascension Day, rearranging the groups each time. The results of this custom were a keen and lively interest in the church and a wonderful spirit of friendliness in the congregation. So the writer went, and he is very glad he did.

In the first place he found those on whom he called very human and very glad to see him and his companion. New relations were established; the church became a vital thing, deeply interested in the well being of its members, and above all a spirit of love and genuine friendliness was firmly established, making for the growth and revitalizing of our church life.

The World's Peace and the Church's Peace

By THE RT. REV. BOYD VINCENT, D.D.

WHAT has become of the Christian ideal of world-peace—now—in the face of this almost universal world-war today?

We cannot deny that our Christian hope has been disappointed. We cannot deny that in all this there was at first a distinct shock to our Christian faith. Our vision of universal peace seemed only an illusion. We thought of all the wars—many of them waged even in Christ's Name,—which have raged in the world since the Christmas Gospel of Peace was first proclaimed; we saw this last and most terrible war of all; and men, even Christian men, said at first that Christianity and the Church were consequently a complete failure.

But there were some other things that we forgot meanwhile. We forgot that Jesus Christ never promised, or claimed to be able, by His mere Word, to put an end literally to all war; least of all in any given moment of the world's history. We forgot that not merely so many centuries, but all time is included in God's purposes. He, with whom a thousand years is but as one day. We forgot how completely the Oriental mind thinks and speaks and lives and moves in ideals; and that this particular thought, then, of a universal peace, is not a literal prediction or pledge but only a prophetic ideal, never yet completely realized but always moving on nevertheless toward fulfilment. We forgot that God's own best gift to us men after life, viz.: our own free-will, is the one limitation on earth to His own will, His own Almightiness; and therefore that the same struggle between evil and good, between ill-will and good-will,—with its perpetual fluctuation of failure and success—which goes on in the soul of each one of us, must therefore also go on in the world until the good has at length triumphed. We forgot that that triumph, in the world—as in ourselves—must come about, too, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit!—saith the Lord". And we forgot what steady progress toward peace that Spirit of His had been making—and not least in our own day—in the growing desire and effort for world-peace; in the reduction of the causes of war; in international treaties of peace; in the establishment of a Hague Tribunal; in the idea of a Court of International Arbitration (though not, it seems to me, in the proposed League to Enforce Peace).

Now, no question but that this progress of the Christ-Spirit in the world has of late received a severe check. Germany, in spite of her professions and overtures of peace, has nevertheless really denied and repudiated that spirit. She has denied it in her whole modern political program and military temper; in her mad greed of power; in her exaltation of might above right; in her disregard of the rights of all other nations; in her ruthless trampling under foot of every consideration of honor, justice and humanity; until we see in her again, as it were, "the very negation of God Himself erected into a system of government". On the other hand let us not forget that all the rest of the civilized world is still seeking to vindicate what Germany alone repudiates. So that, in the last analysis, the one supreme issue in this War is now just this single universal truth, viz.: the common rights and mutual duties of all mankind based on nothing less than the one Fatherhood and one brotherhood of the whole race, in God. There is no other sufficient sanction for such claims and obligations. And it is a truth revealed only in Jesus Christ.

Let us Christians have full faith, then, that this spirit of our Master, which so makes for peace, will again reassert itself in fresh progress in the world. As surely as we believe that God still sits supreme on the throne of His own universe, as surely as we believe that truth is stronger than falsity, and love than selfishness, and good than evil, so surely let us believe that, in the long run, the spiritual forces which God has set in motion in Jesus Christ will triumph more and more completely in the world, just as they do at length in our individual selves. Let us believe, as the Pope has just put it so pointedly,—that "the material force of arms must" (at length) "give way to the moral force of right". This Christian faith and hope of ours have been put poetically but very truly and very beautifully, it seems to me, in some recent lines by one of our own modern American poets, Mr. George Edward Woodbery:

"I pray for peace; peace yet is but a prayer.
How many wars have been in my brief years!
All races and all faiths, both hemispheres
My eyes have been embattled everywhere
The wide earth through; yet do I not despair
Of peace, that slowly through far ages nears.
Though not to me the golden morn appears,
My faith is perfect in time's issue fair.

"For man doth build on an eternal scale,
And his ideals are framed of hope deferred;
The millennium came not: yet Christ did not fail,
Though ever unaccomplished in His Word;
Him Prince of Peace, though unenthroned, we hail
Supreme when in all bosoms He be heard."

So much for the World's peace!

But now, what about the Church's peace?

Does the fact that Christianity failed to prevent this war,—does this fact necessarily mean the failure of Christianity and the Church in the world altogether? I do not for a moment believe it. We have seen how completely men have misunderstood God's way of working in the world. But more than this. If this present hour is really a critical one for Christianity and the Church, I firmly believe, that just as so often before, this crisis too is going to turn in their favor. I believe that through all God is working His own purposes out, more wisely and beneficently than some of us imagine. The Allies, for instance, in their goal of absolute international honor and justice, are really fighting for the very principle inspired by Christianity itself. And the world is seeing and going to see all this more and more clearly. It is coming to understand and applaud the spirit of Christianity, in all its ultimate, world-wide bearings, as never before.

But if the Christian Church has failed to prevent such a war, isn't she still more powerless, so divided as she is now against herself, to reconcile again the warring nations? Isn't it only another case of "Physician, first heal thyself"? What then is going to be the effect of the War on this very interest of Church unity?

Well, whatever may be the original justification claimed for such divisions among Christians, there can be no question but that their longer continuance at this day is a burning sin and shame for Christians. The world sees it so, and says so; and Christians themselves have been feeling and say it, too, of late, with ever-increasing unanimity. Indeed, it is just this deep conviction which lies at the bottom of all the recent local attempts at reunion, at the bottom of the great National Federation of Churches in America, and at the bottom of that still greater movement toward a World-Conference on Unity inaugurated by our own Church in Cincinnati in 1910. Today this movement not only has behind it the formal support of all the great Protestant bodies in the English-speaking world, but the hearty sympathy, too, of the vast Orthodox Eastern Church and even of the Roman Church. We know this by correspondence; and only the War itself has prevented our formal deputations to each of these great Churches, in behalf of the World-Conference. So that with Christians in such a mood, the very felt impotence of the divided Church to do in this great crisis what united she might have done—this very humiliation, instead of becoming a discouragement, is really going to be all the greatest stimulant to Church Unity in future.

More than this. From the failure of all human devices for the good, men, not only in the trenches but elsewhere, are once more looking to the living God Himself for guidance and comfort. They are fairly crying out for Him—and are finding Him, too, where they least expected to find Him, viz.: in the very disillusionments and agonizing convictions of war. They have been face to face, "over there", with the realities of life and death as the rest of us here have not been; and, when the War is over, those forty millions of men are going to demand reality, too, from the Christian Church,—and she will have to listen to them! They are going to be impatient of all theologies and creeds, and will be satisfied with nothing else than the deep, elemental and practical truths of religion. They are going to be impatient, too, of all the distinctions which keep Christians apart. They are going to insist on Christian unity and even on Church unity, in some practical form or other; for, as we shall see, they have already felt its blessings. So that the world and the Church will be readier for it all than ever before in centuries.

There is the Pope's Peace Proposal. Whatever we may think of that as a practical, or even a disinterested, measure, still the fact remains that he whom the world itself recognizes as at any rate the foremost representative of Christianity and Christendom has spoken in Christ's name; and so put the Christian Church in the very clearest evidence in the possible determination of the great struggle.

To be sure, Protestant Christianity finds itself under such circumstances in a most regrettable situation. It cannot now speak and act—unitedly and formally—with the commanding influence of the Roman Church. But there are some other facts greatly in its favor. For it is a fact, for instance, that all the splendid work in the War being done by the Y. M. C. A. is really the work of the Protestant Churches; done not in spite of them, but just because of them. Otherwise there never would have been such a thing as the Y. M. C. A. And its work does, so far forth, represent too the solidarity of those churches; certainly so far as the spirit of Christian unity is concerned. For everywhere there are working on its staff not only laymen but clergymen, too, of every church name. And, finally, this body, acting in such a spirit, is doing the actual deeds of Christian fellowship, of Christian brotherhood, in the very thickest of the conflict. I feel sure, therefore, that we can confidently set its practical work of unity alongside the Roman voice for peace, and so expect from it as splendid a contribution to the ultimately larger influence of Christianity and the Church of the world.

Besides: in camps and trenches—in the solemn hour before battle—Christian men of all names are receiving Holy Communion at the hands of any Christian priest or minister without distinction. And isn't this fact, wrought by God's own providence in the very midst of war, isn't this act of sacramental inter-communion the very highest and most scriptural expression of the spirit of Christian unity? Isn't it indeed the realization even in so partial and momentary a form of the very end we are aiming at, on the larger scale, in the whole World-Conference movement?

In short, are we not justified in feeling that after all God is making the Christian ideal of peace more and more effective, in His own times and ways, in His Church just as in the world?

The Knight of the Labyrinth

By FLORENCE CONVERSE

III

Anon, after three days, came Sir Hugh into the country of the Slothful King; and this was a parlous neighborhood by reason of the wild beasts that roamed therein at will. And the hedgerows were broken and untrimmed; and the corn not yet planted, howbeit Whitsuntide was past; and the thatch on the cottagers' roofs had not been mended this half a score of years. Moreover, the land was infested with dragons. As many as seven of these misfortunate beasts were slain of Sir Hugh betwixt dawn and midday of the fourth day, and the hungry people came a-flocking like crows to eat their flesh, albeit the flesh of dragons stinks and is acrid upon the tongue, generating unhappy humors in the blood.

And it befel on the fourth day at an hour past noon that Sir Hugh was come to the castle of the Slothful King. And whereas by reason of the rust upon its chains the drawbridge might not be lowered, they let him in at a postern door.

"Sir," quoth the seneschal, "you are right welcome. Nevertheless, I beseech you come in quietly, for my Lord sleepeth late. May it please you walk a-tiptoe." All this spake the seneschal whispering.

And there came pages softly, did unbuckle his spurs and ease him of his clanking sword. Wan of aspect they were, and heavy-eyed as are all they that serve a sluggard lord. Nevertheless, when the King was come into the hall, he rated them soundly for that they had not awoke him to welcome his guest. And he made him good cheer, and they were set down to meat.

And thereafter, when they had eaten and drunk, as much as they would, the King questioned Sir Hugh Lepenseur of his journey and whence he came and whither he fared.

"Sir," said Sir Hugh Lepenseur, "I am a Knight of Arthur's Court, and I fare on quest to the labyrinth, if so be I may deliver your daughter of her infirmity."

Then the King looked kindly upon Sir Hugh and laid his hand upon his, as it were the hand of a friend, and, "In my youth I was even as thou," said the King, and he sighed. And there fell a silence between them.

Howbeit, presently the King was ware of his guest and spake again, saying, "Dost thou know, Sir Knight, that no man cometh whole out of this adventure? Hast thou seen those maimed and witless wights that are escaped by chance? And there be many more that must wander to their death's day in that prison house. Fair sir, it is a plague spot, a breeding place of disease and misadventure. I pray you go not thither".

"Gramerci, Sir King," said Sir Hugh Lepenseur, "How may this be? Thy father,—Christ give him peace!—was a good man and a merciful; and shall such an one of his wanton will devise a snare for evil's sake? Wilt thou say a bridge is an evil thing because forsooth a careless traveler is fallen over the parapet and drowned in the stream? It ill beseemeth thee and me, lacking his wisdom, to speak treason of thy father's memory."

"Sir, thou art bold," said the King.

"Sir, in thy father's behalf I am bold," said Sir Hugh. And the King hung his head.

Howsoever, presently he spake again, saying, "It would seem that thou hast thought much upon the labyrinth, Sir Knight".

And Sir Hugh made answer, "Sir King, I think on little else".

Then said the King, "Fair Sir, thou art young, thou are valiant, and I love thee. Abide here with me and I will give thee my daughter to wife, and thou shalt rule this realm".

"Yea, Sir," said the Knight, "When the clew to the labyrinth is mine, and thy daughter hath found her voice."

Then did the King wax merry, and said he, "There be that would liefer have a wife without a tongue".

"I am not of those," made answer Sir Hugh. "An it please you, Sir, I beseech you make known to the lady your daughter that one waiteth to do her service," said Sir Hugh.

And thereafter he departed out of the hall and came into the lady's bower, the which was seemly garnished and hung about with a tapestry whereon it was pictured in fair colors as how the disciples of our Lord Jesus Christ began to speak with tongues at the High Feast of Pentecost; and there was broidered with gold thread and with scarlet upon the tapestry many cloven tongues like as of fire. And the King's daughter sat in her bower, silent in the midst of her maidens.

Then came in Sir Hugh Lepenseur and kneeled upon his knee and besought her that she would have him for her true knight, and for a sign thereof that she would give him her token to wear on quest. Whereupon her maidens cried out in amaze, saying, "Madam, of a surety this is an omen, for none other ever came in hither to pay his devoir, and none other hath bethought him to crave thy token". And they set before her tokens a-many, ribands and scarfs and broidered sleeves. But she took her glove and set it in the top of his helmet, after the fashion of those days. It was a white glove.

Anon Sir Hugh kissed her fair hand and withdrew him again into the hall; and the King's daughter and her maidens were set down as tofore to their needlework, for they were busy about a bridal veil, the which was of a silken web, fine-spun, but the border was of cunning stitches set in a pattern of an ancient proverb. And these are the words of the proverb that the maidens were broidering in the border of the veil, to wit, "If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am become sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal".

IV

And when the morrow was come, Sir Hugh arose up betimes and having heard mass he went out afoot at the postern door. For he that would thread the labyrinth must go afoot through those narrow ways. And when he was come to the turn of the road, the Knight looked back, and behold! the King's daughter stood upon the battlements sole alone. And either waved other a farewell. Howbeit, the lord of that castle lay fast asleep in his bed.

Now within a while the road gan wind around and about a hill, and at the top of the hill up rose the labyrinth, for there was naught between it and the sky. In the manner of a castle was it builded, notwithstanding it had nor tower nor turret, but it was larger than any castle. And the labyrinth was of stone, gray and white, but for the most part gray; a soft stone easily carven and graved upon. And there came running down the hill a man out of his wits, that mouthed and mowed and fell in a fit; wherefore a countryman that came by that way said, "Here is another o' they crazy fools couldn't let well enough alone". And Sir Hugh and the countryman loosed the man's habergeon and poured water on his head, but to none avail, for he died or ever he came out of his fit. And the countryman took the dead body on his back and went his way, grunting and groaning, down the hill. But Sir Hugh climbed upward and presently came to the gate of the labyrinth whereon it was written, "The House Appointed for All Living". And Sir Hugh stood long without the gate pondering upon this saying, but he made naught of it; whereupon, it being now about noon, and the sun high in heaven, and none beside to say him nay,—for there was no porter at the gate,—he signed the sign of the cross upon brow and lips and breast, and set foot over the threshold of the labyrinth. Now within there was shelter from the sun, and a multitude of narrow alleys and passages that twisted hither and yon.

And the Knight began to go up and down and in and out among these twisting ways, but whether he went north or south or west or east he knew not; howsoever, thrice within the hour he came back again by chance and confusion to the gate of the labyrinth; and thrice he said within his heart, "I may go forth an I will". And thrice he turned him back again hardily into that maze. And after the third time he came no more to the gate.

Now the walls of the passageways within the labyrinth being of that same gray stone and white, but for the most part gray, the which is easily carven and graved upon, there had a-many knights writ their names for a pastime with their daggers' point upon the walls. And some had graven true lovers' knots; and some had carved a picture of their shield, quartered, with the heraldic devices; and some had writ love songs in the French tongue; and one had set the letters of the alphabet in a row, and beneath them symbols and signs of letters that Sir Hugh might not read; and one had covered a side of the wall for a ten-foot space with Arabic numbers; and there were proverbs writ in Latin, and lewd sayings and old saws a-plenty; prayers were there likewise and hymns of the church on these walls, and curses and frantic babble of words. On either side the wall, as he went up and down the narrow ways, the thoughts of men followed along beside Sir Hugh Lepenseur; and ever and anon when he was set down to rest, he took his dagger and writ with the point upon the wall. "Cognosco, ergo sum," writ Sir Hugh.

Neither was he sole alone in that place, for the labyrinth was full of folk on quest. Sir Hugh met them at every turn, and many there were that came after him and passed him by. This one carolled gaily as he trod the twisting path, and that one sat sombre by the wall in a blind alley and sulked; this one walked warily, peering around the corner, and that one strode onward with clanking footsteps that echoed noisily; this one ran screaming, he wot not whither, and foamed at the mouth and beat his head against the gray stones, and that one spake Sir Hugh foul, saying, "An I may escape this weary tangle, the King's daughter shall go speechless to her death's day, for all of me".

"Sir", said Sir Hugh Lepenseur, "I have sworn an oath to linger for no quarrels the while I am on quest, moreover these lanes be too narrow to draw sword. Howbeit, when I am come safe out of this adventure, by God's grace, I will avenge me upon your body for this scorning of my lady. Sir, I pray you of your name and your whereabout", said Sir Hugh.

"Sir", said that Knight, "I am own cousin to the Slothful King and I dwell in his castle. I pray God you find me at home".

And they went each his way.

Our Prayer

By AMELIA JOSEPHINE BURR

PEACE, peace, you cry—if war today should cease
Would you dare call it peace?
Weary? O God, art Thou not weary then
Of all the lust and cruelty of men,
And all the selfish blindness that can bear
No pain that it must share?
What is our little part
Of the great burden on Thy Father-heart?
Give us the strength to hate—
Not men and women, weak as we are weak,
Doing the wrong their spirits shun—we seek
The high endurance of Thy hate divine
Of evil in the soul and in the State.
Thine enemy be mine,
Thou God of Mercy who couldst understand
The absolute reality of Hell!
Give us to do Thy work and do it well
With brain and heart and hand
Until we die, and dying, leave the task
To other and to stronger souls. We ask
This boon supreme of Thee—to fight Thy fight
Unconquered, to the triumph of the right;
To give our all—what, shall Thy war be lost
Because we count the cost?
Ah, no! Whatever we have owed to Thee
Be this our final cause of thankfulness,
That howsoever great our offering be
Thou wilt have all, no less.
If we should fail Thee in the hour of stress
Ours be the loss not Thine. Give us, O God,
Strong hands to wield Thy rod
Upon the devils who defile Thy shrine
The world, till it again be wholly Thine.

Heart of the Jungle Tales—V

By ADA M. SKINNER

With Africa's King of Beasts

THE brave missionaries who first blazed their way through forest and jungle, through scrub and brush, along the streams and across the veldt, had many a tale to tell of adventure with the great beasts while they were on the march. Elephants, buffalo, and antelopes were met with constantly, sometimes in herds, sometimes singly. There were also crocodiles and hippopotamuses. The yelp of the leopard after its prey and the roar of the lion became familiar sounds to their ears. Stories of great bravery and daring in the encounter with wild animals, especially the King of Beasts, abound in the accounts of early missionary life in Central Africa.

The African lion is an ever-present source of danger to missionaries and villagers. Often he grows so bold that he ventures out in the daytime and frequents the stations. It is well known, however, that if one lion is killed the others in that neighborhood take the hint and leave that part of the country. It was for this reason that Livingstone was anxious that one of the lions around Matsoba should be killed, and although he succeeded in carrying out his desire, he almost lost his own life in doing so. This is the story.

Livingstone was so impressed with the beauty of the land at Matsoba that he decided to place a missionary station there. He found out later that the lions were as fond of that place as he was; that, in fact, the people of the village—the Bakatla—were greatly troubled night and day by lions which had been destroying their cattle in great numbers and frightening their women and children.

One day while Livingstone was teaching the Bakatla men how to dig canals for their gardens, a ferocious lion leaped among the herds and killed many cattle. It was an unusual thing to have a lion make an attack by day. The excited villagers for that reason thought they were bewitched and, shaking with fear, they called out, "Who ever saw the lion, the lord of the night, kill our cattle by day?"

Many joined immediately in the hunt for one of the lions, but they were so filled with terror that they accomplished nothing. Livingstone made up his mind that he would join the lion-hunt himself in order to inspire his men with courage and help them in getting rid of the danger.

He saw the lions on a little hill covered with trees. With Mebalwe, a Bakatla man, and his guns he waited while the other men of the village closed round the hill. One of the lions was seated in a piece of rock within the now closed circle of men. Mebalwe fired. The ball struck the rock on which the animal was sitting. He leaped away, broke through the opening circle and escaped unhurt. Two other lions burst through the circle and escaped in the same way, for the hunters, still believing the lions bewitched, feared to spear them in their attempt to get away.

Seeing that he could not get them to kill one of the lions, Livingstone and his party started toward the village. The rest of the story he shall give you in his own words:

"In going round the end of the hill, I saw one of the beasts sitting on a piece of rock as before, but he had a little bush in front. Being about thirty yards off, I took a good aim at his body through the bush, and fired both barrels into it. The men then called out, 'He is shot! he is shot!' . . . I saw a lion's tail erected in anger behind the bush, and, turning to the people said, 'Stop a little till I load again.' When in the act of ramming down the bullet, I heard a shout. Starting and looking half round, I saw the lion just in the act of springing upon me. I was upon a little height. He caught my shoulder as he sprang and we both came to the ground below together. Growling horribly close to my ear, he shook me as a terrier does a rat. The shock produced a stupor similar to that which seems to be felt by a mouse after the first shake of a cat. It caused a sort of dreaminess in which there was no sense of pain nor feeling of terror. Turning round to relieve myself of the weight, as he had one paw on the back of my head, I saw his eyes directed to Mebalwe, who was trying to shoot him at a distance of ten or fifteen yards. His gun missed fire in both barrels; the lion immediately left me and, attacking Mebalwe, hit his thigh. Another man attempted to spear the lion while he was biting Mebalwe. He left Mebalwe and caught this man by the shoulder, but at that moment the bullets he had received took effect and he fell down dead."

Livingstone's victory over the king of beasts was rather dearly bought. The bone at the top of his left arm was crushed to splinters by the jaws of the lion, and there were eleven flesh wounds made by his teeth. The Bakatla men said it was the largest lion they had ever seen.

Bishop Hannington, the beloved missionary, in one of his letters to the children at home, tells a most thrilling story of an encounter with lions which took place one day when he had gone out to shoot, accompanied by one boy.

"Presently, while hunting for insects in a short mimosa tangle up to the knee, I disturbed a strange-looking animal, about the size of a sheep, brownish color, long tail, short legs, feline in aspect and movement, but quite strange to me. I took my gun and shot it dead. Away tore my boy as fast as his legs would carry him, terrified beyond measure at what I had done. I had killed the cub of a lioness! Terror was written on every line and feature of the lad. I turned to flee and had gone a few paces, when I heard a savage growl and a tremendous lioness bounded straight for me.

"In spite of the loaded gun in my hand, it seemed to me that I was lost. The boy knew more about lions than I did and his fear knew no bounds. I began to realize that I was in a dangerous situation, for a lioness robbed of her cubs is not the most gentle creature to deal with. I retreated hastily. No, I will out with it, children, in plain language—I ran five or six steps; every step she gained on me and the growls grew fiercer and louder. Did I say she gained? They gained, for the lion was close behind her, and both were making straight for me. Will they pause at the dead cub? No, they take no notice of it; they come at me. What is to be done?

"It now struck me that retreat was altogether wrong. Like a cat with a mouse, it induced them to follow. Escape in this manner was impossible. I halted and just at that moment came a panting yell from my boy, 'Hakuna! Kimbiu!' I thought what he said might be roughly, though wrongly translated, 'Don't run away!', instead of which he meant to say, in fact, did say, 'No! Run away!'.

"I have no hesitation in saying that a stop wrongly read but rightly made saved my life. I had determined to face it out, and now strengthened, as I thought, by his advice, I made a full stop and turned sharply on them. This new policy on my part caused them to check instantly. They now stood lashing their tails and growling but a few paces from me. There we stood. They evidently thought that it was unsafe to advance upon this strange and new being, the like of which they had never seen before. I cannot tell you either how long a time we stood face to face.

"And this is how it ended: After an interval I decided not to fire at them but to try instead what a little noise would do. I suddenly threw up my arms in the air, set up a yell, and danced and shouted like a madman. Do you know, the lions were so astonished to see your sober old uncle acting in such a strange way that they both bounded into the bushes as if they had been shot, and I saw them no more!"

"NO patriotism and no politics are trustworthy unless they are kept sweet and clean by a real and fundamental love for the things that are diminished by being shared—such as kindness, beauty, truth."

An Appeal to the House of Bishops

AT this epochal hour the Church of God is confronted with a great emergency. The war summons the churches to make common cause against a de-Christianized world; yet we gratefully recognize that a spirit of mutual trust, comradeship and devotion is increasingly prevalent throughout all communions. But the awakened spirit does nothing, and if not made incarnate it may vanish from us. Both a reason for rejoicing and cause for anxious foreboding are put directly before us in this recent remark of an Anglican chaplain: "The longer I stay at the front, the more I care for Christianity and the less I care for the Church of England". Shall it indeed come to pass that after the war our returning soldiers and the multitude of the people shall believe more in Christianity and care little or nothing for the Church?

These two prospects, either of triumph through united action or of tragic loss through divided counsels, now lie before the churches; and between these two the decision must be made. At the forefront therefore of our communication to your Episcopate we would put the paramount obligation of the churches to lift up above all, and at the cost of any ecclesiastical sacrifices, the Church of God as the visible embodiment in power of Christianity.

We may ask for our communication your especial consideration because we must recognize the fact which we all alike deplore, that the inherited division between the Episcopal ministry and the ministries of other communions is one chief obstacle to the reunion of the churches of the Protestant Reformation. We do so the more hopefully because from all sides, of late, increasing efforts are made and common prayers offered for the removal from Christianity of the reproach of disunity. We welcome the co-operation in work which is attained by the Federal Council of Churches and through the efforts of War Commissions of the several churches; but we cannot hide from ourselves the fact that such co-operation, however successful, does not reach down to, or remove the fundamental cause and evil of our continued separation as churches. Moreover we earnestly desire to receive from you some more definite indication of what overtures and actual approaches towards unity in the ministry and the worship of the Church may be deemed in your Christian judgment now possible.

We do not seek immediately any proposals involving material changes in existing ecclesiastical polities, which might require considerable postponement for their consideration and adoption by different ecclesiastical bodies. However desirable such overtures for more leisurely consideration may be, the present crisis calls for definite measures of prompt co-ordination.

Acts of Unity Which May Now Be Possible

1. Much is possible today which but yesterday would have seemed impossible. This is true of the wonderful organization now being made of the resources of our country that the war of democracy may be won. Shall the Church of God find it an ecclesiastical impossibility similarly now to organize its forces as a unit to win for the world the victory of Christianity? This one of the greater works of faith, which our Lord promised his disciples should have power to do, calls for new leadership. The people are looking for leaders of the Church. There are many today who are saying, Lo, here is Christ, or there. If this war shall end and the Church come out of it a disunited and ineffectual body, the multitude may be left looking beyond all organized Christianity for the Son of Man, the Saviour of the World.

2. While responsibility for leadership rests on all the churches, a special and distinctive opportunity for comprehensive leadership and action is given, we think, at this hour to the Episcopate. The times call for church statesmanship. It is not enough now for any of us to abide in our separate church tents, satisfied to remain good churchmen, when the hour calls for men to come forth as great Christians. Permit us to say that by rising to the height of this commanding occasion, and sounding a call to which we all might rally, the Episcopate might commend in the sight of all men its power of adaptation and service to the well being of the Church, such as never has been given it before since the beginning of the Reformation.

3. Some single act in itself quite simple may be possible, which may prove to be enough for an immediate unifying point. A slight precipitant will crystallize a whole solution. Unless something done shall be thrown into the discussion of Church unity it may remain indefinitely in a state of academic indetermination.

What May Be Required in Some Possible Act of Unity

1. An act that might prove a beginning of actual unity should go to the core of the existing disunity. It should be something that touches the heart of the whole Church.

2. The source of the separation between the Episcopal and the non-Episcopal ministries is not reached in the issue concerning ordination. However important the question concerning orders may be in the estimation of many, it is secondary and derivative, not primary and in itself essential. For this reason among others the Episcopal Church has never officially pronounced non-Episcopal ordination invalid.

3. A vital point is touched when the question arises what may be needful in order to give to all communicants, even the most scrupulous, full assurance that the Eucharist is offered to them truly as Christ has given it to the Church. This is not the question as to what different views may be cherished among believers, or comprehended in a creedal confession; it concerns deeply and vitally the assurance of grace which many believers would have in communing with their fellow-believers in different churches. It lies, in a word, close to the heart of Christian communion. Protestants generally may hold that the validity of a sacrament, however they may conceive of it, is inherent in the sacrament itself. To this extent they may accept the doctrine of "the objectivity of the sacrament". But at this point of communion where in spirit and intent all Christian believers are one, in our ecclesiastical requirements and habits of devotion we have fallen apart. While not questioning in our own minds the validity of presbyterial ordination, or doubting that in our churches the Lord's Supper is observed as Christ would have us do, we recognize the fact that many devout Christians from their training and life-long habits would not feel well assured of sacramental grace unless the Eucharist were communicated to them by a presbyter who had been ordained by a bishop.

The practical question then reduces itself to this: can we join in some act which may manifest due regard to the scruples of many devout believers, yet without doing violence to the views and habits of many others. This is not a question to be settled on the plane of theology, but on the ground of practice. Here we are first to come together not so much doctrinally as religiously. We are to find our way through our differences not by circuitous compromises, or by submission one to the way of the other. On the common Christian ground, and walking together in the way of the Lord, the Apostolic principle of eating no meat if it cause thy brother to stumble, may rightly guide us.

This practical question of mutual Christian charity and comprehension may be put concretely as follows: some wounded or dying Episcopal officer or sailor on a battleship where a non-Episcopal chaplain is serving and where no Episcopal clergyman is available, wishes to receive the sacrament. No one not ordained by a bishop can fully meet what he believes to be his need in extremis. Shall his own Church deny him in this extremity his last dying prayer? Shall it fail to make any possible provision for such emergency? Or shall any other Church refuse any act of possible compliance that would enable its minister to render this Christian service? This, and similar needs of service, our chaplains have to meet. We at home rejoice when we hear that occasionally they have put all our Church limitations behind them, and in Christ's name done some act of grace; but is it fair to them, is it indeed altogether honest in ourselves, to leave them to do on their own individual responsibility something which at once commends itself to us as most Christlike, but which official Christianity will not publicly authorize at home? Our Navy is in action; our soldiers are already in the field;—shall the churches delay to provide from their united means a full equipment for every chaplain and to send him with all possible authority and grace that any communions may bestow? This is the now urgent, practical question which is definitely and concretely raised by the war, and which our appeal would lay before you and fellow-believers in the churches.

BISHOP RANDOLPH DIES AFTER A LONG ILLNESS

Was Consecrated in 1883—First Bishop of Southern Virginia

NORFOLK, VIRGINIA.—The Rt. Rev. Alfred Magill Randolph, bishop of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, died at his home here Saturday, April 6, after an illness of several weeks. The funeral was held at St. Luke's church, this city, on Tuesday morning at 9:30.

The bishop-coadjutor of his native State, and the first bishop of Southern Virginia, was born in Winchester, Frederick County, Virginia, August 31, 1836, and was graduated from William and Mary College in 1855, and from the Theological Seminary of Virginia in 1858.

He was made a deacon by Bishop Meade in the seminary chapel July 2, 1858, and was advanced to the priesthood November 8, 1860, in St. George's, Fredericksburg, by Bishop Johns. His first rectorate was at Fredericksburg, in St. George's church. His second and only other charge was Emmanuel church, Baltimore, of which he was rector when called to the episcopal office. He received the doctorate in divinity from his alma mater in 1875.

He was consecrated in his parish church in Baltimore, October 21, 1883, by Bishops Alfred Lee, W. B. W. Howe, Dudley, Perry, Burgess, and Peterkin.

In 1894 the diocese of Virginia was divided, and Bishop Randolph chose the new see of Southern Virginia as his charge. Bishop Randolph's rectorates were notably successful in spiritual results and in material prosperity. In his episcopal work he has displayed the same energy, ability, and tolerant catholicity which marked his earlier ministry. In his conscientious and active following of the traditions of the original see of Virginia he has endeared himself to an attached and grateful people.

MAR SHIMUN'S PEOPLE IN NEW DANGER FROM ENEMY

Christians Are Now Paying Heavily for Russian Defection

By Paul Shimmon

No one can tell just what we will hear next. I am afraid that there will be some unloosing of human passions and great bloodshed before long. We are paying heavily for the Russian defection. We placed too much hope on her and now we are left in this terrible state.

When the Russians withdrew a few months ago, Mar Shimun could not well take his whole flock to famished Caucasus and probably he would not be allowed to do so as Caucasus, according to the Brest-Litovsk conference, was handed to Turkey. It was the most shameful bargain. By this arrangement the Armenians and Georgians were turned over to the Turks and the Tartars. The result is that all the Christians of Caucasus have risen to a man to defend their homes and liberties, and to drive the invaders out. According to the reports of this week's newspapers Erzerum has been taken by the Armenians and the Turko-German forces have been driven back from Batoum on the Black Sea some forty miles.

The inhabitants of Northwestern Persia, including the government, have not been very friendly to the Russians, and the collapse of the Russian power means the resubjection of the Christians. All those who feel anger against the Russians are evidently trying to pour their wrath out at the native Christians. A recent telegram speaks of the conflict of armed Mohammedans and Syrian mountaineers. These "armed Mohammedans", as I understand it, are the discontented Moslems of Persian, Kurdish and Turkish origin. They have combined together, and have asked Mar Shimun to surrender his arms or to retreat to his home in Kurdistan. Either alternative means extermination. Consequently they have faced the storm by defending themselves. The attitude of the Persian Government, probably, is one of indifference. The local Governor at Urumia had been friendly and was trying to make peace between the Moslems and Christians, but the telegram referred to brings the situation to the edge of the precipice.

In this country we can at least continue our efforts for the families of the refugees and our prayers for the Patriarch and all the warriors that they may escape the horrors of 1915.

Fifty Sailors at Play

NEW YORK CITY.—When fifty apprentice boys make a pilgrimage from South Street to Columbus Circle it takes on the nature of a personally conducted tour for those who have to keep counting fifty every few minutes. To the boys themselves it is nothing short of an expedition in search of adventure.

Through a friend of the Seamen's Church Institute fifty seats were recently given by the management of the Park Theatre, and over four dozen excited apprentice lads from the Institute saw Seven Days' Leave, a war and water melodrama which begins and ends with thrills and mysteries.

SCOTT-HOLLAND BURIED AS GERMAN ATTACK BEGAN

War Prevented Rounding Out of His Great Work at Oxford

By the Rev. James Cairns

LONDON, ENGLAND.—There was laid in his earthly resting-place, just at the time when the big guns of the German attack had begun, a great Churchman whose work for the Church might have been rounded off as he desired, but for those guns. In "our poor shrunken Oxford", as he lately described it, Scott-Holland could do little, and he has left to others the legacy of his later plans. His life work can be summed up only as far as 1911, when he returned to Oxford. But even so, it was on a large scale.

Just as a type of it, one remembers a day in 1893, when the Christian Social Union, which he had helped to found, had a meeting in Holborn Town Hall. Mr. Gore (he was then only a country rector, having retired from Pusey House) had been describing the social problems of country life.

Then there sprang to his feet a man of curiously ungainly appearance, an ill-shaped bald head, exaggerated mouth, and curiously piercing beady eyes—nothing of the traditionary dignitary about him. This was the brilliant Oxford philosopher, who had been called by Gladstone to a Canonry at St. Paul's in 1884. He and Gore and the others had set the older tractarians by the ears with what was to us in those days the thrilling manifesto of Lux Mundi.

But Scott-Holland's passion was not in the restatement of theology. It was in the wrongs of his brethren. So on this occasion one remembers the way in which he drove home in lurid language the lesson of brotherhood. This was in the afternoon. On the same evening one went to a great missionary meeting in the old Exeter Hall.

A MISSIONARY ENTHUSIAST

There again was Scott-Holland, fresh and smiling, and bubbling over with good humor, not in the least exhausted by his afternoon speech. Once more he fascinated us by his extraordinary eloquence and telling arguments. I think I am right in saying that he was the first to make use, on this occasion, of an argument which has since become very familiar. His text was the "steamship advertisements in the windows of Leadenhall Street". Britain, who sent her ships with her sons overseas, was bound to be a missionary nation. Native races were bound to learn something from being in contact with the white man: were we willing that they should only know our vices?

Christ church, Oxford, where he began his ministry as a tutor, and to which he returned in the evening of his days as Regius Professor, could tell much of his lovable personality. So, too, could the workers of East London. He was interested in settlement work there, and is believed to have given away all his official income. But there were besides great masses of men and women who never met him, but who crowded St. Paul's when it was known he would preach. One wondered how the human frame could stand the strain of preaching at such high pressure to such a large congregation. Bishop Stubbs' gibe was quite true: "Holland never uses one word where six will do."

Just so: but without the six words, it would not have been Holland. They were not superfluous: he meant to make sure that you would catch his idea, so he twisted it, stretched it and clothed it with every glittering adjective in the language. No preacher of modern days has ever "piled up his thoughts" as he did. And at the same time no eloquent preacher has been more free from the charge of using fine language for the sake of effect than he was. A shallow listener—and for quarter of a century to "hear Scott-Holland" was an item in the program of the "country cousin" on a visit to London—might think only of the fine language, but the weary Londoner always went away refreshed, even if he had not quite grasped it all. Never was a preacher more absolutely sincere.

His Last Days

Twenty-five years was more than enough of such efforts. Holland was never robust: he had had a serious illness in his youth. He had meant to die at St. Paul's. No bishoprics for him—Gladstone had wanted him to accept one, but it was not his métier to govern a diocese. And when Mr. Asquith offered him the professorship at Oxford he would not look at it at first. But the logic of the situation compelled him to give up his beloved St. Paul's. And, as already said, it will always remain the tragedy of his life story that his work as university reformer should have been cut short by the war. The first part of the funeral service was held in Christ Church Cathedral, and the body was afterwards conveyed to Cuddesdon churchyard, where it was committed to the ground by Holland's old friend, Dr. Talbot, bishop of Winchester.

Bishop Israel in Italy

By the Rev. R. I. Murray

Rome, Italy.—It will perhaps interest your readers to know that Bishop Israel, as bishop in charge of the American congregations in Europe, visited St. Paul's congregation in Rome on the first Sunday in Lent, administered Confirmation, and, later in the week, met with the vestry. Still later that week he went south to the American aviation camp, and spent Sunday, the anniversary of his consecration, with the aviators.

Last Wednesday he left Rome for the Italian front to visit the American ambulance drivers, several of whom he knows personally. Then he will return to Paris, stopping at several camps on the way. Bishop Israel is getting known among our soldiers in France, and, when they hear that he is to revisit any of their camps, they are obviously delighted, and come out in great numbers to hear him.

"WE COME AS BROTHERS", DR. LANG TELLS HEARERS

Pittsburgh and Baltimore Pay Tribute of Enthusiasm to Archbishop

Before his final return to New York, where he speaks his farewells to America this week, the Archbishop of York went to Baltimore and Pittsburgh. In these two cities he was greeted with that same warmth of hospitality which has been characteristic of his reception wherever he has gone in the United States.

The Churchman is able to present here a further and more complete story of the Archbishop's stay in the National Capital, written by its Washington correspondent. In it is revealed a vivid picture of stirring days among men and women who are devoting their entire energy to bringing about that consummation of our war purposes, to further which the Archbishop came to America.

Busy Time in Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.—Thursday, April 4, was made memorable in Pittsburgh by the visit of the Archbishop of York. Coming from Baltimore to Pittsburgh, his train was met by the reception committee, composed of Bishop Whitehead and the reception committee of the Diocesan Church Club, who had arranged for his coming, Mr. Hill Burgwin, president of the club, Mr. Robert Garland, a member of council, Mr. C. E. E. Childers, British Consul, and Messrs. H. D. W. English and Herbert Dupuy, and he was escorted to the Hotel Schenley. At 11 o'clock at the hotel there was held a reception for the clergy of the diocese, which was largely attended. The Archbishop made an address, had prayers with those present, and gave them his blessing.

At noon Archbishop Lang attended a luncheon given in his honor at the new rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, and at 1 o'clock spoke in the Auditorium to the large body of citizens there assembled. He had for his subject "A Nation at War". Mr. H. D. W. English presided at this meeting, being introduced by Mr. Robert Garland, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

The Church Club dinner was given at 6 o'clock in the Hotel Schenley, presided over by Hill Burgwin, Esq., president of the club. About three hundred guests were present, consisting of the clergy of the diocese, members of the club, and invited guests.

Fills Largest Auditorium

The most imposing occasion in connection with the Archbishop's visit was the mass meeting held in the evening at Syria Mosque, the largest auditorium in the city. It was filled from pit to topmost gallery by a representative and enthusiastic audience of men and women. The Mayor of the city presided. The exercises of the evening began with the singing by the whole assembly of "The Star-Spangled Banner". There was a brief invocation by Dr. Ewan, a Presbyterian divine, and Judge Joseph Buffington of the United States Court made the address of welcome.

The Archbishop of York was given an ovation as he arose to speak. He was introduced by Mayor Babcock, who said: "Those of you who pledge yourselves to stand shoulder to shoulder with England and France until this war is over rise to greet him." The audience arose as one man and applauded heartily. The primate said in part:

"I need not tell you of the great assistance your American Navy has been and of the great need of it by us. The Germans have preferred war on the sea by stealth. Let us not mistake it, whatever we think of the honor of it. It is very successful and it is just because it is so successful that we have need of the brain power and the ship power of America, and of the ships of a new and more resourceful character than we could have built to meet those enemies. And it is that the America is speeding up to give. I do n[ot] [th]ink I ever saw a more inspiring [sight] than the naval station in which you [are] our young men, and I do no[t] a more splendid set of men.

"Soldiers and shiploads of [men] these are the great needs of England France," he told the Chamber of Commerce.

"We do not come to you as supplicants," declared the Archbishop. "We come no as French and British, we come to you a brothers and comrades and ask you to mak good your words of promise.

"You and I stand united together and say 'Without liberty we cannot live and for liberty we shall die,'" he declared. "It i necessary that these two great English speaking nations shall keep together in order that we may emerge victoriously in th big conflict in which we are engaged."

This is no time for programs, he emphasized, saying: "We need your help, w need your soldiers and we need supplie And we must have your assistance withou delay."

He complimented the President and Ge Pershing in forsaking the traditions of military service and brigading our men wit the British and French armies to hold bac the enemy.

The Archbishop's closing words were as follows:

"Moral strength comes only to those wh join their purposes with the will of Go I cannot tell you how much may depen upon whether the soul of America wi really uplift itself to God. That woul bring us the strength we need. We ask n more than that you will make good w you, through President Wilso[n] when you entered the

FRENCH PROTESTANTISM AND ALSACE-LORRAINE

Letters to Federal Council Reveal Significance of Country's History

NEW YORK CITY.—The significance of Alsace and Lorraine to French Protestantism is revealed in letters and messages received by the Federal Council of Churches from André Monod, corresponding secretary of the French Protestant Committee.

Some of the great names of French Huguenot history have come from Alsace—such as Oberlin, Reuss, Matter, Baum, Cunitz and Wilm. The annexation of Alsace made the Evangelical Church of the Augsburg Confession lose thirty-eight consistories and 191 parishes, and the Reformed Church, five consistories and 96 parishes. Before the annexation there were 230,699 Protestants in Alsace and Lorraine. By the annexation, French Protestantism lost almost one-fourth of its church members.

The projected reunion of this Department with the other departments is of momentous importance to France as a whole, in order to [illegible] immense duties after the War.

At the beginning of the war the Huguenots of Alsace had to go great hardships because of their French sympathies. Pastor Gerold of Saint Nicholas Church in Strasbourg, one of the leading and most honored men of the city, was imprisoned for alleged sayings in sympathy with the French. On account of his old age and exalted position a medical officer was sent to him suggesting that he ask for a certificate of ill health, to avoid prison. Pastor Gerold refused, and was sent to prison for a number of weeks. In reconquered Alsace, in the Upper Rhine Department, French Protestant services have been held, since the beginning of the War, in the towns of Than, Wesserling and Massevaux, by French pastors and chaplains. The Protestants of Alsace and Lorraine have never ceased to declare their loyalty to France and the injustice of their annexation by Germany.

The Federal Council, through its United Committee on Christian Service for Relief in France and Belgium, is co-operating with a similar committee in France on behalf of these Huguenot churches which have suffered such heavy losses in buildings and property since the War.

MRS. BILLER VISITS WOMEN IN WESTERN PARISHES

Widow of Late Bishop of South Dakota Makes Stirring Addresses

TUCSON, ARIZONA.—The Board of Missions is now making it possible for the widow of the late Bishop of South Dakota, Mrs. Biller, to do her part in the spreading of the Kingdom by sending her out amongst the Western dioceses and missionary districts with this aim in view, viz., the arousing and the deepening of the interest of the women in the missionary work of the Church.

This is the plan: Some time in the Fall, two or three leaders will be sent out from headquarters at New York to some centre in each State to hold Institutes whereby will be given training to women who in their own home towns and in their own home parishes are leaders; and will be the more efficient leaders because of this addition of a little training to their natural ability and character. Mrs. Biller is now preparing the way for these Institutes; and here in Arizona we feel that the work she has done has been well worth while.

It was a strenuous ten days that she put in, beginning with a trip made in spite of the difficulties of bad roads and deep snow, to see that wonderful bit of work done amongst the Indians of Northern Arizona by Miss Thackara at Fort Defiance.

The ministers of Winslow and Bisbee were exchanging charges just that week: and Flagstaff and Williams were without any ministers, so these places were omitted in planning Mrs. Biller's schedule. From Gallup, the station whence her journey to the Hospital of the Good Shepherd had to be made, she went on to Prescott. She held meetings there and in Phoenix, Tucson, Douglas and Nogales. Those responsible for these gatherings report that her presence amongst them was an inspiration; and to quote Mrs. Biller's own words written from California, "I am so thankful to have had the time in Arizona. I came away hopeful for the Church's work there".

In Phoenix, the young people gathered to meet Mrs. Biller in the evening, the older women in the afternoon. In Tucson four meetings within eight hours were arranged for her. From two to three the children of the "Little Helpers" age gathered at the rectory of Grace church, in many cases being accompanied by their mothers. These were followed by the boys and girls of the younger Junior Age. These again were followed by the older women who from half-past four to six gathered for a drawing-room meeting: the drawing-room, dining-room and hall of the rectory were filled to overflowing with the group of women who gathered to hear one of the finest and strongest and most spiritual of appeals.

STANDS PRE-EMINENT FOR CHRISTIAN DEMOCRACY

Says Daily Paper in Reviewing History of Christ Church, Cincinnati

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—In a recent number The Commercial Tribune, one of the two morning papers of Cincinnati, devoted a full column leading editorial to a review of "A Centennial History of Christ Church, Cincinnati", by William Henry Venable, thereby indicating somewhat the place this remarkable parish, of which the Rev. Frank H. Nelson, D. D., is rector, holds in the life of the Queen City. The editorial says in part:

"Here is a very human document yet a record of spiritual growth. It is the chronicle of an Episcopal parish during one hundred years; but its appeal is wider than its title would indicate. The author is a trained historian, not an Episcopalian, who writes in the spirit of accuracy, who evokes even-handed justice and who accepted the commission tendered him by the rector and vestry of Christ church with the understanding that he should be free from any hampering conditions and should deal with his subject in the true historical spirit.

"William Henry Harrison, afterward President, was one of the twenty-two men who associated themselves to advance 'the Christian religion in the hearts and lives of ourselves, our families and our neighbors'.

"The formative period of Christ church was the day of small things. Thus, we read that the vestry voted September 4, 1824, that 'General William Henry Harrison and William J. Jones be a committee to procure subscriptions for the purpose of paying the rent of Rector Johnston's dwelling house', his pastoral salary of $600 a year having failed to reach. In those far off, self-sacrificing days one organist served a year for $50 and another for $1 a Sunday 'flat rate'.

"The Church's history and activities since 1900 are a part of the history of modern Cincinnati in effort and achievement. A church with a parish house as adjunct working in conjunction. Not institutional. A beehive of activities day and night—the church for spiritual helpfulness, the parish house for the moral and social betterment of thousands of young people, and for the promotion of every worthy public object. And so used. Constantly.

"To the leadership of the devoted, successful and modest rector now in the eighteenth consecutive year of his self-denying service is accorded credit for this concrete expression of civic righteousness. If religion consists in giving 'the best you have to the best you know', surely the work of this down-town church, imbedded in a business, tenement house and boarding house district, stands pre-eminently for the Christian democracy that is surely, if slowly, dawning.

It is much to be regretted that Dr. Rainsford's masterful address, delivered during the centennial in 1917, should be printed in such fine type. In breadth of view it meets on even ground Lord Bryce's recent forecast of the future, 'The Next Thirty Years'.

"But this is a detail. The chronicle of Christ church century of service opens a gold mine of memories and entails a heritage of heart treasures".

SIR GEORGE ADAM SMITH HERE IN FIGHTING SPIRIT

"We'll Hold Out Till You Come", Says Famous Biblical Scholar

NEW YORK CITY.—One of the world's most famous Biblical scholars, Sir George Adam Smith, principal of Aberdeen University, and a chaplain in the army with the rank of colonel, has arrived in the United States.

When Sir George reached New York he said half regretfully that the voyage passed without incident. He has begun a tour of this country at the invitation of the National Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War. He was only recently the guest of Sir Douglas Haig, commander of the British Army in France, for three weeks, in which he was escorted all along the British lines and saw with his own eyes all the devastation visited upon Ypres, Albert and the towns along the Somme by the then retreating Huns. His themes upon his tour of this country will be the part played by Great Britain on her various battle fronts, the moral aims common to the Allies in the War and the possible future of the Holy Land and Syria —countries that have been his life study—with special reference to the Zionist movement.

TO PROMOTE EDUCATIONAL ENTENTE

Then, too, Sir George comes as one of the four delegates to be sent to represent the universities of Great Britain at the conference to be held in this city on May 14 with representatives of American institutions of learning. The closer co-operation and co-ordination of American and British universities, with the possible systematization of the exchange of famous professors between the two countries, will probably be discussed.

"War is of course the great disillusionizer," said Sir George to a reporter of the New York Sun, "but in spite of these three long years of awful sorrow and sacrifice we of Great Britain are still as firmly convinced of the justice of our cause as we were when we were first forced into the struggle. These three years, so far from weakening our original confidence, have strengthened and articulated it.

"Men who are above the age for service are deliberately representing themselves to the recruiting officers as being young enough to enlist. It's splendid!

"You know," he added with a twinkle in his blue eyes, "the story of the French lady who celebrated her seventeenth birthday on her thirty-fifth? Well, it's the men who are misrepresenting their ages now!

"Yes," he resumed with a flash of fire that spoke of generations of fighting Scots forbears in his blood, "never fear! We'll hold out till you come!"

And there was all the fervor of the praying Highlanders in his voice as he added: "Oh, God! hold out we must!"

AWAKENING SPIRITUAL LIFE

Sir George went on to speak of the effect of the War upon the spiritual life of the nation. "Let me speak only of what I myself have seen," said he, "in drawing conclusions as to the influence of this War on the souls of men.

"For example, it so happens that 230 of our graduates of Aberdeen University—there are 2,600 of them in the service—have fallen on the battlefield and it was my duty to write to their families. The resignation and the faith and the revived hope in a future life which were evidenced in the replies that came to my letters were striking testimony. I don't say that this is universal, but it was my experience. And during my visit to the front I was impressed again and again by the eagerness with which our soldiers thronged to the religious services—the voluntary, not the compulsory, services—held in the little chapels back of the trenches. The men were in grip with the realities of life and death.

"In the Scotch church," he continued, "we have no objection to ministers fighting under the colors. Indeed, it is safe to say that the larger proportion of Scotch ministers and divinity students have already enlisted.

"It is not true that the war has brought a weakening of moral strength to the nation. Of course war does bring out many vicious things which could not flourish in times of peace, but I deny that London, for example, has grown more vicious than it was before. On the contrary, I believe that the general moral tone of the nation has been tuned up. The vital faiths of Scotch theology have not been impaired. The War, on the contrary, will rebuke the somewhat easy views of God that as a nation and as churchmen we were entertaining before the War. We are learning once again that God is not alone a God of peace, as of course He is, but that He is a God of righteousness and of judgment.

"France has offered sacrifices even greater than those of Britain, I verily believe, with a courage and a unity of purpose (it is hard to remember her now as she was before the War, a nation divided in her political aims) as conspicuous, if not more conspicuous, than those of any other nation. And oh, how France has suffered! Ypres, awful in its devastation—wanton devastation—is a sight I can never forget.

"We of Great Britain recognize President Wilson as the interpreter of the highest spirit of the American people and believe that the adhesion of America to the cause of the Allies has brought not only increased material strength but also a deeper sense of the sacredness of the mortal and spiritual issues that are at stake in the present conflict."

Large Lenten Attendance

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND—At St. Paul's, the Rev. Arthur S. Kinsolving, rector, there were daily celebrations of the Holy Communion and midday services throughout Lent with increased attendances, especially at the latter, the number present ranging generally from 400 to 700.

The Good Friday addresses at the Three Hours' Devotion were given by Dr. Kinsolving, and the church was filled throughout.

St. Paul's is always, like most similar churches, crowded at Easter. On Maundy Thursday and Easter 660 persons made their communion, and 550 at St. Paul's Chapel. The offering received and pledged will reach more than $10,000. Seventy-five persons were recently confirmed in the parish.

COLONIAL PARISH HAS ITS FIRST EPISCOPAL VISIT

Was Founded When Virginia Had No Resident Bishop

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA.—Bishop Tucker had an interesting service and Confirmation at Toano, in James City County, in "Old Hickory Neck Church", Blissland Parish, of which the Rev. E. Ruffin Jones of Williamsburg, rector of Briton Parish, is the minister. This is the first Episcopal visitation this Church has ever had. Built in Colonial times, when we had no resident bishop, the old church fell into decay and disuse before Bishop Madison's time and it has been in ruins for over a hundred years. During the past year the Rev. Mr. Jones has effected a complete restoration of this old church and the Bishop preached and confirmed; the first service of its k. d since the foundation of old Hickory Neck was laid one hundred and fifty years ago.

PLEADS FOR OUR CHILDREN

Miss Orr Shows Pictures of Those in France Wounded by Germans

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—That this country is not yet awake to the conditions of children affected by the war was the assertion made last week by Miss Mary Moore Orr at the annual meeting of the Church Club of the Diocese of Long Island, which was held in the clubrooms here. Miss Orr's topic was "War Hints from France and England". She spoke from a practical viewpoint, having spent a year in the war zone in France with Miss Fanniebelle Curtis studying the conditions of the children there and Belgian refugees under the direction of the Citizens' Committee for the Conservation of the Children of America.

Miss Orr urged the members to oppose the bills in Albany, which she said would throw children into industry. She showed views of women running the street cars in Bordeaux. Several others pictured the splendid work for the children which is conducted in the convents in Paris and some pathetic sights brought the realization of war to the audience. Several children minus arms and legs as a result of the Huns' treachery were shown.

The speaker was once in the line of a German march and she told of her hasty retreat to safety. At another time she experienced an air raid in London.

Miss Orr emphasized kindergarten work which is being carried on by American women in Paris, and said that barracks which were previously occupied by soldiers are now schools, and the schools are utilized as hospitals.

Church Building by Easy Payments

ASBURY PARK, NEW JERSEY—The Rev. F. H. Richey, rector of Trinity church, who has been successful in raising money for church building by the certificate plan, has issued a pamphlet, at the urgent request of many clergymen and laymen, outlining the operation of the plan.

The special feature to be noted is in the adoption of the "easy payment plan". This has been applied with great success to religious endeavor requiring funds to build new buildings, pay for partially complete buildings, liquidate debts of long standing—in fact, to find the moneys needed to "carry on" all co-operative enterprises.

VE COME AS BROTHERS", DR. LANG TELLS HEARERS

d addressed the thousands of people who re viewing its realistic reproduction of e battle front. A little later a great open- service was held upon the grounds of the thedral, where he planted an English n and addressed a great congregation thered under the auspices of the Ca- edral League, expressing his profound nviction that one of the greatest needs of nerica is great cathedrals which shall rve as centres of religious influence and witnesses to God.

At night a great and enthusiastic audi- ce, including General Leonard Wood, eneral Kuhn, Admiral Eberle, the Gov- nor, the Mayor, and many men of mark d influence crowded the Lyric Opera ouse to the doors. After a soldierly ad- ess from General Wood, the Archbishop livered a noble speech, full of kindly ap- eciation of the United States, and full of pe and encouragement. Nothing, said he, d impressed him more than our expect- cy, buoyancy and hopefulness, for these ings will help us to endure to the end.

A Washington Impression

By Canon De Vries, Ph.D.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Archbishop of ork made a profound impression in the ational Capital. Throngs which no avail- le building could accommodate flocked to e three services on Easter Day, at the thedral, St. John's and Epiphany.

The reception tendered by the trustees the Corcoran Art Gallery on Easter onday night was attended by some six ousand persons, representative of every ement in the complex life of the Nation's apital, as the invitations included the Con- ess and Judiciary, the chiefs of the exec- ive department, the leading Army and avy officers on staff duty, the allied and utral embassies and legations, leading tizens, the clergy of the diocese of Wash- gton and their families, and the heads the numerous organizations of our hurch in Washington, as well as the min- ters of other Christian bodies.

RECEIVED BY THE PRESIDENT

The Archbishop was entertained partly the Bishop of Washington and partly the British Ambassador during his four ays at the Capital. President Wilson th received him in private interview and so later had him as his guest at a quiet mily dinner, the only other guests being e Bishop of Washington and Lord and ady Reading, who also gave him a small nner on Tuesday night. Senator Lodge ve him a luncheon at his residence, and invitation of the chaplain His Grace ened the session of the Senate with ap- opriate prayer on Tuesday at noon, and enator Saulsbury, president pro-tempore, the absence from the city of Vice-Presi- nt Marshall, afterwards on the floor pre- nted to the Archbishop the members of is body.

A visit to Mount Vernon was crowded to the schedule of very busy days, but the rchbishop's interest and keenness never emed to flag. While staying with the ishop of Washington the Archbishop found me to celebrate the Holy Communion rly Easter morning in the Bishop's chapel; dedicate the Book of Remembrance of ounders and Benefactors of the Cathedral, and its depository in a beautiful niche of the sanctuary of the Cathedral; to baptize two children of members of the British Embassy in the Bethlehem chapel; to plant an oak on the Close near the Peace Cross; to make a tour of Mount St. Alban, and view and discuss the now nearly completed sanctuary, and the models of the exterior of the whole fabric and of the interior of the choir, and to address the National Cathedral Association in annual meeting.

HIS MESSAGE OF VICTORY

As for his message, it was very much in the terms of his deliverances elsewhere, but tinged by the thoughts suggested by Easter, by the Nation's Capital, and by the gravity of the great battle in progress in France. The note of warning so often spoken of in his New York addresses and elsewhere was not dominant at Washington, but rather the certainty of victory through the Risen Christ, through the far-reaching issues of the War and the present critical situation were powerfully driven home to his great congregations. His profound convictions as to the place of the American Republic in determining the results of the Great War, and in forming the new world now developing out of the ruins of the old were calls to action and to service that were very moving and will not go unheeded. His quiet but touching references to the young men now giving their lives that we may have and enjoy freedom went home to the hearts of his hearers with powerful effect. Several who saw him in England before the War and knew him then to look but forty years of age, without a gray hair, and found him now with every hair white and looking seventy though barely past fifty, realized with a new understanding what the War means to British men and women after four years of suffering and the loss of many of the rising generation of young Englishmen and Scotchmen, among whom Archbishop Lang has long been a real spiritual leader and a trusted friend.

ONE WITH THOSE HE SERVES

And it is here that one finds, perhaps, the essential element of Archbishop Lang's power and leadership; those who came into contact with him feel inevitably, whether religious men or not, that in him they witness a true, self-sacrificing priest of Jesus Christ, who does not hold himself aloof from those he leads and serves, but is one with them in their ideals, their endeavors, their needs, their sufferings, and makes their concerns his own.

Simplicity, transparent holiness, sweetness of character together with strength, friendliness, mental power and grasp, learning, fulness of knowledge, wide sympathies, highness of soul, balanced judgment, self-restraint and self-control, spiritual understanding, telling powers of speech without resort to rhetoric or oratory, are some of the qualities and phrases men and women, clergymen and laymen have been applying to Archbishop Lang since he came and went from among us.

LIKENESS TO WASHINGTON AND LEE

In the Corcoran Art Gallery he was in immediate contrast with one of the great portraits of General Washington, and here again, as in Boston, the likeness of feature was noted, especially in strength and intellect as revealed in lineaments, though in a certain gentleness, or friendliness, or humanity, or priestliness, one cannot find just the word to describe it, the Archbishop in his face resembles not so much the great soldier of the Revolution as another great soldier and churchman, a hero of a later war, General Robert E. Lee.

Taking it all in all, the visit of the Archbishop of York to Washington was a great spiritual experience. His very face and presence were a benediction. One of the leading clergy said it was a help and uplift just to look at him as he spoke. And then, when his ringing and searching calls to Christian and national duty are added, an impress is left both upon public men, upon leaders in the Church, and upon the masses of the people, which will lead to permanent power and endeavor in meeting and solving the problems of the Great War.

FOSDICK COMMISSION WILL HELP CHURCH ARMY WORK

New Plans for Protecting Men in Camps of Second Province

NEW YORK CITY.—The Social Service Commission of the Province of New York and New Jersey a few weeks ago appointed a sub-committee on war activities in the province, there being no provincial war agency. This committee has been corresponding with various war service organizations of the Church and with similar organizations of the Government working within the field of the province, with a view to establishing effective co-operation. From Raymond B. Fosdick, chairman of the now well-known Federal Commission on Training Camp Activities, comes the following pertinent suggestion:

"I am confident that your organization can do very effective work in stimulating the representatives of the Protestant Episcopal Church in communities surrounding our army camps to enlarge their social and religious program for enlisted men.

"Ample provision is being made for work of this character on the inside of our army camps, and a great deal has been done in the towns surrounding the camps, under the leadership of the War Camp Community Service. This latter field, however, needs considerable expansion, particularly in relation to the work of the churches. Experience has shown that the instinctive desire of the soldier with an hour's free time is to go to town, even if the town is only a crossroads, and it has become increasingly apparent that a great deal of time and thought must be expended in the task of organizing these places along healthy recreation and social lines. Secretary Baker put the matter very succinctly when he wrote: 'This, it seems to me, is an opportunity for service which cannot wisely be overlooked. Each lodge, church, fraternity, can look out for the needs of its own soldier membership, and where local groups are unable financially to provide adequately for this task, the larger organization of the church or fraternity, as the case may be, can come to the rescue with more ample means'.

The sub-committee above mentioned would appreciate correspondence with any rector or clergyman in charge of a parish or mission in the Second Province who may be disposed to further the work suggested by the Fosdick Commission. Address the chairman of the committee, Rev. F. M. Crouch, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

CHURCH PAPERS PETITION THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS

Urge Resolution Asking Congress to Repeal "Zone System" Bill

NEW YORK CITY.—Owing to the detrimental effect upon religious periodicals of the "Zone System" bill passed by Congress, which, if it goes into operation, is calculated to increase the postage on magazines and other periodicals from 50 to 900 per cent, The Churchman Company, The Living Church Company, The Witness and The Southern Churchman Company petitioned the House of Bishops to pass a resolution urging Congress to repeal the bill.

The following resolution was introduced:

WHEREAS, This House has been informed that the operation of the postal rates recently established by Congress under the zone system has increased the postage on magazines and other periodicals, and in particular upon religious newspapers, from 50 to as much as 900 per cent., and thereby on the one hand the circulation of such newspapers is restricted and many American homes and readers are deprived of the opportunity to read them, and on the other hand their cost is greatly increased to those who are charged with their production; which is carried on not for profit but as an auxiliary to the Church and as a means of making known the work of the Church at home and abroad, in our parishes and missions, and in the Army and Navy; and this House believes that the religious newspaper is an important instrumentality for inculcating the principles of morality and religion by which the will of the American people to persevere at the cost of any necessary sacrifices in the righteous war in which this Nation is engaged must be made inflexible. And this House further considers that Congress has shown its appreciation of the value of instrumentalities which tend to promote this object by exempting from income tax the incomes of religious, educational and charitable institutions which yield no profit to those who carry them on; and also considers that the zone system of postal rates was abolished during the administration of President Lincoln, and has been disapproved by economists and by postal experts on the ground that any apparent increase (if any there be) in postal revenue is outweighed by the consequential detriment to the American people;

Resolved: That in the opinion of this House the religious newspaper is justly entitled to the favorable consideration of the Government by the establishment of the lowest postal rates that can reasonably be applied to it in view of the public service which it renders; and in particular by the abrogation of the zone system of rates.

THE PACIFIC CHURCHMAN ISSUES WOMAN'S EDITION

Easter Number Edited by and Devoted to Women

The Easter number of the Pacific Churchman has been edited by women and devoted to women's work and women's point of view. And an excellent number it is, full of common sense and constructive criticism. Mrs. Kate Kulkley, Mrs. S. L. Abbot and Mrs. James Otis Lincoln are the special editors for the women's edition. Their editorial, A Word to the Wise, contains among other pertinent suggestions the following comment on the question of women on the Board of Missions:

"As to the question of women being on the General Board of Missions. Sometimes one gets a better view of a drawing if one holds it up to a mirror and sees it reversed. Suppose, in a wild flight of imagination, we see the General Board composed entirely of women, and in the Church at large a group of a hundred thousand devoted Churchmen, banded together for one purpose, to learn of missions, to give to missions. Suppose their gifts amounted to nearly a million dollars a year. How long do you think it would be before they had representatives upon that General Board? Not 15 minutes."

The frontispiece is appropriately a picture of Mrs. Wm. Ford Nicols. A series of bright, short articles on the diocesan institutions in which the women are especially interested follows. There are sketches of women working in the mission field and the war zone, and an illustrated supplement of churches and institutions either founded or endowed by women.

RED CROSS WORKERS PARADE

In Apron and Veil They March With Calvary Choir

NEW YORK CITY.—At patriotic services recently held in Calvary church, New York, and in St. John's church, Jersey City, the members of the parish Red Cross auxiliary, in their working uniforms, marched in procession into the church and sat in special seats assigned to them. They made an impressive picture in their aprons and red or white veils; and they gave the members of the congregation a graphic idea of the scope of the Red Cross work. But more than that, the fact that they took a corporate part in the service strengthened their own esprit de corps, aroused the enthusiasm of the slackers, and encouraged those who had not yet provided themselves with the regulation veil, and who were borrowing their neighbors' aprons to equip themselves.

WRITES MYSTERY PLAYS

The Rev. C. L. Bates of Rome Prepares Church Year Series

The Rev. Carroll Lund Bates of Rome, New York, has been preparing this Winter a very suggestive series of Church Year mystery plays for presentation in the church building. They are so simple that any group of children under the leadership of someone who realizes the three primary needs of mystery play production—reverence, clear voices, accuracy in diction and action—could put them on satisfactorily; and their appeal is so simple and graphic that they should impress the lessons taught in Bible class and Church school indelibly on the children's minds. The Easter mystery play, The Power of the Resurrection, has been printed in pamphlet form.

he Anniversary of the War—Special rvices and sermons marked the first an-versary of the war in our churches. At e Cathedral the Dean preached an elo-ent war sermon. At Calvary there was patriotic service in the evening which as partly to mark the anniversary and rtly in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan. he speaker was the Hon. James M. Beck. r. Manning came up from Camp Upton Saturday, the sixth, to preach a war-sermon at the Trinity noonday service. On Sunday afternoon the Daughters of the Cincinnati had a patriotic service in Trinity church.

Patriotic—Four tons of clothing were collected for the relief of the destitute in France by the congregation of the Chapel of the Intercession. At Zion and St. Timothy's the two gold stars on the service flag were dedicated on Sunday; one is in memory of Miss Eleanor Ensign Mills, and the other in memory of Sergeant C. Howard Peck. A new American flag has been presented to the parish by Miss Eva C. Putney, and has been placed outside the north end of the church.

Kenneth Sylvan Launfal Laureolus Phiquepal Guthrie Baptized—On Easter afternoon, the time when for almost eighty years the bishops of New York have visited All Saints' church, a parish now ninety-six years old, Bishop Burch confirmed a class of seven. The last confirmed was the 1,750th member of that venerable parish confirmed during its history. After a most inspiring charge to stand witness to Christ before the world, the Bishop baptized the vicar's son, Kenneth Sylvan Launfal Laureolus Phiquepal Guthrie.

Sunday Evenings at St. George's—The Sunday evening services have been suggested by the Service Committee as special services for the organizations of St. George's, as follows: First Sunday in the month—The Mothers' Meeting, the Happy Hour Club; second Sunday—The Men's Club, the Battalion, the older boys of the Sunday school and the Boys' Club; third Sunday—The Girls' Friendly Society, the King's Daughters; last Sunday—The Red Cross, the Married Women's Society, the Parish Missions Society, the Woman's Auxiliary.

Here and There—There are several interesting meetings on the church calendars. At Trinity chapel the Men's Club had Dr. Wm. H. Jefferys as their speaker last Monday night. The Men's Club of the Church of the Epiphany was invited to attend the meeting, and a goodly number turned out to hear the Doctor's inspiring address. The annual service of the Girls' Friendly Society is planned for next Sunday afternoon at Grace church at 4 o'clock. The sermon will be preached by Dr. Slattery. On April 17, at 11 o'clock, the Prayer and Service Union of the Woman's Auxiliary will have a meeting at the Church Club at which Father Officer will speak. On April 29 the annual service for the United Offering will be held in the Chapel of St. Ansgarius at the cathedral. The Dean will be the preacher. The question of the proposed national organization of the Woman's Auxiliary is the subject of discussion at the May meeting of the Auxiliary.

BOSTON

Naval Service Club—On Tuesday in Easter Week the Church's Naval Service Club on Beacon Street, Boston, was presented with a beautiful silk Union Jack by the boys from Commonwealth Pier, known as the "Receiving Ship at Boston". A battalion of bluejackets attended, commanded by Lieutenant C. S. Leonard, provost-marshal of shore patrols. The Commonwealth Pier band furnished music.

Mr. F. Nathaniel Perkins, resident executive manager of the club, was master of ceremonies, and Chief Yeoman Harry Maniff made the presentation speech on behalf of his shipmates. As the Union Jack was broken out, the navy band played the "Star-Spangled Banner". Bishop Lawrence then made this response:

"Chief Maniff: In behalf of the Naval Service Club of Boston I accept this silk Union Jack. It represents the interests of the men of the United States Receiving Ship at Boston, and therefore has value to us. Under its stars the officers and men of the United States Navy will defend our liberties and the rights of humanity. We therefore break it loose to the air with pride, that it may wave here as a token of our common loyalty to this Nation.

"Men, this club is your home. Make use of it. Hold pleasant memories of it when you are at sea, and you may be sure of our constant support and cheer."

The Naval Service Club has been running to its full capacity ever since its opening on March 2. Easter Day it entertained 3,000 sailors. Every night many enlisted men seeking lodging are turned away for lack of accommodations. Not long ago two sailors were lodged for a night who were members of the crew of the "Jacob Jones", the destroyer which was torpedoed. They had both been on the ship's raft from which twenty-five of their companions were washed overboard.

Southborough the Banner Town—The town of Southborough in this diocese was apportioned over $93,000 as its share of the Third Liberty Loan. On the very day the drive for the loan officially opened, April 6, the first anniversary of our Declaration of War, the Rev. Robert F. Cheney, vicar of St. Mark's chapel, went to the Treasury Department in Washington with $114,000 which the town had raised for the new loan even before the list was officially open.

Convention Hospitality—The Episcopalian Club is giving a dinner to all the clerical and lay delegates of the Diocesan Convention on the first evening of the Convention's session and the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese expects to entertain in similar manner the wives of the delegates. In addition to this, plans have been made for the personal entertainment at some Churchman's house in or near Boston of every delegate with his wife who is able to be present and accept such hospitality. It is hoped by this method to surround the entire Convention with an atmosphere of genuineness and fellowship that it has inevitably lacked on most occasions and to secure the maximum attendance of delegates for 100 per cent. of the session.

The Dean's Noonday Addresses—Dean Rousmaniere is beginning on April 12 a series of noonday addresses in the Cathedral on successive Fridays in April and May in which he hopes to give a message to the special needs of our time. His general subject will be "Our Religion and Our War".

Army Officer at Cathedral—Major Boehm, an officer of the Canadian army, made the address at Later Evensong at the Cathedral on Low Sunday. Major Boehm has seen service at the front in the very region over which the fighting rages so fiercely today. He was listened to by a large congregation that took away clearer ideas of what the fighting involved and what failure of the Allies would mean to the world.

Irish Priest in Boston—For a number of years Fr. Robinson, the rector of Ovoca, Ireland, has visited Boston some time during the season. This year he has braved the dangers of the sea and the violence of the enemy to come to America again and bring a message from the Church in Ireland. He arrived in New York on Good Friday and came direct to Boston where he assisted in the Easter services at the Church of the Advent. On Low Sunday he was the preacher at Evensong at the Church of the Advent and will in the near future give lectures on Irish life and religion in and around Boston.

Trinity's Year Book—"The Year Book of Trinity Church in the City of Boston," just published, is the record of the year's work in Massachusetts' largest parish. It is more closely condensed than usual this year, in the interest of economy, but the record of accomplishment is impressive. One hundred and thirty-five Trinity men are in the service of the Army and Navy, one of them from the vestry, and the former curate, the Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, is chaplain of U. S. Hospital No. 6. The social work of the parish through its Neighborhood House in East Boston has been stabilized by the purchase of a large brick house as a centre for the growing work which had hitherto been conducted in rented quarters.

The rector records $150,000 as having been given from Trinity to the Pension Fund, over $28,000 to the War Commission Fund and $5,000 towards the equipment of Massachusetts chaplains. He also raises the standard for a Phillips Brooks Memorial Fund of at least $100,000 as a general endowment for the parish. "Now, in the day of our strength, is the time when such a work should be undertaken."

In Service—One hundred and thirty-five from Trinity, Boston, 90 from the Church of the Advent, Boston, 70 from St. John's, East Boston, 19 from Christ church, Swansea,—these are some of the recent figures of our Churchmen in active service. The latter figure is one of the most impressive that has come to our notice in the diocese. In proportion to its communicant list (132), Christ church, Swansea, in a quiet country village, is holding up a fine standard of patriotic endeavor.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

New Roanoke Church Opened—Christ church, Roanoke, was opened for its first service on Easter Day. The Rt. Rev. D. B. Tucker, D.D., who, with the rector, the Rev. Geo. Otis Mead, conducted the service, was unstinted in his praise of the beautiful, substantial, well-appointed church and parish house. Both are built of blue sandstone, trimmed with white Indiana cut limestone. The church is finished throughout in oak, which is stained a soft-toned gray. Pews, choir stalls, and chancel furniture in oak to match. The vestibules, choir, and sanctuary are laid with Scotch brown tile, with dark blue marble for border and steps. Hardwood floors, windows of cathedral and antique glass set in stone mullions. A handsome two-manual organ of splendid volume and tone. The parish house is of two stories, finished in clear pine. The first floor is for assembly, with class rooms forming a part of the assembly room. In connection is the library and secretaries' room. Upstairs is the primary department of three rooms, graduate department of three rooms, ladies' parlor, robing rooms for the choir, and a kitchen. Then a large attic over all, which is so necessary for a parish house.

The architect is Mr. Frederic M. Mann, 530 Metropolitan bank building, Minneapolis, Minnesota, who also directed the construction and finishing.

The total cost of the church and parish house is about $55,000. If we add to this the cost of the ground and the rectory, which is next to the parish house, the whole church property cost $70,000. It is to be noted that during the years of planning and building, Christ church paid every assessment, paid in full or overpaid all apportionment and responded to all the appeals sent out by the diocese and general church. The Easter offering was $3,300. The Sunday School mite box offering was $400.

WASHINGTON

Enthusiasm Over Washington Cathedral—The National Cathedral Association held its annual meeting at Mount St. Alban on Tuesday in Easter Week. The meeting was held in Whitby Hall, the new and very dignified auditorium of the Cathedral School for Girls. Here was gathered a distinctively Church assemblage, consisting of practically the whole body of the clergy of the diocese and their wives, the lay members of the Cathedral Chapter and Council, the members of the Washington Committee of the Association, the All Hallows Guild of the Cathedral, the faculties of the Cathedral schools, and representatives of the New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Utica and other committees of the association.

To this body the Archbishop of York made a striking address. With a few broad strokes he depicted the new world forming out of the ruins of the old, which came to an end July 31, 1914, and then showed the inimitable and influential place the American Republic with its vast territory and population, its high idealism, and devotion to free institutions, must take in the new world. Then he set forth the place of God in the world and in the nation if the wisdom, order, self-control, and reverence are to be vital powers among us as they must be if true national greatness is to be reached, and we are to play our full part in the new world now forming, and prove ourselves a blessing to humanity, and avoid the risks of harming mankind as Germany has done in the great War and its concomitants.

The influence Washington is bound to exert on the ideals, thought, and life of the Nation was noted, and then His Grace reached his climax by pointing out the place the National Cathedral can be made to take in the city and the country, by the teaching power of its Christian architecture, the devotion and beauty of its services, and the other elements in the worship, preaching, and work of a great cathedral.

His audience followed his rapid presentation of those themes with breathless attention, and broke into loud applause.

The Bishop of Washington continued the meeting. He disagreed with the Archbishop in one point—for His Grace had referred to the long time it takes to build cathedrals, but Bishop Harding said he is convinced that Washington Cathedral can and should be built at once, which evoked instant hand clapping. The Bishop also paid warm tribute to the work of the great benefactors the Cathedral has lost in the past year, its architect, Mr. Kenny Vaughan and Mrs. Archibald D. Russell, who gave the sanctuary, in memory of her mother Mrs. Percy R. Pyne.

The Rev. Dr. McKim closed the speaking of the morning with a brief speech which laid stress on the striking beauty of the sanctuary as now seen crowning Mount St. Alban, and of the whole fabric as shown in the model, terming it the most beautiful building of any kind in America and one of the most beautiful in the world.

The meeting closed with a simple but beautifully appointed luncheon provided by the National Cathedral School for Girls by Miss McDowell and Miss Webster.

BALTIMORE

Easter Services—Although the Lenten services were not so largely attended this year as usual, because of the absence of many of our most earnest laymen and the absorption of women in war work, a bright and beautiful Easter Day brought out great congregations. Large offerings were made at St. Paul's, St. Michael and All Angels and other churches for parish indebtedness and in some others for missions. At Camp Meade our chaplains, the Rev. A. Tagart Steele and the Rev. Allan Evans, went through the wards of the hospital with portable organ, singing and making brief and helpful addresses.

Rector Departs for France—The Rev. Philip Cook, rector of St. Michael and All Angels church, Baltimore, who has volunteered for six months' service in France under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., preached his farewell sermons on Easter Sunday, the Oriental Lodge of Masons, of which he is chaplain, being present at night. On the following night he was tendered a farewell dinner by the congregation and was presented with a purse of $250. Bishop Murray and Fiske, former rectors of the parish, were present to bid him Godspeed.

New Rector Begins Work—The Rev. Henry B. Lee began his rectorship of Trinity church, Towson, one of the important parishes of the diocese, in Easter week. He comes from St. Paul's church, Wheeling, West Virginia, but is no stranger in Maryland, having been rector of St. Thomas' church, Baltimore, some years ago.

DALLAS

Rector Instituted—The Rt. Rev. H. Moore, coadjutor bishop of Dallas, recently instituted the Rev. W. T. Datson as rector of Trinity church, Fort Worth, Texas. He was assisted in the services by the rector and the Rev. Edwin Wickens.

Takes Charge of Parish—The Rev. Joseph Sherrin, formerly of West Texas, recently elected rector of Christ church, Fort Worth, has entered upon his duties

A Progressive Parish—The Rt. Rev. H. T. Moore, bishop coadjutor, visited the Church of the Incarnation, Dallas, on Palm Sunday. Twenty-four persons were confirmed in a crowded church. The Rev. Charles Clingman, the rector, has been here several years, unusually beloved by the people. The congregations at this church are always large and devout.

Visits His Old Parish—On Palm Sunday the Rev. Edwin Wickens, founder of All Saints' Church, visited this church, preached and celebrated the Holy Communion. A large congregation greeted their old missionary. Mr. Wickens is nearly 79 years of age. After evening prayers on the same day the Bishop confirmed a most interesting class.

Clerical Changes—The Rev. J. T. Foster has left the diocese and gone to Oklahoma. The Rev. S. Whaling has resigned Hillsboro, Dallas, and has accepted work in the diocese of Texas.

The Rev. Mr. Link of Wisconsin is expected to take up the work at St. Peter's church, McKinney, some time in April. He will find a devout and willing congregation.

Goes 600 Miles for Baptism and Confirmation—On a recent Sunday a lady came from Van Horn, Texas, a distance of 600 miles, for the purpose of being baptized and confirmed. She was baptized by the Rev. Edwin Wickens in St. Matthew's Cathedral, and on the following morning was confirmed by Bishop Moore.

ALBANY

Dr. Brady in Schenectady—The close of Lent in St. George's church, Schenectady, witnessed unusual interest in a series of "Conferences on the Fundamental Truths of the Unitarian Faith", conducted by the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady. Congregations which completely filled the Church every night were the evidence of the stirring appeals made to the Church people of this city. The Virgin Birth, the Resurrection, the Atonement, the Blessed Trinity, the Personality of God were the topics discussed. In the mornings the conferences partook of a consideration of contemporaneous opinion regarding the Person of Christ. On Good Friday Dr. Brady preached twice and spoke at the Three-Hours' Service, which was conducted by the rector. On Easter Day immense congregations at all four of the services were noted. Dr. Brady preached in the morning on "The Power of the Resurrection" and in the evening on "St. Paul and the Resurrection".

CHICAGO

The Racine Summer School—The clergy of the Province of the mid-West have received advance notices to the effect that the field of social service will be covered with much care at the Summer school for adult Church people, which will be held at Racine College under the authorization of the Provincial Synod. Among noted social service workers who will take part is Dean Bell of Fond du Lac, at present serving as volunteer chaplain at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, who will repeat a course found especially interesting at the Cambridge Conference last year, on "The Readjustment of Christian Morals".

The Juvenile Protective Association—Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen, the president of the Chicago Juvenile Protective Association, in issuing the annual report of the society points out that the aid of the association was asked in 4,680 cases, a six per cent. increase over the previous year. Many questionable places of amusement and recreation were inspected and their evils curtailed or abolished. Complaints were lodged against public dances and halls at which liquor was sold under special bar permits. Flagrant immorality was noted in many cases, while charges filed against careless policemen were followed by hearings before the Civil Service Commission. A survey of seventy-two "baby farms" was made. Three hundred and thirty-seven children were found, of which fifty per cent. were living under unsanitary conditions, thirty per cent. being illegitimate. The survey resulted in a city ordinance providing for the licensing and inspection of such institutions by the Department of Health. During the year the association has secured the affiliation of thirty-four organizations and has assigned 312 blocks for study, making a total of 1,012 blocks now under observation.

Churchman in Public Library Work—Church people throughout the diocese are congratulating Mr. Carl Roden on his appointment as the librarian of the Chicago Public Library. Mr. Roden, who is the secretary of the Diocesan Social Service Commission, and a vestryman of St. Peter's church, received the highest percentages in the Civil Service examination for the post. He has been connected with the Public Library for thirty-two years, beginning as an errand boy.

Farmer and Mercer at Jail and Bridewell—The city mission staff was fortunate in securing for "preachers" on two Sundays at the services at the County Jail and the City House of Correction "Tom" Farmer and "Ted" Mercer. Both men were in the city as "lay preachers" during one week at the Noon-Day Lenten Services at the Majestic theatre.

Chicago Settlement Association at the Cathedral—The Woman's Auxiliary of the Cathedral parish recently entertained the Chicago Settlement Association at St. Mary's Mission House, the principal settlements being represented. The chief subject discussed was one of importance to the "mothers" of the parish, viz., "How to Impress Mothers with the Thought that, Even if Milk is Twelve Cents a Quart, the Babies Must Have It".

During Lent the members of the cathedral branch of the Girls' Friendly Society spent their evenings sewing for the Red Cross, St. Mary's Home for Children, and the Southern Highlanders; and as well made scrap books for the County Hospital and St. Luke's.

The Clarke Memorial Altar—During the month the Clarke Memorial Altar at St. George's church, of which the Rev. Oscar Hemburger, D. C. L., is priest-in-charge, was blessed by Dr. Griswold, the Suffragan Bishop of Chicago. A friend of the parish presented a new reredos. The altar and reredos, with a new communion rail, are quite notable additions to the equipment of St. George's.

The "Drys" Lose—After a hard-fought battle to place the question as to whether Chicago shall become anti-saloon territory on the ballot at the April city elections, the "dry forces" finally faced defeat when Judge Gridley of the Superior Court ordered the application for a writ of mandamus stricken from the records. However, he granted permission to file an amended petition at 10 o'clock the following morning. The election board pointed out that even if the amended petition were sustained, it would be too late to have the question printed on the official ballots. The dry forces have begun a fight for the removal of the election board in Judge Scully's Court.

The "Five-Mile Zone"—The Chicago Federation Council has unanimously adopted the resolution following, which has been forwarded to the proper authorities: "Resolved, that we demand of our Federal Government that the rule prohibiting the sale of liquor within a five-mile zone around any permanent naval or military station be immediately enforced in the zone surrounding the Naval Station at Grant Park, at the foot of Randolph street". The enforcement of the rule would mean the elimination of all the saloons and bars within the "Loop," and the entire downtown district.

Easter at the Church of the Holy Apostles—The Church of the Holy Apostles, which is just fifty-six weeks old, celebrated its second Easter on Sunday. One hundred and seven people received the Holy Communion. The Easter offering was nearly five hundred dollars. The children's mite box offering totaled $21.44. A portable building has been secured, which will be erected on the church lots at the corner of Drake and Leland avenues, in time for use on the Second Sunday after Easter. This portable building will be used until conditions for the erection of a permanent building are more favorable.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

A Parish Record—Christ church, Oswego, the Rev. Richmond H. Gesner, S. T. D., rector, has made a very remarkable showing in its contribution of men for the War. With a communicant list of 750 it has sent 40 men and one woman into the service of the country. The big service flag over the gallery in the vestibule tells the story of their devotion. Two of these have already given their lives for their country.

Last year, under the inspiration of the rector, backed by some of the men, a large part of the debt was wiped out and on Easter day an offering of $900 cleared away the last vestige and left a good balance to begin the work of the year. For the first time in twenty years the parish is free from debt. At the 7 o'clock celebration of the Holy Communion in response to a personal invitation from the rector, nearly 300 communicants were present. Since the Rev. Dr. Gesner became rector, over twelve years ago, he has presented 300 persons for Confirmation; eight of these have passed to the other world, twenty are in the Government service and about eighty have removed; nevertheless 200 were present at the Corporate Communion.

The energetic work of the ladies this year doubtless added surprisingly to the large sum raised by the parish.

INDIANAPOLIS

George A. Liddle Dies—Mr. George A. Liddle, for eight years lay-reader in Holy Innocents, Evansville (Ven. W. R. Plummer, vicar), died Easter Eve. Mr. Liddle was born in Leeds, England, and came to New York nearly forty years ago, and engaged in insurance work. Later he was transferred to Toronto, then to London, from which place he came to Indiana.

For forty years he was a lay-reader. Ever his chief interest was the Church. "I had hoped so much to be spared to make my Easter communion in the Church", said Mr. Liddle a few minutes before his death. "I think", said the Rev. A. L. Murray, who was in attendance, "that you will have Easter in the Real Presence. You will need no Sign or Sacrament this Easter". With a radiant look of joyful hope this good layman replied, "I wonder. I will wait. I am ready". The burial was made from the beautiful little Church he loved so much, Archdeacon Plummer and the Rev. A. L. Murray officiating.

Holy Week Earnestness—Perhaps because our cause is so righteous and because our enemies are so terrible, Lent was slow in gaining hold upon the imagination of the people this year, but intense interest possessed the congregations during the last two weeks and particularly during the memorable uncertainties of Holy Week. Three hour services where held in the larger parishes were better attended than ever before, and never since the first Good Friday did the words from the cross come home to worshipers with such a vivid sense of their application to the common needs of humanity. A beautiful Easter greeted large congregations. No confusion was caused by the change of "time". Every one seemed to think it appropriate that we changed our clocks Easter day, the day that changed all time and made all things new.

A. L. Murray.

MISSOURI

Easter—Easter was a beautiful Spring day and reports are that our churches were well filled with worshipers. In St. Louis Bishop Tuttle preached to a large congregation at Christ Church Cathedral. The Bishop Coadjutor followed his usual custom of giving the Church's ministrations on that day to mission congregations. At Jefferson Barracks the Rev. Samuel M. Dorrance ministered the Holy Communion to the largest number who have come for that spiritual food at any time during the three months that he has been serving there. And he preached to a big congregation in the Y. M. C. A. hut. We are glad to report that Mr. Dorrance has now accepted an appointment which has been given him for this important work "during the period of the War". He and Mrs. Dorrance have rented a cottage and are living just outside the Barracks.

Parish Organized—Another forward step announced at Easter is the organizing of St. Alban's Mission, St. Louis, into a parish. At a parish meeting held after the organization was completed, the Rev. H. N. O'Connor was unanimously elected first rector of the parish. Mr. O'Connor has been in charge of the services and the work of St. Alban's for about two years, as a member of the staff of the Cathedral. It is reported that about $500 have been paid on the debt during that time, that $1,000 have been put into improvements and equipment, and that a balance of about $250 on the organ has been paid. The new parish starts with a communicant list of 150, a debt of $3,000, and the first story completed of what it is hoped will some day be a fine stone church. An every-member canvass recently taken showed large increase in the amount pledged for local support and also for missions.

Cornerstone of Tuttle Commemorative Parish House Laid—On the fifth Sunday in Lent Bishop Tuttle laid the cornerstone of the Bishop Tuttle Commemorative Parish House, St. Louis. The building is to be used for work and worship by the congregation of St. Mary's mission, and stands on a beautiful corner opposite where the old adobe St. Mary's mission has stood. It is built of brick, one-story only and a temporary roof being completed now. War conditions and war prices have led the committee to the conclusion that nothing must be done at this time except what is absolutely necessary to house the congregation which long ago outgrew the former St. Mary's chapel. The bishop coadjutor baptized on Easter Even at St. Mary's the infant son of the pastor, the Rev. L. H. White, and five other infants and one adult. There have been eight confirmations during the year. The Easter offering, which looks small, perhaps, compared with the offerings taken in great parishes, was larger than any previous Easter offering taken in the mission. Minister and people are hopeful of a good growth with a more satisfactory place of worship.

Convocation Dates—Arrangements are being made for the Spring meeting of the Northern Convocation (the Rev. Dr. John Davis, dean) to be held with St. James's parish, Macon, April 23, 24, 25. The meeting of the Southern Convocation (the Rev. J. Courtney Jones, dean) will be held with Trinity parish, De Soto, May 1, 2 and 3.

A Narrow Escape—Grace church, Jefferson City, narrowly escaped being destroyed by fire on a recent windy night when the County Court House near by went up in smoke. The roof of Grace church caught from flying embers, but the rector, the Rev. George E. Barnes, perched himself on the peak with a garden hose and proved a most successful and doughty fireman until the danger was past.

The new Moller organ lately installed in Grace church is a beautiful instrument, sweet and mellow and strong. It is the gift of Judge A. M. Hough, the senior warden of the parish.

Leaves Diocese—On Easter Day the Rev. Arthur E. Woodward closed a most happy pastorate with Holy Cross congregation and he and his family have removed to Van Buren, Arkansas, where he becomes rector of Trinity church. This for Mr. Woodward simply means going back home. He came into the ministry eight years ago in the diocese of Arkansas. For six years he has been the minister of Trinity church, Thayer, in the diocese of Missouri. Three years ago Holy Cross, Poplar Bluff, was added to his care, also the care of an unorganized mission at Doniphan. A year ago his field was made still larger by the addition of St. Peter's Mission, Bonne Terre. Mr. Woodward's missionary journeys have carried him over more miles of railroad than the journeys of any other of the diocesan clergy. He has done his work with great fidelity and love and zeal and spiritual results have everywhere appeared which are sure to remain. Mrs. Woodward was chairman of the Red Cross work in Poplar Bluff, and in behalf of the workers a delightful reception was given them before they left.

Harrington Rogers.

LOS ANGELES

New Church at Long Beach—The new St. Luke's church, Long Beach, California, of which the cornerstone was laid on October 19, 1917, was formally opened on Sunday, March 17, by Bishop Johnson, assisted by the Rev. Robert B. Gordon, former rector, and the Rev. A. G. H. Bode, the present rector of the church. At the same service Dean Bode presented a class of twenty-four persons for Confirmation. The Bishop congratulated the rector, vestry and congregation on the consummation of their dearest wishes, and on the splendid group of buildings with which the parish is now equipped. This consists of the church, a parish hall, a guild hall with chapel, and a rectory. The architectural treatment of the church is Tudor-Gothic, with a suggestion of English half timber on the parish hall.

The Rev. A. G. H. Bode became rector in 1912 and, building upon the foundation of his predecessors, one result of his energetic ministry is the erection of this beautiful church together with the rectory and parish buildings associated with it: a very necessary and complete working plant for the many active agencies of work within this parish.

Alfred Fletcher.

NEW MEXICO

Soldiers Take Vows—Bishop Howden visited Deming and Camp Cody on March 10 and 11. At the Tuesday morning service twenty-two soldiers of various ranks from private to major took their vows of prayer and service, and were admitted into membership of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Several Army Y. M. C. A. secretaries also became Brotherhood members. The men were presented to the Bishop by Mr. Doyle Hinton, who, as Brotherhood of St. Andrew representative at Camp Cody has been doing effective service among the soldiers since September.

In the afternoon the Bishop conducted a devotional service for the Brotherhood men in the Church House, which has been recently opened to the soldiers of the camp. The following day was devoted to visits to the men at the camp and a "Quiet Hour" conducted by the Bishop at the Hostess House for the staff of the Y. W. C. A.

War Work—The Rev. Mr. Holsapple, rector of St. Barnabas' parish, Omaha, is now at Deming and has entered upon his work as voluntary chaplain for Camp Cody with headquarters at St. Luke's church, where letters and communications for him should be addressed.

Grace Mission, Carlsbad, the Rev. F. W. Pratt, rector, has nineteen stars on its service flag, representing the voluntary enlistment of every boy of military age connected with the mission. On account of its voluntary supply of the quota, Eddy County, of which Carlsbad is the seat, enjoyed the distinction of being the only part of the State where the draft was not instituted.

The Rev. Robert Browning, rector of the hurch of the Good Shepherd, Silver City, as received his commission as chaplain of ne U. S. Army. His vestry declined to ac-ept his resignation and have granted him leave of absence for the duration of the War. W. S. Trowbridge.

English Church News

Mr. Temple's Activities—When the Rev. W. Temple resigned the well-paid rectory of St. James, Piccadilly, it was not with the intention of settling down in the offices of the "Life and Liberty" movement. He knew that public opinion could only be stirred from the pulpit and platform. So he has been delivering his message all over the country. One hears of him lately at Bournemouth, at Sheffield, Leicester and Portsmouth. At Sheffield there was a "Life and Liberty week" with addresses from Mr. Temple. He is taking the highest ground: the Church had too often made terms with the world, instead of challenging its principles. The account of the visit is written by the well-known reformer, Canon Lewis Donaldson (who has not yet left St. Mark's for his more leisured work in the country) in the Challenge. It is a very racy and breezy account, beginning with the arrival of the hero in his "martial chariot" (half a crown paid to the charioteer) and following him through his sermons and addresses up to the trying ordeal of meeting his brother clergy on the Monday morning—a "Lion in a den of Daniels". Yet even the Rural Dean capitulated, and voted for reform. Mr. Temple mentioned one quaint reason why the recent bills for establishing the Bradford and Coventry bishoprics passed the House of Commons so easily. It was the Germans who unwittingly helped the Church on this occasion: the bills came on for discussion during an air raid, and the majority of the Members of Parliament were not taking any risks, so the bills were quickly passed.

In Defence of Theological Colleges—It was time that some reply was made to the accusation that the failure of the clergy to grip the nation is due to the narrowness of their training at the theological colleges. The principal of Cuddesdon, the Rev. J. B. Seaton, in preaching on the subject before the University of Oxford, performed a useful service. Some "root and branch reformers" want to sweep the theological colleges out of existence. But Cuddesdon, at least, has an honored list of 1,500 clergy: the Church would have been the poorer if its sixty years' work had not been done. "Cuddesdon cannot be dismissed in an epigram". Nevertheless, the Church had been criticising itself—and there was no church so critical of itself as ours—and even the clergy had been lamenting their ineffectiveness. "Who trained them, then"? asks the critic, and answers by blaming the colleges. Well, did the colleges spoil what was previously good? retorts Mr. Seaton. What about the defects of our English system of education? It is the English dislike of thinking which is the real obstacle to educational reform. And the colleges cannot do more in the short time which the men spend there. A two-years post-graduate course is at least necessary.

The other charge against the clergy is that of class prejudice: they have little understanding of the world and its needs. But the clergy have been drawn from a limited circle, with little knowledge of the world: they ought to have some experience of life before coming to the college. But this difficulty is not confined to the clergy. "It is rooted in the old pre-War sectionalism of English social life. Most of us lived in compartments, and were so dominated by the point of view of our own class or set that we were out of touch and out of sympathy with by far the larger tracts of common life". Other professions besides the clergy have been convicted by the War of narrowness of outlook. This defect is now remedied for some years to come. The future race of clergy, who have been serving in the Army, know what other men are like.

Too Much Talk of Failure—Another healthy protest has been voiced by the Rev. H. M. Downton, vicar of St. Peter's, Plymouth. A War Cabinet, he says, may often have to tell itself home truths, but it would not be always wise to tell these to the country, far less to the enemy. It is one thing to be penitent before God, but a different thing to pose as penitent before the nation. What the nation should hear is "not the voice of self-accusation or self-depreciation, but that of authority." The Church Times, which publishes Mr. Downton's letter, points out that the real evil of dwelling on the shortcomings of the clergy is that it is illogically assumed that religion itself has failed. The Church is not popular: even less popular than before the War. But its success is not to be judged by the numbers which it attracts to its services. It is not our duty to provide something which everybody will like. It is "not the Church's duty to give a small tincture of religion to the greatest number possible. Our duty is to preach a faith: to offer a creed, to be accepted or rejected."

A Question of "Intrusion"—Canon Hepher is a well-known Mission preacher of very definite Catholic sympathies, who knew quite well what he was about when he accepted the invitation to conduct fortnightly devotions in a Congregational church. I recorded this new development a few weeks ago. One rather hoped that, as it was known that he had his own bishop's approval, as well as that of the Bishop of London, the old question of vicar's rights would not be raised. But unfortunately King's Weigh House church is situated in the parish of St. Anselm's, Davies street, and the Catholics there have been chocked. The Churchwardens, servers, sidesmen, and congregation, have written to the Bishop of London asking him to take such steps as are necessary to "uphold the just rights of the vicar". But the bishop has merely acknowledged the receipt of the protest. Whether he will give any further reply remains to be seen. James Cairns.

Kill the Clerical Voice

To the Editor of The Churchman:

In reading "The Church in the Furnace" I have come across the following:

"One difficulty is the parson. That we must all recognize as a melancholy fact; one of the chief religious difficulties of the private soldier is the parson. He talks in an affected fashion, and very often talks nonsense. The Church suffers badly from dry rot in the pulpit, and if she is to touch the soldier she must get rid of it. And she must not only put a ban on dry rot, but she must also ban the parsonic manner, and all forms of affectation—they come between the men and Christ."

Of course we all know parsons who have neither the clerical manner nor voice. They are no more affected than the average doctor. They are not half so boresome as the typical lawyer, with his judicial airs; and yet, do not our parsons smile too much, shake hands too often and too zealously, and, I hate to say it, do they not talk too much like perfect ladies? They are living up to a wrong standard. If they could only see that these little superficial weaknesses damage their influence! Why don't the seminaries kill the clerical voice?

Sunday School Teachers' Reserve

To the Editor of The Churchman:

The problem of the transient Sunday school pupil has received a good deal of necessary attention, but the matter of the transient Sunday school teacher is not so frequently mentioned, yet, it seems to me, it is a matter of great importance.

I have not in mind the teachers who are making a career of Sunday school work, but earnest, qualified persons, whose circumstances compel an occasional removal, and who may find themselves in places for a limited number of weeks or months. The knowledge and experience of such persons should be utilized so that, in spite of moving about, their Sundays could be made profitable to themselves and the schools where they may be sojourning.

The Government has given us a hint in its various reserve organizations for war work. It occurs to me this principle could be extended to the formation of a Sunday School Teachers' Reserve with somwhat the following modus operandi:

All teachers to be enroled as reserve teachers.

A reserve teacher on arriving at a town where he or she expects to stay for a Sunday or Sundays should register address and telephone number with the local superintendent to fill any temporary vacancy, to take an extra class, etc. The reserve teacher to take the regular graded lessons to which a sufficient time each week should be put into preparation, so that any emergency class which such teacher might take would proceed with its lesson in the regular course.

The reserve teacher to carry his or her experience of methods, etc., and apply them as suggestions for increasing the serviceableness of rural schools or schools out of the general stimulus of advanced methods.

These are just suggestions offered in the hope that any publicity you might give them will result in their development and working out by the expert students of Sunday school problems.

The work among children is of such vital importance that the services of not one qualified teacher should be dispensed with for even the shortest time, nor should such services be subordinated entirely to the secular exigencies of the teacher.

Reading Aloud the Bible

To the Editor of The Churchman:

My letter to The Churchman some time ago suggesting what seemed to me a workable plan for improving the reading aloud of the Prayer Book and the Bible has brought me a number of personal letters in reply. The plan was in brief to send to the clergy Curry's "Vocal and Literary Interpretation of the Bible" and a certain number of phonograph records giving actual demonstrations of good reading by certain masters of the art.

Some of my correspondents make good suggestions, but impractical until some layman or laywoman who has suffered comes forward with sufficient money to try out the plan in an experimental way. No manufacturer will go into the making of records of the Prayer Book and the Bible as a business venture, and it will entail some preliminary expense to entice our clergy into accepting our good offices even when we offer them. Because, unfortunately, many of our clergy imagine themselves very much better readers than they are. They have to be convicted of sin first and then tactfully persuaded to take our cure even without money and without price.

There may be other more vital things in the work of the Church which need to be done. But when they are done this question of public reading needs attention. There is too little appreciation of its importance. A modest sum devoted to this object would yield large results and no greater memorial could one erect than the gratitude of those who through its work would hear again the Bible and the Prayer Book read with understanding and power.

A Better Financial System

To the Editor of The Churchman:

May I offer a viewpoint relative to your recent editorial, under the caption, "What Do You Propose"?

No business concern could exist under such an amazing financial system as that which obtains in the Church today. It is inefficient and demoralizing, because large amounts are invested in furbelows which should supply essentials further afield, and our rectors are the hirelings of the people over whom they are supposed to have spiritual authority. Such conditions must exist so long as the individual workman demands the right to say upon what portion of the structure the funds available for the upbuilding of Christ's Kingdom are to be placed.

Must not the social body recognize that what is best for the whole body is best for the branch; and who, save the head, shall say what is best for the whole body? The bishops are the heads of the several dioceses. Why should not the bishops direct, each within his jurisdiction, the distribution of benefits? In such case, the salaries of all the clergy, and the moneys for all purposes,—save those intimate to the parish, such as light, heat and music—would be issued from the bishop's office, having been received in a lump sum from the several localities.

The various and manifold demands upon his purse do not appeal to the average layman. He looks upon the repeated calls as an imposition, and reduces his gift accordingly. Whereas, a definite amount could be laid aside more easily.

The saving in waste should compensate for the clerical force, made necessary for the bishop's office by the change; and it would seem to the casual observer that the bishop would be relieved of much of his present routine work thereby.

Thus, the Master's business would be conducted in an orderly and efficient manner and, surely, such an idea is in harmony with true democracy, for a society whose head is a figurehead is in much the same case as a decapitated fowl flapping from the block.

Church Usage

To the Editor of The Churchman:

May I thank the editors of The Churchman for publishing the very useful and instructive articles on Church Usage, by Paster in Urbe. They have been of a double service to me; first, in clearing up my own mind regarding certain matters of decorum and fitness in connection with our services; then, too, they have given me something rather authoritative to point to in taking a stand upon these questions. I am sure a good many clergymen would like to see these articles put into permanent form, so that they might be used in our parishes.

Posters Delayed

To the Editor of The Churchman:

A few of the posters for the Jerusalem Good Friday annual offering reached their destinations after the day on which they were meant to be used. The cause was labor shortage due to enlistments and the draft; making slow service in the printing office, the post office, and our own. Thanks to volunteer workers, most of the material went out on time; but this is to say those who did not receive theirs before Good Friday, not to let the conditions interfere with their parochial contribution to this object which is, as the poster shows, an approved war cause as well as one permanent in times of peace.

Merrick Lectures

H STUFF OF MANHOOD. (Some needed es in American character). By Robert E. er. Fleming H. Revell Company. New York-don: $1.00.

lbert E. Speer speaks here in behalf he Master of Men on behalf of America, with a plea for that kind of manhood that possesses those moral qualities that should characterize the state. These motives mark the recent Merrick Lectures, with a refreshing manliness that is at once forceful and winsome. Discipline and Austerity, The Conservation and Release of Moral Resources, An Unfrightened Hope, The Joy of the Minority, The Life Invisible are the titles of these five challenges to American manhood to complete its idealization of Christ and secure a larger and greater personal endowment of that idealized sense of things spiritual. All are great themes presented in a fine spirit, with vision and a frankness that compel one to face the issues and surrender or go away a weaker man because of refusal to go forward!

American Pictures

AMERICAN PICTURES AND THEIR PAINTERS. By Lorinda Munson Bryant. New York: John Lane Company. Price, $3.00 net.

The author has gathered into this volume short accounts of one hundred and fifty American artists, so arranged that the historic sequence is well preserved and enlivened with a fund of anecdotes. The start is made with Benjamin West who succeeded to the presidency of the Royal Academy, and is followed by appreciations of Copley, Peale and Trumbull. Then a chapter on Stuart and Sully brings us well down into the nineteenth century and quite free from the English tradition which prevailed, quite naturally, until that time. From the early 70's and 80's our artists turned to France as a field for study and from many illustrations in the book, one gleans a sense of the influence of the Continent. The example of Delacroix as bearing on the work of John La Farge, and that of Jean Francois Millet in the case of William Hunt went far to establish the characteristics of American painting for several decades afterward. One should not omit, though, the two eminent exceptions, George Fuller and Winslow Homer, to whom a European training meant very little.

Mrs. Bryant is quick to observe the modern spirit in our men of today. Brilliancy of color, fertility of resource, and ready observation of national traits are met in her pages with a keen perception and good judgment. Those of us who frequent picture exhibitions will recognize many a favorite canvas, and for those who do not, such an ample number of illustrations is very informing, for there are two hundred and thirty, all in half-tone. It behooves the picture collector in these latter days to be prompt in his decisions, for has he not a score of powerful competitors in the buying agents of our museums of art? Choice examples from almost every exhibition appear after an interval in the permanent collections of a number of American cities, and more than one great private gallery has been given to public uses in this way. Frequent note is made in the present volume of this new phase of American art activities.

The Trinity in Art

VISUAL REPRESENTATIONS OF THE TRINITY. AN HISTORICAL SURVEY. By John Brainerd MacHarg, Ph.D. Cooperstown, N. Y.: The Arthur H. Crist Publishing Co. Price $1.25.

To take into account, in connection with this subject, first early Christian episodes, and then finally the Transfiguration, the Crucifixion, and the Coronation of the Virgin is to offer us a very extensive field of research. The author curtails it in dismissing the question of pre-Christian origins of the belief. An admirable arrangement of a score of very short chapters, each one dealing in condensed form with a distinct phase of the theme secures a clear treatment. At the end of each chapter is a list of references, to pictures, to manuscripts, and to other works of art—all important to the student in special subjects; the general reader will find ample provision made for him in the text. While we note the growth and development of the doctrine from the second century, yet it is the period of the middle ages which produced the finest representations of the Trinity and the most abundant. It was the age of the Book of Hours, of illuminated missals, of the frescoes in the churches, their stained-glass, tapestry, sculpture and carving. One must consider not only personifications but also emblems—the cross, the crown, the dove, the rays of light, and their setting whether in archaic and geometrical forms or in the later naturalistic landscape backgrounds.

Five illustrations there are, and to them accrues a special emphasis, as the title of the book would imply. For frontispiece there is a detail of Albrecht Durer's Adoration of the Holy Trinity, a marvel of painter knowledge and power, with its spiritual message disguised and overborne by those characteristics of the Renaissance, a pre-occupation with gracefulness, and the fringes and furbelows of church officialdom of that time. The next picture is the Coronation of Mary, by D. Bouts of Flanders. It is elaborate, too, but the simplicity of its spirit of worship pervades the scene so entirely that its elaboration becomes a rich background only. So also is the example given here of Fra Fillipo Lippi, the Mary Adoring the Child. Two famous paintings are shown together for comparison, La Disputa, of Raphael and the Altar-piece at Ghent, by Hubert and Jan van Eyck. The author suggests that Raphael studied the masterpiece of his northern confreres, since his interpretation of the Trinity is less ambiguous than the Flemings'. But otherwise no two compositions could differ more radically in spirit. La Disputa remains a great theological discussion in which the Trinity does not dominate although placed with great care in the centre of the picture. The altar-piece, on the contrary, is the most perfect and complete expression of spiritual devotion which the art of painting has produced. To give an example of the opposite or horizontal method of composition, there is shown an early Italian Trinity in which three identical persons sit side by side at the table. No meaning is discernible in this identity and no action is shown connecting one with another. It has little value except as archeology.

Since our appeal was signed, the War Commissions of the churches, at the request of the War Commissions of several communions, have sent forth a call, in which Bishop Lawrence joins, for union services and prayer during the month of March, together with this recommendation: "whenever from any community a chaplain goes forth to this great service, we suggest that all the churches of the community join in a general consecration service, sending him forth bearing the ordination of his own body, but with the blessing of all and with the consecration of the community from which he goes to the ministry of the Nation". It is needless for us to assure you that we are in sympathy with the feeling after unity which such union services might call forth, and we would follow this proposal for community consecration so far as it goes. We seek, however, further to understand what joint authorization of a chaplain by the churches of a community could be conferred through the proposed consecration of the community, and with what ministerial commission other than that of his own body he would go to the ministry of the Nation. It is intended that what seems to be implicit in such consecration of the community of the churches is to be made explicit by some Episcopal act of participation in it? If so, we should rejoice exceedingly that the War Commissions through this suggestion of community consecration shall have opened the way to a united consecration of the chaplains, publicly and obviously acknowledged both by the consent of the presbyter and the act of the bishop in deed and in truth.

In order that this desirable end may be attained we would submit for your favorable consideration the following steps that may be taken beyond that of a merely community service.

1. In case of chaplains going from the Episcopal church some union service of mutual recognition and blessing might be sufficient and acceptable.

2. For a minister already regularly ordained according to the usage of his own denomination some additional Episcopal consecration and conferring of authority would place beyond all question his ministry to the Nation.

There are precedents and proposals for such action, indicative of how it might be taken with due regard to the convictions of all and without undue prejudice to the positions of any. We need not, however, enter into the discussion of these precedents, for our immediate appeal is not to the constitutional power of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States for any modification of its canons which might affect its requirements for admission to the regular ministry of your communion. We ask for such declaration and action as the bishops are at liberty to take on the assumption of the theory, commonly prevalent among you, of an Apostolic authority inherent in and continued through the order of the Episcopate, and furthermore, which is offered as a basis of reconciliation to other communions in the fourth proposal of the Lambeth quadrilateral: viz., "the historical Episcopate locally adapted in the methods of its administration to the varying needs of the nations and peoples called of God into the unity of the Church". We are asking for some specific and acceptable adaptation of your administration of the Episcopate to the present needs of the nations. Yet it is not we who ask. It is not the call of the Lord upon all communions for mutual adaptations of their powers and administrations for the perfecting of the ministry of Christ not for this nation only, but for the world?

We would on our part assure you that to the best of our knowledge and belief any such adaptive action which may commend itself to you, and which would require no disavowal of ministries already attested by abundant spiritual fruits, would meet at once with response among our churches in the same spirit, and with equal sense of the overshadowing responsibility of the Church of God for the world after the war.

3. As to the manner or form in which additional Episcopal authority might be conferred a few observations may be sufficient. We may entertain variant views as to the nature of the character or grace conferred in a sacrament or by ordination. We may accept consecration to the work of the Christian ministry without agreeing entirely as to the intention of the ordinance. Such is the fact within the comprehension of the Episcopal church. What is necessary to an honest concurrence in any such act of joint ordination or consecration, without either compromise or contradiction, would be that the comprehensive character and common purpose in it should be made apparent either in some prefatory statement, or in the form of words employed.

So far as concerns the form of any additional consecration, that may be deemed desirable by you, a slight verbal alteration in the words of the ordinal might suffice; if, for example, with the laying on of hands by the bishop, the consecrating word might be used: "Take thou Episcopal authority", etc. Or perhaps better, some form might be commended by you in which more expressly it should be stated for what designated jurisdiction your authority to exercise ministerial functions is conferred. This might so be given and accepted as an ordination ad hoc; that is, for the service designated, as in this case, for the ministry of the Church in the Army and Navy. It would certainly be an impressive spectacle —worthy of all acceptation—if in the presence of representatives of the communion from which the chaplain goes forth, a bishop of the Episcopal church, with the laying on of hands, should bestow upon him whatsoever of consecrating grace and blessing he may give, so that above all question his ministry to our soldiers and sailors may be a perfect service acceptable unto God. Such joint action of bishop and presbyter, such concurrence of churches in a real act of unity would be honorable to all. Its justification, were any needed, might be given in these words from the "Heads of Agreement" between certain ministers of London so long ago as 1648, as follows: "Where different principles lead to the same practice, we may join together in that practice reserving to each his own principles".

The Standing of the Minister So Consecrated

The further question as to the standing or responsibility of the minister, supposing such joint authorization had been given, may occur to you. If, indeed, it seems the right thing now to be done, we might say of this, as of other possible consequence do it first, and discuss it afterwards. T question, however, seems to us to pres no serious difficulty.

1. His ministerial standing would rem where it was before with the denominati to which he belongs. He would not ce to be responsible to his own communion cause he had become acceptable as an dained minister to others.

2. By his additional consecration he wo not thereby have received jurisdiction serve as a regular minister of the Episco church. He could be inducted into t only as he might be found to conform such requirements as the Episcopal chu prescribes for its own clergy, or as bishop of a diocese might deem hims warranted to license him to exercise mi terial functions within his diocese. services in any other communions than own would be subject to the ordinary c ditions of the ministry in each body, need not of itself occasion any change existing requirements of their sev polities.

Would Such Act Lead to Further Church Unity?

1. The act of joint church authenticat of chaplains would be a definite public m festation of the will for unity. It wo be at a single point at least a realizat of unity which, once accomplished, mi open the way for further removals of stacles to unity. We should thereby h succeeded in making as a war measur precedent for ourselves to follow after war. We should have secured a fulcr on an accomplished fact for further eff to throw off the dead weight upon Church of disunity.

2. The practical consequences of such act of unity would depend largely u whether it were done by an individual bis on his own responsibility, or whethe should be done in accordance with a laration by the whole House of Bish Such a declarative act would be a mani tation of the spirit of unity of the lar consequence.

An overture to the churches on your of some specific and significant measur unity would at once lay on other chur the responsibility of its further determ tion. But an expression merely of the s ment of unity does nothing for uni faith without works is dead.

In presenting thus these further expl tions and considerations in laying be you this appeal to our fellow-believer all the churches, we would remind that it is not limited in its intention s to the act which has been specified.

We hold ourselves in readiness to re from you any overtures that may see you to go further, and by some no apostolic achievement break down the w wall of separation between the Epis and non-Episcopal communions. But not to do whatever can be done, unprep ness on the part of the churches for organized Christianity will have to and must overcome after the war, s to us to put the Church in peril of disaster.

In presenting to you this appeal fo present action we are not unmindful o fact that the reunion alone of the chu of the Reformation would form but a of the reunion of Christendom. We,

SEVENTH YEAR

The ALL NIGHT MISSION, now in the seventh year of its career of service, during which it has sheltered over 200,000 men, fed over 150,000 and helped over 14,000 to a new start in life, and has made 800 visits to prisons, 900 visits to hospitals, and conducted 2,000 services, is in need of funds.

This is a unique and practical rescue mission for men which never closes NIGHT OR DAY, where the weary, wandering souls to whom all doors are closed may find sympathetic friends to talk and pray with, free shelter, clothing, food and drinking water, NIGHT OR DAY.

Through Mr. Dudley Tyng Upjohn, its President and Treasurer, the Mission asks for support to continue and extend its work. Contributions may be sent to 8 Bowery or P. O. Box 81, New York City.

This work is endorsed by the Rt. Rev. Charles S. Burch, D.D., Bishop Suffragan of New York.

OBITUARY

IN MEMORY OF THE LATE
EDWIN AUGUSTUS STEVENS

We, the Trustees of the Church of the Holy Innocents, Hoboken, N. J., desire to give expression to our deep sense of bereavement in the death of the late Edwin Augustus Stevens, and to convey to his family, our fellow parishoners, and his numerous friends, our sincere sympathy in the loss sustained in the departure of one who had endeared himself to us all.

The late Colonel Stevens was a staunch and devoted Churchman. A member of this parish from the time of its foundation, and one of its trustees, almost from the first, his unfailing interest in its welfare was evidenced by his faithful attendance at public worship, his active participation in the work, and his generous gifts.

But his marked ability and sterling qualities of character commanded a wider sphere of opportunity and usefulness in the Church; and he was repeatedly elected a deputy to the Diocesan and General Conventions, and for many years served as treasurer of the diocese. His heartful sympathy with the Catholic movement led him to associate himself with others in important and effective enterprises to further its ideals. And his wide spiritual outlook upon life, together with his warm-hearted and genial nature, made his personal influence for good a remarkable and outstanding quality of his character.

As a citizen he was public-spirited and patriotic. For several years he rendered distinguished service as State Commissioner of Public Roads; later he was a member of the State Highway Commission. Indeed, his versatility made him capable of performing many tasks, all of which won him a high tribute of praise. More recently he placed his valuable experience and knowledge of ship-building at the disposal of our Government, and it was while he was engaged in this patriotic work that he fell ill, and died of pneumonia in Washington, D. C., on Friday morning, May 8, 1918.

He counted many bishops and priests among his intimate friends; and those who survive him will cherish his memory as among the brightest and happiest recollections of their lives. His fidelity, his sincerity, and his goodness, were recognized by all who were so fortunate as to know him, and as a host he was always a delight to his guests.

Deeply appreciating his fine personality, we believe that the nobility of his character will appear the more commanding as time, in its recession, brings it into fuller and truer perspective.

Grant him, O Lord, eternal rest:

And let perpetual light shine upon him.

Resolved, That a copy of this minute be sent to his bereaved widow, and the leading Church magazines, and that the same be filed by the secretary of this board in the parish records.

An Appeal to the House of Bishops

ay share your hope that at some future me in the Divine fulfilment of history the nglican church may be found not merely cting in a mediating function, but much ore rather in a representative position, omprehensive of all the religious forces f the ages of the Reformation, standing ossibly in some future Ecumenical Council or the supreme faith and the guiding prinples of liberty and loyalty which are our ommon heritage, and upholding the belief, hich has never been wholly lost throughut our Protestant divisions and which all ur creeds confess, in the one Holy Catholic hurch.

In the appeal which we now submit we ave urged that we take counsel not of ur fears but of our hopes. For the history f former efforts for church comprehenion shows that one often fatal obstacle has een the fears which different parties or ommunions entertained of one another. n mutual mistrust they had not faith nough to believe that among them all the ruth could take care of itself. For instance, o mention but one, in the endeavors to orm an act of comprehension in 1689 the oderate churchmen were afraid of a schism f the non-jurors, if they should include he Presbyterians, and the Independents ere afraid of all the others. Shall we sufer church unity to fail again in this day, ith the stupendous world-work to be acomplished by this generation, because there hall not be found among us that perfect ove that casteth out all fear?

With high esteem, respectfully submitted,

(Signed) NEWMAN SMYTH.

WILL YOU SANCTION THIS?

By REX BEACH

PRESIDENT AUTHOR'S LEAGUE

CONGRESS—or a sufficient majority of it—has voted to destroy magazine reading.

It has accomplished this by passing a simple law re-establishing a postal "zone" system for all publications—a zone system and postal principle that was abolished by President Lincoln in 1863, and by establishing through a complicated system postal rates that mean increases of from 50 to 900 per cent. postage increases to all periodical readers.

By this "zone" system American readers of periodicals—home, educational, scientific, business, or religious—are to be penalized by enormous postage increases on the weekly or monthly papers they read, and the greater their accidental remoteness from the city of publication the greater is the penalty that is placed upon them.

Magazines have been a slow growth. In the process of their development and evolution it has happened that publishing is chiefly concentrated in the East. This large magazine increase in postage, therefore, discriminates unfairly but with great force against the entire West—beginning even with Western New York and Ohio and increasing rapidly until such States as Washington, Oregon, New Mexico, and California are to pay nine times the amount of postage formerly paid on the advertising pages alone of their magazine. What this increase means in cost to readers is incalculable.

And the tragedy of this 50 to 900 per cent. magazine increase postage law lies in the fact that this loss of readers will come from classes and from sections of our nation where widespread reading should be most encouraged — from people in remote sections where life is a bitter struggle on the margin of subsistence—where the habit of reading is just forming and the little weekly or monthly budget for magazines has but so very recently become recognized as an important item in family life. The terrific magazine postage increase will wipe these out. That is the real tragedy to this nation.

This 50 to 900 per cent. postage increase on magazines is not a war tax. Publishers were already taxed by excess profits and income taxes. It is not a war tax; Postmaster General Burleson has so stated in his annual report when he declared it is permanent postal legislation—unless repealed through your protests to Congress and Congressmen. Will you write—telegraph—or urge the passage of resolutions of protest against this destructive law?

WILL YOU HELP?

Write to your Congressman, protest against this destructive law, and demand its repeal.

Get your club or association to adopt resolutions demanding its repeal.

Will you enroll to help repeal this law that penalizes periodical readers with heavy penalties?

If so, send your name and address—and a copy of any resolutions adopted—to

THE THIRD LIBERTY LOAN

I assume that the rector of every parish in the Episcopal church is deeply interested in the third Liberty Loan, and that he will do everything in his power, privately as he has opportunity, and publicly by commending it to his congregation, to make it not only a success but a great success, beyond the amount asked for. In that way can the people show their determined purpose to stand by the Government and help it all the sooner to win and end the war and bring about a lasting and enduring peace.

Things in General

WRAPPED in furs, gloved and veiled to perfection, she stopped to buy Easter cards. "For my boys in France," she explained with serene pride. And then she selected two coquettish little girls, with pink satin skirts and fluffy parasols above the inscription: "In the springtime I greet thee". Funny? Yes, but not if you follow them to France to the front-line trenches. Two boys face to face with death and little girls in pink satin instead of the glory of Easter!

In the new beautiful reredos designed for St. Thomas's church in New York the figure of Luther appears. How that must hurt some of our ecclesiastical architects who feel that they are the stewards of the Church's theology.

That was a deft uppercut of Bishop Greer's in his address at the dinner of the Church Club of New York when he alluded to the nineteen minutes of the Archbishop's time which had not been provided for by the enterprising committees in charge of his itinerary. It was a worn and weary visitor that returned to New York from Washington. Shaking hands with five thousand eager admirers was a bit unnecessary, so was his address in Columbia's Chapel by which he was made to pay for his degree. Matters were handled better in Chicago. America's enthusiasm for distinguished visitors is an indulgence of good will calculated to damage the health of the most rugged hero.

More than twice as many people were killed in the streets of New York City last month as during March last year—fifty-three in all. Twenty-seven deaths were of children under sixteen years of age. Not Zeppelins, but automobiles.

For Country

GOOD NEWS FROM FRANCE has been received by the Y. M. C. A. The following is clipped from their War Work Bulletin:

Messages from our workers in France are doubly welcome at this time. Three cablegrams have come this week, all signed by Miss Roelofs, who is in charge of the French work which includes hotel and club rooms in Paris, social and recreational work among munition workers in Lyons, St. Etienne and Bourges and social rooms for the nurses in Red Cross huts at the American base hospitals.

The first message read, "Notify families not to worry. Little danger". The second announced the completion of the new social and recreational centre for munition girls in Lyons, with seven hundred in daily attendance. Later came a hurried appeal for popular music to be used in the Hotel Petrograd. This message was sent on the day received to music dealers in New York City and cordial response came on return mail.

MRS. J. S. CUSHMAN, chairman of the War Work Council of the Y. W. C. A., has presented an autographed copy of the Scofield Readers Bible to each hostess house.

Few guests who make use of the volume will realize all the hostess houses owe to Mrs. Cushman. She visited the opening of the first house at Plattsburg in October, 1917. It was she who attended the dedication of many other hostess houses, and who, more than any other person, made the "Hostess House idea" tangible and practical—a service to the Government, attested to alike by officers, training camp activities agents, and thousands of appreciative guests.

FELIX LAMOND, organist for many years of Trinity chapel and head of the Trinity School of Church Music, has entered the Government service. He is serving under the Red Cross with rank of second lieutenant in the hospital attached to the Brooklyn Navy Yard, New York. His work is to cheer up the sick and wounded jackies, and to act as an intermediary between them and their distant friends, to write their letters and telegrams, and to make the burden of confinement in hospital as light as possible.

AS AN OUTCOME of the work of the G. F. S. Mrs. Morton S. Lewis, president of the Diocesan Organization in New Jersey, has succeeded in forming a Community Committee and raising the money to start at once in Elizabeth a large work for girls.

Two gentlemen have given the money to buy a house costing $8,000; $7,000 for expenses has been raised. The house will be thoroughly repaired and put into condition for use as a lodge; in this twenty-five girls will live while twenty-five more will come in for meals. The house will be used for club work, as a social centre, as an employment bureau and a housing bureau; the whole is under the management of the Community Committee on Housing Girls.

Our Contributors

CENSORS do not always agree—at least that is the conclusion we draw from the following letter received in THE CHURCHMAN office the other day. It is dated Toronto and signed by one of our regular readers. The news item referred to is one describing the death in a London air-raid of a certain devoted parish priest whose custom it was during raids to visit his people to comfort and reassure them.

> In your English Church news of March 30 I see that the name of the clergyman and that of his parish in London have been deleted by the censor. I am wondering whether this is by the British or the American censor, because there does not seem to have been much secrecy about the matter during the last few weeks. I have received religious papers from England in which the name of the man is stated and a great many particulars about him and his parish are given. The reference is to the Rev. E. H. Mosse, rector of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, London.

Romney Reynolds has sent us another of his delightful "Sketches From Life". This one might equally well go into our "Women of a Former Time" series. However it is classed, it is always an inspiration to read of the saintly lives that have been lived in our own branch of the Church and among the surroundings to which we are accustomed.

Frances E. Cheney, who contributes this week a very illuminating article entitled "Comfort the Feeble-Minded", is a Churchwoman of Springfield, Massachusetts, who has devoted herself to pioneer work in this field. She is chairman of the Springfield Committee for the Study of the Feeble-Minded.

The Rev. H. Lilienthal Lonsdale is the rector of St. George's church, Astoria, Long Island. His article, "The Americanization of the Immigrant Alien", is the substance of a paper read before the New York clericus on March 11. Mr. Lonsdale is known in this country and in England by several volumes of sermons which have been published by Longmans.

Tennyson Prophesied Air Battles

A Hursley correspondent recently sent the following remarkable lines to an English Church paper quoted from Locksley Hall:

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be.

Saw the heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails;
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew!
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue;

Far along the world-wide whisper of the south-wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the peoples plung
thro' the thunderstorm;

Till the war-drum throbbed no longer,
the battle flags wert furl'd,
In the Parliament of man, the Federat

The House of Bishops and Bishop Jones

THE House of Bishops in its method of dealing with the Report of the Commission of Bishops appointed to take action in the case of Bishop Jones has brought relief to a good many troubled minds. They have acted fearlessly and as we think wisely. First, they have declared their belief in the rightness of America's participating in the war. They have shown no pacifist leanings. Second, they have defended the right of free opinion and speech in civic matters insofar as such freedom is consonant with the law of the land. Third, they have repudiated the inference that an excited public mind is to be the arbiter of opinion in the Church.

The hundreds of petitions that have been placed in the hands of the Presiding Bishop protesting against the report made some months ago by the committee of three bishops reveal the conviction that that report if left to stand would have gravely imperiled the prestige of the House of Bishops. Some of the most militarist of the clergy were among the protestants. The bishops met the problem squarely; they deserve hearty gratitude for preventing incalculable harm to the Church. It took courage as well as right conviction to take this stand. It was a thorny problem which they were given to handle. Any nice, judicial settlement of a question having so many explosive elements is sure to arouse dissatisfaction somewhere. The bishops have acted with sure Christian instinct in making it clear that an excited public opinion either in the nation or the diocese is not to become the interpreter of Christianity or to control the councils of the Church.

Bishop Jones would not wish to go back to Utah. It would be prejudicial to the work of that jurisdiction to have him do so. He has, perhaps, not shown statesmanship in that difficult environment, but he is a sincere, zealous disciple of his Master. His mistakes have been of judgment rather than of the heart. He will profit by his experience and we also hope that the missionary jurisdiction of Utah will perceive that the Christian Church is governed by deeper currents of conviction than those which control mass-meetings.

It must also be added that Bishop Jones deserves respect for the dignity with which he has conducted himself through this trying experience. He has not posed as a martyr. He has refrained from public utterance and writing, though one conversant with the enterprising methods of American journalism suspects how sorely he must have been harassed for "copy". With modesty and simplicity he placed his case in the hands of his brother bishops and awaited their judgment. So the case ends.

Good Temper

"SOME of the virtues are climatic—by which I mean that they furnish the climate, the atmosphere, the soil in which all the other virtues grow. As moral reformers . . . we should fix our attention on these climatic virtues. We may be sure that if only we can get the climate right, the atmosphere right, the soil right, the rest will be comparatively easy; whereas if the climate is wrong all our labors will be in vain." So writes Dr. L. P. Jacks in an article on "Good Temper in the Present Crisis" in the April number of the Yale Review.

There are two ways by which to make this a better world. One is by reconstructing or creating anew the legal framework of our institutions, social, industrial, national and international. We can add new commandments and prohibitions to our governing codes. Having discovered that our old ways of doing things worked injustice and led to havoc and waste, we may set about patching up here and there our laws, erecting new safeguards, curbing the power of selfishness to do evil and giving greater freedom and security to the forces that aim to achieve good. This has been, upon the whole, the procedure of nearly every reform movement, and its accomplishment of good is by no means to be despised.

But, disregarding for the moment the positively vicious and sordid people who are willing to profit by what is unjust and inhumane, most of the people who are parties to every struggle for reconstruction get pretty much into the mood of those at enmity one with another. Conservative and radical, both desiring a better world, act as if they were enemies. They enter the work of reconstruction in the mood of combatants. Each suspects the other's motives. Each ultimately resorts to tactics and stratagem that creates bad feeling.

Good temper is seldom present at times of reconstruction in the Church, in industrialism, or in government. And yet everybody pretends and, generally speaking, really desires what he believes to be the best thing for human happiness and well being. The atmosphere in which reconstruction moves to its appointed work is often one of clever manoeuvre, political stratagem and defensive tactics. Each party in the conflict is afraid of being outwitted. Each guards jealously its rights and is not unwilling by the use of force, the force of majorities, to compass its ends. That is about the way civilization has jogged along its arduous, ragged, upward path in history. It has been slow, wasteful, and upon the whole a rather unlovely process to contemplate.

But there is another way. It is so radical that it can almost despise commandments, prohibitions and politics. It is the way of good temper. When we make good temper the mother of all the virtues we are, of course, on firm ground, for we merely hark back to the all-embracing grace of charity as expounded in the thirteenth chapter of St. Paul's Epistles to the Corinthians.

If we mistake not the mood of people at this fateful hour of the world's life, Christians are not willing merely to patch up old abuses, make a few concessions here and there, renounce a few privileges and then get down to a working basis whereby we can go on just as we went on before in the status of an armed truce, the have-nots nibbling away at the defenses of the haves, the haves reluctantly conceding privilege to the have-nots. We are eager and soul-hungry for a great deal better world, an altogether different world, a world governed by a Christian temper. We shall have secured it only when opposing opinions meet in the atmosphere of good will.

The startling aspect of the reconstruction program of the British Labor Party, of which all too little has been said in this country, is that the document was conceived in such good temper. It challenged society to take up the world's work in a new and generous mood. It seemed to take for granted that all just and generous-minded men and women desire the law of kindness in our human relations. That is what, we take it, Dr. Jacks means by his climatic virtue of good temper.

We think the time has come for the Church to insist upon that fundamental Christian virtue in all the efforts of reconstruction in the near future. It must so preach that virtue that its members shall understand that not only are they unchristian but intolerable as leaders or counselors unless they frankly enter the councils of civilization in this generous Christian mood. Our capitalists must acquire the permanently troubled conscience which asks what concessions can we make, what can we contribute towards the creation of a more just and livable, kinder, cleaner, more beautiful world. They can no longer remain on the defensive, contesting every inch of the ground. They must not be willing to remain opaque to the light of the new era.

Neither can the opposition, the social-unrest element, go on sparring for the advantage in ill-temper, and a suspicious and demagogic mood. If we were to choose between a world governed by our present capitalist's code and one controlled by the bitter agitator as we have seen him wield his power in democracies, we should vastly prefer to be governed by the former, for its selfishness at least submits to the discipline of intelligent self-interest and takes counsel of worldly wisdom. The aggression of the demagogue may be curbed by no discipline whatever. He knows only the passionate desire to possess. It is no less sordid than the other and far more dangerous.

We have been living through a social era of trench warfare. Whatever gains have been registered have been costly. They have been achieved in a climate of enmity, prejudice and suspicion. The Church has a right, nay it is its patent duty, to insist that those who call themselves Christian shall come out into the light open spaces, exchange views and discuss differences in good temper. At every council board where human happiness and human betterment are at stake, men who call themselves Christians must invite the presence of the Christ. The consciousness of that Presence will create the only atmosphere in which Christian reconstruction can be effected.

Not a better world, but a new world is the watchword of reconstruction. How can we help to claim that new world for Christ must be the troubled cry of every Christian.

Prayers for Today

HARPER BROTHERS have just published a new book of prayers and meditations compiled by Dr. Samuel McComb, entitled "Prayers for Today". As a prefatory note announces, the book is a collection of prayers suited to our modern needs and especially in the spiritual situation created by the World War. To each prayer is appended a brief extract from a writer of the last or the present century, intended to serve as a subject of meditation.

To the revival of interest in the exercise of prayer we are largely indebted in this country to the spiritual leadership of Dr. Worcester and Dr. McComb. Much of the glamour of public interest fixed upon the Emmanuel Movement has disappeared; little nowadays is being written in the newspapers about it, and it has ceased to exist as a subject of controversy. But there is hardly a church in America which, directly or indirectly, has not experienced a quickening of its spiritual life through a renewal of faith in the power of prayer. Emmanuel church, Boston, did an incalculable service in this regard.

The world at this hour is full of people who long to know how to pray. They are courageous, but their fortitude needs daily sustaining from on High. The liturgical prayers of our common worship do not give adequate expression to their needs. They require a fresher language in which to talk to God. Dr. McComb's little book of prayers will be heartily welcomed by such.

There are multitudes of people among us with nerves jangled and overwrought, who have lost their grip upon life; they find no prayers in the Church's Book of Prayer which relates their anguish, their fears and doubts in the homely words of their peculiar needs. Dr. McComb through his rich pastoral experience knows what these broken-hearted people long to say to God. This little book of prayers will help such to bring unity and peace into the conflict of their troubled hearts.

Perhaps no one better than a clergyman, unless it be the nerve specialist, knows how much anguish lies just beneath the surface of our common life. In the confessional of the pastor and the physicians are uncovered the wounds that are making life a desperately pathetic thing for many people. Emmanuel Church has taught us a good deal that we know of the medicine of prayer and we acknowledge an increasing debt to the clergy of our Church who are skillfully interested in teaching Christians how to pray.

INQUIRIES have come to THE CHURCHMAN office whether the R. J. Campbell, whose striking articles have been appearing weekly in our pages is the Baptist minister of that name in Iowa or the distinguished English clergyman whose name won international renown by his ministry in the City Temple, London. He happens to be the latter.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Standing Fast

WHAT England's soldiers are doing for us is revealed in this simple story:

Yes, and the men are tired, so tired after weeks of fighting after these last days and nights that they can hardly stagger up to resist another attack, yet they do so because their spirit wakes again above their bodily fatigue; so tired that they go on fighting like sleep-walkers, and in any respite lie in ditches and under hedges and in open fields under fire in deep slumber until the shouts of their sergeants stir them again.

Some of these men have been fighting since March 21 with only a few days' rest.

Little bodies of troops marched up toward the battle line led forward by some young officer with grave eyes. They were streaked with dust and carried heavy packs, with their rifles slung and all about were men of those battalions who had been fighting through all this battle—dirty, tattered men with the thin, gaunt look of soldiers who had been long under fire in the battle line but still hard, with tightened lips and steel in their eyes.

Some of them slept awhile, stretched out in the fields, fathoms deep in sleep. Some of them drowsed as they marched. In one of their headquarters where I went a staff officer slept on a chair in a small farmhouse room filled with other officers discussing plans of battle. In another headquarters near the battle line, so near that a shell came through the roof of the hut when they were taking their meal, a staff officer was so tired after four days and nights of battle that he could not remember one day from another, though when a message came over the wire to say the enemy was attacking again he became alert at once and went out to give new orders.—New York Times.

The Archbishop Sails

ARCHBISHOP LANG has finished his mission and and returned to England. Nearly a hundred thousand people have heard him speak. His word has reached many thousands more, for the clergy, teachers and other leaders of opinion who have been his hearers have come away with new views and a sharpened sense of responsibility. Men and women who have heard him speak have been sobered by the gravity of his message. His humility of spirit, free from hate and self-assertion, has chastened our mood. Some of our nervous tension has through this spiritual commerce relaxed into quietness and confidence which are the evidence of the understanding heart. Perhaps no visitor who has come to our shores from abroad during our generation has left so profound and wholesome an impression. For all this we are grateful to those who brought him here and deeply grateful to him for having done us this incalculable good.

We have only one regret. The New York committee was in no way responsible for the refusal of the request of the People's Institute in New York for a meeting at which the Primate might address that large and serious-minded company of men and women who are giving their lives to community service. It was the earnest desire of the Social Service Commission of New York that a meeting might be arranged whereby a message could be directed to those peculiarly interested in the work of social reconstruction. The request of the People's Institute was not permitted to reach the New York Committee. We especially regret this failure because there is a side of the Archbishop's personality and an emphasis in his message that were not fully revealed in this visit to America. Those familiar with his history know that the striking contribution of his life was made to the English church as Bishop of Stepney, not as Primate of England. His career as Archbishop of York has added little lustre to his reputation. As the bishop of the poor and disfranchised, he touched the heart of England.

He could have spoken words to our social workers, teachers, nurses, settlement house leaders which might have helped to bridge the void that now so cruelly exists between philanthropy and the Church of Christ. He might have helped us to see that there can be no valid reconstruction unless our humanitarian program be saturated with all its antecedents in the healing law of Christ.

American Episcopalianism is not yet abreast of the deepest currents that are stirring the soul of our time.

The Post and the Wisconsin Vote

THE New York Evening Post has always shown a martyr's passion for unpopular causes. Its latest evidence of detachment from passionate patriotism is its springing to the defense of the vote cast for Victor Berger in the recent Wisconsin election. It explains those 110,000 ballots as coming from high-minded, independent voters, incensed by the acid test of loyalty so vigorously applied during the campaign. It was very proud, we recall, over having explained Mr. Mitchel's defeat on the same ground.

Any one knowing Wisconsin knows where that one hundred and ten thousand votes came from. They were German votes. The editor of The Living Church, for example, is conversant with affairs of that State. He has in an unqualified way lamented the disgrace to the State of those hundred and ten thousand votes. The Post would do well not to quote the Free Press of Milwaukee as a competent interpreter of the loyal sentiment of that community. Any one who knows Milwaukee knows what section of its population finds a voice in the Milwaukee Free Press. If the Kaiser would wish to have gratifying news of his Wisconsin subjects he would subscribe to the Free Press; and we are given to think, also, that from time to time he might pick up a few crumbs of comfort from a reading of the Post. Its eloquent apotheosis to liberty and its rapier thrusts at pan-Germanism are calculated to give him a sad moment or two, but its untiring charity towards wrong-headed Americans might bring him hope that all is going well in the United States.

Any leisurely blundering official, muddling our war-program, can count upon a clean bill of health from the editors of that decorous journal; but what is certain to arouse their tempered indignation is an occasional lapse into folly of the patriot who is all on fire to win the war.

The Balance of Power

WHAT we put into our youth in 1918 may be the balance of power that turns the scale in the critical hours of 1920 and 1921. What we put into the children in 1918 may be the determining factor in that reconstruction period toward which we look half in hope and half in dread.

The G. B. R. E. has spent five years convincing Episcopalians that a general department of education in the Church can render valuable service.

The Pennsylvania Railroad has an educational department. The John Wanamaker stores have educational departments. Cities and states have educational departments. Educational methods are exercising increasing control over the promotion of business and the destinies of organizations.

The General Board of Religious Education, organized by direction of Canon 59, is the educational department of the Church.

The Baptist laymen have just finished a campaign for $1,000,000; $175,000 of this goes to the Baptist Board of Education.

The Methodists are just completing a $26,000,000 campaign, $21,000,000 having been raised. This money is to strengthen the work of the schools, colleges and theological seminaries.

The Jews raise annually in New York $1,420,000 for 41 Sunday schools, 4 parochial schools, 136 week-day schools, 500 chedarin. From these schools, by a careful selective process, come the candidates for the theological seminaries, the teachers in all of the Hebrew schools, social service and educational workers, and the secretaries of the Y. M. H. A.

The field of the G. B. R. E. is in 300,000 homes with parents and children; 7,000 church schools with 53,000 teachers and 490,000 pupils; 112 church preparatory schools, 45 of which are boys' and 67 are girls' and contain altogether 10,000 pupils; 700 colleges and universities with 17,000 students from Church homes and parishes; 12 theological seminaries with 450 candidates for Holy Orders. This is the recruiting ground of the Church. Here is the Church of tomorrow.

The war has made the need for religious education even more imperative than it was at the time the G. B. R. E. was created. The Archbishop of York expressed the reason in a sentence when he said "The spirit and ideals of Christianity are the hope of social reconstruction".

The War Time Education Fund for which the General Board asks is only $45,000. The leaders and teachers of religious education have unparalleled opportunities. The Government is preparing for three years more of war. Social and educational workers are looking farther ahead than that. The Church's vision must be the keenest and most long-sighted of all.

A Gracious Tribute

WE are glad to quote in full an editorial which appeared in The Virginian of Norfolk, Virginia, regarding Bishop Randolph:

> It is always pleasant to record incidents which show how powerless are distinctions of sect or creed to repress the voicing of a brotherhood of humanity in the presence of those issues that death transfers to the courts of heaven. On the steamer bearing the remains of Bishop Randolph to their last earthly rest the Paulist Choristers were passengers, and under direction of their leaders, who are priests of an order of the Catholic church, solemn and tender dirges were sung while the body of the Episcopal Prelate was being borne to the train at Newport News and again at Richmond as the coffin was being transferred to a funeral car. It was a touching tribute to a memory unspotted of the world, and beyond that a testimony of the essential oneness in spirit of all true Soldiers of the Cross. Despite conflicting dogmas, there is a tie that binds all Christian hearts and there is a chord of fellowship under test of trial that can never fail to make itself known. To us who speak with diffidence, it seems that the one Shepherd of many folds must rejoice when peace and charity rule them all, and that the orthodoxy, under whatever name, which abounds most in love all embracing is that which will win for those who practice it full membership in the church universal.

Chaplain's Bill Passed

THE House of Representatives has passed the Chaplain's Bill increasing the ratio of chaplains to one for every twelve hundred men. The law providing one chaplain for every regiment was made when there were only twelve hundred men in a regiment; now there are thirty-six hundred. The new bill not only provides three chaplains for every regiment, but makes it possible to assign a chaplain to military groups not regimentally organized.

At the beginning of the war there were sixty-seven chaplains in the army. Today there are six hundred and sixty-six. The new law will permit the appointment of an additional eight hundred.

The chaplain can accomplish what the Y. M. C. A. worker and the "camp pastor" can never do. He alone has access to every part of the camp, barracks, hospital, guardroom, since he has officer's standing and can thereby do much for the men which would otherwise be impossible. He alone of all the religious workers goes with the regiment wherever it may go.

This new legislation is due to the wisdom and persistence of the Federal Council of Churches. It was their memorial, supported by the authorities of the Roman Catholic church, which was introduced at the last session of Congress. The passage of the bill has been urged by Christians of every communion. The House of Bishops passed resolutions in regard to the bill at their meeting last week. The fact that our army is to have something like an adequate number of chaplains is an evidence of the value of united action on the part of the churches in this country.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

Modern Pictures From the Old Book—The One Who Refused to "Make Merry" and His Modern Imitators

By THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

"He was angry and would not go in."—St. Luke xv-28. (Read from verse 22 to 32.)

During the publication of the series on "The Young Man Who Went Wrong", I received the following letter, and now take great pleasure in complying with the request of the writer.

> As one who has been a reader of THE CHURCHMAN for several decades and so has read all your Saturday night sermons with pleasure and profit; and who, moreover, is particularly pleased with your treatment of the old and ever new subject of the Prodigal Son, may I be permitted a suggestion? It is, that after you complete the three sermons that you add another on the "Elder Son". It seems to me that the Elder Sons in the community need the mirror held up to them quite as much as the Prodigal Sons. Is it not possible that the influence of this elder son in the home had as much to do with the delinquency of the prodigal as his own desires for liberty and pleasure?
> We all know families in which there is a member who can say, "neither disobeyed I at any time thy commandment", and yet who is so lacking in love, consideration and respect for the other members of the family and who so indulges an ungoverned temper that the rest of the family are kept unhappy. The graphic pen picture of the Elder Son suggests such a person, and I have often wondered how much the propulsion of his influence may have had to do with sending the Prodigal from home.

THERE can be no doubt that the writer of this letter has discerned the very purpose of the Master in telling the story. There was one species of wickedness which Christ never forgave. To him who had plunged into vice to such an extent as to actually bring on the palsy He said, when He saw the first sign of contrition, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee". Even the woman "taken in adultery" heard His tender voice saying, "Go and sin no more". But you cannot show me an instance in all His life where for the Pharisee He had anything except excoriation and contempt. The one sort of man towards whom He never showed patience was the self-complacent man; perfectly satisfied with his own supposed goodness, turning a cold and cynical tombstone gaze toward some sorrow-stricken prodigal, weary of his sin and wanting to come home. The one vice which Jesus never forgave was the vice of self-righteousness: the vice of the virtuous. To whom was that most biting anathema spoken which He ever uttered: "Ye serpents! Ye generation of vipers! How can ye escape the damnation of hell"? To the most punctilious members of the church as it then existed, in the Jewish Synagogue, when form had degenerated into formalism.

And it was to these very people—outwardly the most moral folks in the community, the "pillars", the "leading citizens"—to whom Jesus addressed His parable of the Prodigal Son, and its supplement, in the story of the Elder Brother.

And as He begins, His voice is low and tender and gentle; for He is speaking to the "sinner"; He is calling him home. But in the words which we are considering tonight He is addressing the camouflaged "saint": the man who, when Sunday comes, always dresses in his Sunday clothes; possibly the superintendent of the Sunday School; the man who in all his life has never been known to say "damn"!—at least not where anybody could hear him: the "successful business man", who keeps Sunday and everything else he can lay his hands on. He is speaking to him now.

And the first point which I want to make with all the emphasis that I can summon is, that He did not hold those people up to contempt because they went to church and were outwardly moral. That would be to miss the whole meaning of his discourse. He is not speaking against the religious life; remember that, ye who can discern only the spots on the sun and cannot see the sun; but against the religious life which is not religious. He is scoring unreality. So He grasps his brush and paints them in the form of this elder son.

And he was a good citizen. He had stayed at home. He had been working while the other was playing. It was all true. But he had done it all in the wrong spirit. "Lo these many years do I serve Thee." Yes, that was just it. He had been a servant, thinking only of what he could get, but not a son, and now he forgets to be a brother. "Thou never gavest me even a kid that I might make merry with my friends. But as soon as this thy son hath come who hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf." There we have it! Not—"my Brother hath come"! He forgot all about that. But it may perhaps pain the old man, his father, to be reminded that this prodigal was his own son; and so, with the sneering tone of sarcasm—that most devilish of all devilish gifts—with this "poison of asps under his lips"—he says, "as soon as this thy son hath come", and I can see him with evil glance looking to see whether the dagger aimed at the heart of his gray-haired and rejoicing old father has taken effect, "who hath devoured thy living with harlots"—notice that. It is the first time it has been spoken of in the parable. But we may be sure the elder brother will speak of it. No such chance will be permitted to pass him. To the great God Himself Isaiah was able to say with confidence, "Thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back"! But not so this self-righteous elder brother, priding himself on being the "good" member of the household. "Neither transgressed I at any time thy commandments. "What was he doing now? It never occurred to him that he was the lost son; but he was. The only difference was that he had not yet been found. It never occurred to him any more than it does to his modern imitators, that if his outward life was more "moral", it was only as the counterfeit is brighter than the well-worn silver.

"He was angry and would not go in!" Here is the "good" man; the Sunday-go-to-meeting man; and yet filled with contemptuousness, and pride, and self-complacence, and all uncharitableness. "Angry" and at what? Because his father had been forgiving enough to welcome home a penitent. Suppose, instead of the father, this elder brother had chanced to be the first to meet the prodigal!

Remember this: One of the greatest evidences of real goodness is to be able to appreciate goodness in others. And where you find a man—or a woman—who cannot do that, whatever else he or she may have to recommend them, he is not at heart a good man and she is not at heart a good woman.

Well, what is the lesson to us? Just this: the lesson of the Old Book; the lesson of Jesus and St. Paul, and all the best men and women whom we have ever known, whom you and I would rejoice to be like: "Love is long-suffering and kind; Love is never envious, never boastful, never conceited, never behaves unbecomingly; Love is never self-seeking, never provoked, never reckons up her wrongs; Love never rejoices at evil, but rejoices in the triumphs of Truth"; and this: "Let no man think more highly of himself than he ought to think, but to think soberly".

We are a job lot, all of us; all of us! The one supreme test between the good man and the bad is just this: What are you trying for? Which way are you voluntarily facing; toward the far country or the Father's home, and the Father's likeness? The Christian is he who is "going on unto perfection"; not yet there; just going on! But most of us have before us a long journey; a long, long journey.

"O for the rarity
Of Christian charity,
Under the sun!"

Sketches from Life. IV

By ROMNEY REYNOLDS

Two Cousins by Marriage

THERE is a peculiar interest in two faces on a single canvas. The suggestion of influence, comradeship, and love makes each face gain from the other. For no sensible painter would dare to paint two faces on a canvas without intimating by a glance or the touch of the hand that each was conscious of the other. So I am going to try to sketch the characters of two unusual women whom I knew in a Minnesota town long ago.

One of these was Mrs. George Whipple, the sister-in-law of Bishop Whipple. She had come to Minnesota with her sister, Mrs. James Lloyd Breck. When Bishop Whipple came to Minnesota, his brother promptly fell in love with Miss Mary Mills; so one of the happiest homes ever seen or written about came into being.

When I knew Mrs. Whipple, Mr. Whipple had been long dead, but I served a parish of which he had been rector many years before, and Mrs. Whipple gave me an instant friendship, which deepened with the years. Through her I learned to know the unselfish and whimsical man whose memory was lovingly cherished by all the people who had known him. She told me how she was forced to lock up her clothes; because, whenever poor people came his way, he gave, first, all his own things, then all hers so far as he could lay hold of them. To hear her tell the tale you would have thought that she was a flinty person dismally resenting the indiscriminate giving; but no wife could ever have more eagerly aided and abetted the criminal generosity. An old friend in making a call never dared to admire a possession, new or old, lest at the first favorable opportunity it come to his doorstep, with an irresistible note.

She was full of anecdote. She and Mr. Whipple had lived for a considerable time as missionaries in the Hawaiian Islands. She never tired of telling stories of "T. Nettleship Honolulu" (this was Bishop Staley), Bishop Willis and the other English; Queen Emma, and the other natives; all of whom made life in the sunny islands diverting. She and her Philadelphia friend, Miss Darlington (together, of course, with Bishop and Mrs. Whipple), had everything to do with the early traditions of St. Mary's Hall, a school for girls founded in Bishop Whipple's own home. Of her brothers-in-law, Dr. Breck and Bishop Whipple, and their blithe and heroic days of laying foundations in Minnesota, she had the liveliest recollections. In the vine-covered stone cottage where a large part of her life was spent, clergymen, daughters of St. Mary's, and many others came from afar to see her, not from sense of duty, but for the vivacious and illuminating talk which they knew they certainly would hear there.

She at one time edited the diocesan newspaper, and I suppose it was never so good as when her racy pen told the news of Bishop Whipple and his band of friendly missionaries. She never allowed herself to grow rusty in the literature or the harder knowledge which made the background of her culture. She was quite likely to decide that she would read again, for example, all the Waverley novels—and do it. When she could not sleep, she told me, she would light her lamp and in the night watches do intricate problems in some branch of mathematics. Such were her pastimes when she was slipping past her eightieth year.

With her strong Scotch face, framed in her ample widow's cap, she seemed, to those who did not know her well, rather austere. The silly and the worldly stood in awe of her for their good. And the man or the woman who hesitated in decisions, when the right was plain, understood her scorn. In a scholastic house which had once been her home, a portrait belonging to the house was missing. When its absence caused pain to people who she knew should not be troubled, Mrs. Whipple at some inconvenience made a friendly call, and standing before the wall where the portrait had hung, said sternly, "What has become of the portrait which always hung here?" "Ah," said the master of the house nervously, "it is in the attic: ah, ah, the ladies—you know the ladies always have their way". Mrs. Whipple drew herself up. "Not in my house", she said. She was wont to tell the story with glee; and never probably knew just why we laughed so hard. I remember one encounter which I had in connection with portraits. In a hall in memory of Mr. Whipple we were collecting portraits of those who had contributed loyal service to the community. One day she looked at me in silence with a piercing gaze, as if she would read just how far this collecting of portraits might go. Then she said suddenly with a finality not to be mistaken, "If you ever put a picture of me there after I am gone—well, I'll come back and—and visit you!"

This austerity was the thin disguise over one of the tenderest hearts God ever made. She planned happiness for those who were not happy. She saved out of her meagre income a proportion which a princess might envy, that great causes might have the utmost she could spare. Having no children, she adopted two little girls who gave her love for love; one died as a child, the other in the maturity of a brilliant womanhood. Then younger women gave her the devotion which daughters might have shown, and she was not alone. Moreover her love went out to the dumb beasts. When a neighbor kept a young dog in a box and (according to Mrs. Whipple's observant eye) forgot to feed it for days at a time, Mrs. Whipple would wander aimlessly in the early morning—hours before the neighbors' curtains were drawn—and give the poor beast food and water for the day. The cats and dogs knew her susceptibilities, and when deserted would come, dilapidated and forlorn, to her porch. In they were brought, tended, and fed as babies in a nursery. If no owner appeared, they were given later, sleek and fat, to boys and girls who were thought to deserve them, and who would surely be kind. She always had a permanent cat and a permanent dog. The dog I chanced to know was Mungo—a wiry, scraggy being, with snapping eyes and with the whirl of a Dervish when he was glad. He ordinarily accompanied his mistress on her walks and drives. I remember, one morning, she said, "Now, Mungo, be a good dog; I am going to Church—you must stay at home". "But, Mrs. Whipple", I protested, "you're not going to Church: I never thought you would fib to anybody, least of all to Mungo". "I'm not fibbing", she replied. "He knows nothing at all about Church except that it is a place to which he can't go. I use the language he understands, and it is perfectly clear to him". Poor Mungo continued to bark at inappropriate times and to whirl whenever his mistress "returned from Church", till blindness, and then feeblemindedness made life so evidently a burden to him, that a merciful ashman guided him painlessly to the land where good little dogs go at last.

Into this cottage came as a guest from time to time Miss Mary Webster Whipple, a cousin of Mr. Whipple, and a grandniece of Daniel Webster. When I knew the cottage Miss Whipple was giving herself to a branch of the Indian lace-work, which had been started by Miss Sibyl Carter. Occasionally she would come out into the white man's country to gladden the lives of her friends and to lay in a supply of necessary clothes. She came with the latest news of the Indians, vividly showing their pathos and their dignity. She told once of a visit which an old Indian paid her when she was ill. "I hadn't been in Church for some time", she said; "so I asked him about the sermon which he had heard last". "Was it good?" she asked. "O yes", he answered slowly, "very good. It was about the Trinity. I never knew what the Trinity meant; now I know". Miss Whipple was instantly alert. "Well", she said briskly, "I never understood; tell me". "Well", he answered: "it is this way: Trinity means three: there is God—and Christ—and the devil—and they are all pulling different ways". One winter I had been asked to write an article on Indian children for a missionary magazine. Naturally I appealed to Miss Whipple for "copy". Quickly the reply came giving me characteristic incidents. "But really", she added, "you must ask Susie" —referring to her colleague in the work—"she sees more high lights than I do". But Miss Whipple herself saw the romance and the charm in the old race. It is true she laughed over them, as when, for example, a certain Indian complained about the lace-making because his wife was obliged to wash her hands three times a day. On the other hand her eyes would fill with tears as she related some story of the devotion of "Good Thunder" and of other Indian saints. She too saw the high lights.

With all other Whipples, Miss Whipple had a genius for giving. One Christmas morning I dropped into the cottage to find the two cousins undoing their Christmas packages. A few other friends had also dropped in; and we were listening to the remarks that greeted each untying. One gift which Miss Whipple opened was a bottle of tooth powder with a card tied to it bearing the legend, "This you can't pass on!" She laughed, blushed, then turned to one of the visitors, saying: "Open that envelope you hold: I'll give you half of this. I won't have Susie playing me tricks". Presently she tripped forth with a number of parcels under her arm. "These are calendars", she explained. "I have just time before Church. They won't be good next Christmas. If they are to be 'passed on,' this is my chance!"

On one flight from the wilderness, she took charge of a small fourth cousin. Being an only child, he was somewhat spoiled, though altogether interesting, an exceedingly nice little boy, of whom she was very fond. Sometimes she meted out such discipline as she thought his absent parents would approve. Then she dipped into the psychology of her novel experience. "When I begin to spank him", she confessed, "I am sorry for him. Then, when he resists, I fall to work in earnest—and I enjoy it".

That she might have the utmost to give, she spent the minimum upon her clothes. So the people who sewed for her were not among the clever. One morning she came back to the cottage the picture of misery: "O Cousin Mary", she wailed, "one sleeve was in backwards, and I must go again". Mrs. Whipple crisply intimated that one should not be bothered by such mundane trifles: the austerity was evident. "Yes, Cousin Mary", admitted Miss Whipple, "you're probably right. I suppose this is the sort of thing St. Paul would have called light afflictions!" Then suddenly the humility vanished. "But what", she exclaimed, "did St. Paul know about anything so exasperating! If he wanted a new suit, all he had to do was to go downtown and buy a sheet—it was sure to fit!"

Both these voices have long been silent; and I know not who sits in the vine-covered cottage today. But I do know that more delightful women never sat either in cottage or in palace; and someway, I am sure, their self-forgetting kindness goes on, to bless and help those who knew them here, and those for whom the joy of a new life is keener because they are part of it.

"Comfort the Feeble-Minded"

By FRANCES E. CHENEY

IN years past we have been wont to hear, at our annual service of Prayer and Thanksgiving, these words, "comfort the feeble-minded". Let us assume, regardless of scholarly interpretation, that St. Paul meant by the feeble-minded those of our fellowmen, young or old, with weakness of mind and will due to some defect of brain organization existing from birth or early years, whose condition is incurable, but not necessarily unimprovable. In the light of modern psychological research, the best that we can hope for these individuals is that in adult life they may attain to the mental power and judgment of a child of twelve years of age, while we know that many will fall far below that level. Granted, then, that the adult feeble-minded are always children in mental development and will power, let us consider some of the things which have been done in the field of institutional care and of community effort to "comfort" these "children"; other things which have been "left undone" that "ought to have been done", and somewhat in detail what might be done by the clergy, deaconesses, parish visitors, and individual church members.

Massachusetts was the first state to appropriate public money for institutional care of the feeble-minded. This was done in 1848. Gradually other states made similar provision. On January 1, 1917, a census taken by the National Committee for Mental Hygiene shows that in thirty-two states institutional care is given to the feeble-minded apart from the epileptic or insane, while six additional states care for them in the same institution with their epileptics or the insane.

The following figures show the increase in growth of institutional provision: During the period from 1848 to 1890 (forty-two years) fifteen states only provided institutional care. During the period from 1906 to 1917 (eleven years) seventeen additional states made this provision.

This later more rapid growth is due to the greater realization of the hereditary nature of feeble-mindedness, to the growing recognition of the higher grades of mental defect and of its frequent connection with juvenile delinquency, and to that quickening of the impulse to serve our fellowmen which has been increasingly apparent.

The aim of institutional care, at first largely custodial, has broadened into the effort to provide opportunities for education (largely industrial) to the limit of individual capacity to those who may be returned later to the community equipped to contribute toward their self-support, under proper home and community conditions of guidance and protection, but still persists in its effort to give permanent protection and care to those who can never succeed in the community. For the able-bodied men and boys of this latter group the "colony" adjunct to the institution, located on land suitable for cultivation, is being developed in several states at a minimum expense to the state, and in some instances has returned a maximum revenue.

While it may be seen from this brief and incomplete review of what has been accomplished by the appropriation of public money through legislation that much progress has been made, it is well to consider some of the difficulties which have stood in the way of more adequate care, among them the proverbial overcrowding of the institutions, and the long lists of applicants awaiting admission. This latter situation may account, in part, for such facts as those discovered in 1914 by the Massachusetts Commission for the Investigation of the White Slave Traffic, So-Called, that of 300 prostitutes examined, 154 were feeble-minded, the mental age varying from seven to eleven years, inclusive; by the reports which came from penal institutions that one-fourth of our prison and reformatory population is feeble-minded; by the cases of inherited mental defect revealed in the records of social workers (it is generally conceded that 75 per cent. of mental defect is hereditary), and in the study of degenerate families in rural communities.

Institutions have been further handicapped by the fact that admission to, and release from, the institution has been largely in the hands of parents ill-fitted to plan wisely for the future of their unfortunate children, and by the lack of legal power to parole those who seem to merit the opportunity of being tried out in the community, and to return to the institution those who have proven themselves to be "socially unfit". It is encouraging to note the tendency of late to grant further legal power to the institutions.

A plan to insure more adequate care is being formulated in Massachusetts. Promoters of this plan hope for the appointment of a central board of supervision with power to advise and compel proper care and protection of the feeble-minded. The plan includes a complete and continuing census of the feeble-minded of the entire state, with special representatives of the central board located throughout the state, so that there may be supervision not only in the large cities but in towns and remote villages. The board would aim to co-operate with all existing agencies which now deal more or less disconnectedly with the problem, e. g., the court and probation officers, the child-helping societies, the mental clinics, the public school special classes, and the institutions for the feeble-minded.

Further aid to proper care might be outlined as follows: Courses of study dealing with mental defect in all normal schools and additional courses for those who are to become teachers of special classes, psychological laboratories easily accessible to all parts of the state and in connection with juvenile, police and criminal courts, and extension of knowledge of the problem in public and private schools, colleges, universities, divinity, law and medical schools.

There are encouraging signs of progress, notably the organization in recent years of societies or committees for mental hygiene. From 1908 to 1916 inclusive, organizations of this character have been formed in sixteen states. They have published valuable papers, and have provided popular lectures on all phases of mental hygiene and its connection with other social problems. The National Committee for Mental Hygiene, with headquarters in New York City, was organized in 1909. Its quarterly magazine, Mental Hygiene, is a mine of information.

Through the activity of societies like these an enlightened public opinion is bound to come, without which no progress can be made in social welfare. Attention has been called to the varying phases of problems of mental hygiene by these national and state societies while organizations similar to the following have focused attention upon the special problem of mental defect, viz.: The New York Committee on Feeble-Mindedness (New York City), "non-partisan, non-sectarian, state-wide"; The Committee on Provision for the Feeble-Minded (Philadelphia); The Springfield (Massachusetts) Committee for the Study of the Feeble-Minded, and The League for Preventive Work (Boston), described as follows: "This league is a co-operative effort of nineteen social service agencies of Boston to prevent some of the causes of misery found in their work with families. Its present purpose is A campaign to lessen feeble-mindedness."

The school boards which are establishing special classes for mentally-deficient children in the public schools of many of our large cities are contributing in no small degree to the "comfort" of the feeble-minded. Providence, Rhode Island, was the first city to organize these classes, in 1896. The movement is rapidly growing. Its success depends upon the close co-operation of the classes with trained psychiatrists and with psychological laboratories, and upon the employment of teachers having a vision of the special class work as an opportunity for rendering social service of high character extending far beyond the four walls of the classroom.

The whole question of the care of the feeble-minded is being recognized as one not to be solved by simply building institutions. It is a community problem, as well as a state problem, and each community should face and shoulder its responsibility.

In the light of what is being done to "comfort" these children, and by "comfort" let us include the effort not only to protect, educate and care for individuals but to prevent the inheritance of mental defect, can the clergy, deaconesses, parish visitors and church members contribute to that "comfort"? Emphatically, "Yes".

The first requisite is knowledge of the problem and an appreciation of the peculiar opportunity which the Church has for rendering service to those who are bound to it by spiritual ties. All should be informed as to the nature and extent of mental defect (it is a conservative estimate that 1 per cent. of school children are feeble-minded); of its frequent connection with other social ills (alcoholism, poverty, unemployment, immorality, disease, and crime); of the limitations, the needs, and possibilities of improvement of the feeble-minded; of the importance of early discovery in order that no feeble-minded child shall be unknown or uncared for in any community, and that the process of enlightening the parents as to their duties and responsibilities may begin without delay; of the dangers that attend the feeble-minded girl who is not adequately protected by her home or who shows immoral or, more strictly speaking, unmoral tendencies; of the dangers surrounding the feeble-minded boy who is easily led astray by evil companions of stronger mind and will, and of the menace that the feeble-minded with delinquent tendencies are to the community. The higher grades of mental defect, those just below or bordering on the normal, not noticeably defective to the casual observer, will be the most difficult to deal with. The warning note to be heeded is that unless early diagnosis of mental defect is made in young children, there may be tragedies of wrecked lives later—especially among this group of high-grade defectives.

A quiet study should be made of the children and youth of the parish. Close observation should be given, in co-operation with the Sunday school teachers, to children who are persistently inattentive or otherwise problematic. The day school record of these children should be known, and the life history ascertained from the parents, e. g., the age at which walking and talking began, and the record of infantile and subsequent diseases, etc. The associates of the Girls' Friendly Society and the leaders in other clubs should be alert to discover individuals who do not seem to measure up to the intellectual level of the majority, or whose behavior is anti-social.

Then comes the opportunity to plan with the parents for the future welfare of their children, and this may be the most difficult task of all.

Without exception the manner of approach to parents should be considerate and sympathetic. It may be that nothing further than a friendly relationship can be established during the first visits. Later, as the parents seem willing to confide their perplexities and anxieties, an offer of advice may be the next step. With their consent, there should be an examination, if possible, by an expert psychologist, to determine the mental status and to secure advice. It may take months or even years to accomplish what may have seemed necessary and urgent at the outset. Never, never should the remark be made, "You ought to be willing to let your child go to the place provided for 'such' children!" Nor should the parents have reason for suspicion that their problems had been discussed with neighbors or others.

Feeble-minded children, like normal children, may profit by a period of training away from home, but not all need to be placed in institutions. Some are infinitely better off at home, and often a whole family has "grown in grace" through the exercise of gentleness and consideration toward the weaker member. On the other hand, when a child is so helpless or so nervously excitable as to be a constant drain upon the mother's strength, demanding a disproportionate amount of her vitality, in justice to the other members of the family she should be urged to make the supreme sacrifice and allow her child to be cared for away from home. No one but a mother can ever fully appreciate what this sacrifice means. Some of us know of the spiritual uplift which comes from contact with the heroism often shown by parents.

It would seem to be a truism to say that no clergyman should perform the marriage ceremony for any person or persons known to be below par mentally, or in whose family there had been a persistently recurring strain of feeble-mindedness, insanity or epilepsy, and yet clergymen have said that since these persons were bound to be married it mattered little who performed the ceremony. It may or may not "matter little". At all events, a uniform standard of eugenic requirement, set by the clergy, is bound to have its far-reaching influence.

If one is tempted to despair, after considering the serious aspects of this great problem of mental defect, it is well worth to recall this saying: "The majority of people are sane, normal people," and yet its seriousness is a challenge to devoted service, and we need to take heed lest it be said of us,—"Ye did it not unto one of the least of these".

The Knight of the Labyrinth

V

Now when this winding and turning about among the narrow ways of the labyrinth had endured a great while, on a sudden there befel a marvel, for it seemed to Sir Hugh that he was come out of the labyrinth into the fairest country that ever he saw. Him thought he stood upon a high headland above the sea, and the color of the sea was a mingling of all the colors of those jewels wherewith the wall of the Holy City Jerusalem is builded, but chiefly was the sea blue like unto a sapphire, and green like unto a beryl stone, and where the sun shone on the waves of the sea the water was eyed like a peacock's tail. And to the right hand and to the left a headland rose up out of the sea, and their steep sides terraced with vineyards, and gray orchards of olive trees growing along their slopes; and the olive trees were garlanded with the green vines. And there were other trees also, pines and cypresses, among the olives. And on the one headland a lord's castle of a shining white stone, and on the other the little yellow houses of lesser folk, two or three, and a hermit's cell with a belfry a-top.

"Now praised be God", said Sir Hugh, "that gave me eyes to see!" And in the bright water there was a little boat a-sailing with a crimson sail. And Sir Hugh looked out to the far horizon, where the sky-blue dipped down to the sea-blue, and he said, "An I were not on quest right gladly would I rest here to my life's end, for solace of mine eyes". Nevertheless, he knew not yet that this was all a marvel of the labyrinth.

Howbeit, presently he was ware of knights, as many as half a score, that sat still as stone a-looking out to sea. And all they sat back to Sir Hugh, in a row, on the cliff's edge, nor never turned their head to see who might this be. Wherefore Sir Hugh Lepenseur came to the cliff's edge to discover if by good hap he was known to one or other of these knights and to speak them fair. But when he had looked into their faces, lo! he beheld as how they were blind, every one.

"God save ye sirs! What a coil is here?" cried Sir Hugh.

And one said, "I have wearied mine eyes with too much seeing, but presently when they are rested I shall see again".

And another said, "Surely the dawn cometh soon. Never was night so long as this night".

And a third asked him, saying, "Brother, is the vision of beauty still there?"

And one that was not yet wholly blind said, "Methinks it grows more fair the longer I look", and he shadowed his squinting eyes with his hand, the better to see that loveliness.

Then cried out Sir Hugh, "Gentles, fair sirs, come away! Have ye forgot the quest? And here is no cure for the King's daughter, for how shall it profit her to be blind, being already dumb?"

But they answered him, "Twas an idle quest. And moreover, 'tis not we that be blind, but thou; for our eyes are opened". And they said, "We would liefer wait for the sun to rise out of yonder sea than to marry all the King's daughters in Christendom".

"Oh, sirs!" said Sir Hugh, "The sun is arisen, but ye know it not. Howbeit, I may not linger, lest it come to pass that I, too, sit in darkness". Thereupon went he out from that place, and turned his back upon that beckoning beauty; and presently he was wandering as aforetime among those gray and endless galleries of the labyrinth.

VI

Anon when Sir Hugh Lepenseur had strayed hither and yon a great while, befel another marvel. For he was come into a fair pleasaunce; and there was set a sun-dial in the midst, and minstrels ringed thereabout, cross-legged on the green turf, playing their pipes and their lutes. Moreover, birds sang in the hawthorn that was a hedge to shut in that privy place—throstle and merle and cuckoo—and in the tree tops beyond the hedge; and there was a lark singing somewhere within that miracle sky. Wherefore Sir Hugh unlaced his helm the better to hear those divers melodies.

Now there were other knights, as many as six or seven, that loitered and listened, idle, beside the sun-dial, and one of these cried out to Sir Hugh,—

"Fair sir, do but step across the brook and thou shalt hear more clear."

For betwixt Sir Hugh and those others there ran a prattling thread of silver water.

Whereupon did Sir Hugh according as he was bid and came into the fair pleasaunce and had speech of those other knights, for the sound of their voice was sweet to them. And they said unto him,—"Sir, a question: Whether is sweeter, the voice of the nightingale or the voice of a man?"

And when they had held dispute an hour or more, howbeit Sir Hugh made excuse to listen and said no words, there was a lad among the minstrels lifted up his voice and sang, that the hearts of all they that hearkened were faint for pain of that delight. But the nightingale might not sing until moonrise. Wherefore all they, waiting, spake of other matter. And one said, "Mine ear is so true, it tells me when the lute is but a hair's breadth out of tune". And one said, "Hark! dost hear yon cricket; methinks it is a furlong distant, but mine is a keen ear?" Thus made they their boasts as good knights will. And one said softly, "Hush!" and when they had been silent the space of a minute or thereabout, he said, "I hear the shadow moving on the sun-dial". Thereupon all they leaned to listen, with head bent: and another said, "Yea, hear it". And into that silence there came the sound of the sanctus bell that rings at the holy sacrament of the Mass; wherefore Sir Hugh went down on his knees in the grass, but those others stared on him in amaze. "Why dost thou so?" said they. And Sir Hugh answered them, "Hear ye not the sanctus bell?" And again there came the holy sound. But they said, "Nay; there is no sanctus bell".

Then gat Sir Hugh on his feet in all haste, and leaped the brook and fled away from that fair pleasaunce. And as he ran he heard those others that called after him saying, "Fair sir, fair sir, thou hast forgot the nightingale! Do but bide with us till the moon rise, and thou wilt bide forever".

Nevertheless Sir Hugh ceased not to flee until he had outrun the sound of their voices: but when he was come into a safe and silent place he kneeled down and gave thanks unto God and Our Lord Jesus Christ for that he was delivered from that peril. And when he had got his breath he set forth again upon his quest through those gray ways. And he bore his helmet in his arm henceforth for the more ease; and whithersoever the little white glove on his helmet pointed, that way he went.

PAIN is inevitable. Pain may be made the instrument of joy. It is the angel with the fiery sword guarding the gates of the lost Eden. The flaming sword which pricked man from Paradise must wave him back.—Francis Thompson.

Could Humanity Perish?

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

DOES it ever enter anybody's head that possibly all the high results of all the spiritual travail of unnumbered ages could be wasted, so far at least as this world is concerned, and the whole human race enter upon a downward course which would end in animalism or in man's utter disappearance from the face of the earth? Yet the danger is not imaginary; it is at least conceivable that the humanity of generations to come might gradually sink in the scale of being, individually and collectively, until it ceased to deserve the name in any real sense or, what is more likely, be eliminated altogether by the conditions of the struggle for existence. Most people would refuse to believe this or would scout the suggestion as of no more than academic importance. We take for granted in an ordinary way that somehow the survival of the genus homo on this planet is as assured as its present predominance over all others and our future progress in the arts of life inevitable and automatic.

But both science and history teach a different lesson. Nature has scrapped one species after another with prodigal ruthlessness when they ceased to be able to serve her turn; she has destroyed a myriad organisms for one she has brought to perfection, or rather she has been content to spend aeons in the fashioning of a type which she incontinently sacrifices the moment it ceases to be able to adapt itself to changing conditions.

> Are God and Nature then at strife,
> That Nature lends such evil dreams?
> So careful of the type she seems,
> So careless of the single life.
> So careful of the type? but no.
> From scarped cliff and quarried stone,
> She cries, 'A thousand types are gone:
> I care for nothing, all shall go'.

Nor must we too readily persuade ourselves that it is always and invariably the superior type which prevails over the inferior and succeeds in holding its own. Broadly speaking, it may be so, but there have been many cases in which it was not so. The weaker has generally had to give way to the stronger, but the stronger has not always been the higher and finer or the intrinsically worthier to survive. The cobra and the Bengal tiger are still here as well as the shark and the octopus, but who shall say how many gentler and more beautiful species have perished to satisfy their lust of slaughter and yield them mastery in the jungle and the deep? It is cosmic far more than organic changes that get rid of monsters and create new and relatively better forms of life; sometimes it is even a lack of further victims.

We are pleased to call man the crown of creation, but it is not flattering to be told how he won the title. The president of the anthropological section of the British Association informed us some years ago that man secured his eminence by being the most merciless and efficient killer of all the higher vertebrates; he literally waded through slaughter to a throne. The gentlest and most refined lady in our homeland to-day, whoever she be, derives from an ancestry of murderous brutes whose master passion in life was that of inflicting pain and death upon every creature within their range, including their own kind. Is it so very different with us to-day? The nation with the most terrific fangs and talons and the most expert in their use is that which to all appearance obtains sovereignty over the rest.

But to reckon in this way only is to ignore the most decisive factor in evolution, the psychic. Man is not mere animal; he is a spiritual being; he belongs to two worlds, and that which has given him his lasting predominance over creation is his super-physical endowment. By the use he makes of this he stands or falls; every nation, every individual, every type of social order is judged by this standard and in the long run must take its appropriate place in accordance therewith. What makes us most truly human is not from below but from above, and in proportion as we rely upon that which is only from below or fail in making it duly the instrument of that which is from above we are departing from our true line of advance and must pay the penalty with the lapse of time. And here history has a grave warning to give to the men of to-day. "Not by might nor by power but by spirit saith the Lord of hosts". "The race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong". "The meek shall inherit the earth". The seemingly invincible military empires of old have one by one passed into oblivion while the good they sought to destroy has shown itself imperishable. Assyria, Babylon, Rome—all are gone as Germany will go. Each in its degree strove against the divine idea incarnate in the mind of its time and fell before it. Little Israel lives; its mighty oppressors of old are dead. The faith of the crucified outmatched the panoplied majesty of the Caesars; it will yet sweep from the face of the earth the arrogant and blasphemous survival of Caesarism that, drunk with power, bestrides a groaning Europe to-day.

Yet—let us pause and consider. Decadence is as marked a feature of history as progress. To what can God look in human life to-day to express His word and will? There is nothing inevitable about the processes of spiritual any more than of physical evolution; if we fail the cosmos we perish; God can do without us. As was pointed out in a previous article, there was one moment in the history of the world when the entire organization of human society was menaced with destruction, a moment when the forces of moral disintegration were so strong that there seemed little hope of making headway against them. That moment was when Christianity came into the world and a new principle was infused into human life; the cross of Jesus saved the world from ruin and dissolution. People find it hard to realize this but it is true. Civilization was going wrong; nothing apparently could stop it from rushing with ever-accelerating pace into hopeless chaos and death; the gospel arrested the downward course and turned it upward again. But there is nothing in the essential nature of things as viewed from the merely human standpoint to prevent the same situation recurring. Let no man deceive himself as to this. Civilizations have perished before; they can perish again. The soul has died out of society in ages past; it might do so once more—and then?

The Chalice in Flanders

By SUSANNA MEAD KELLOGG

A GOLDEN-WROUGHT Chalice, o'er brimmed with red wine,
Distilled of the dew-laden, sun-kisséd vine,
Has been ever a symbol, these long ages through,
Of the blood of Our Lord, shed for all; shed for you.

Ah! there's many a Chalice on old Flanders' soil,
Though wrought not of gold, nor yet digged by man's toil;
But torn madly,—where once ran the rich, golden grain
With gay poppies between, blest by sunshine and rain;—

For each shell-crater black, on that drear "No Man's Land",
Where the bird sings no more, and the Hun holds command,—
Is a Chalice of souls,—their shed blood the "great price",
That a World may know Freedom, through deep sacrifice.

The Americanization of the Immigrant Alien

By THE REV. H. LILIENTHAL LONSDALE

THE present war, terrible in its ruthlessness, colossal in its scope, uncertain in its settlement, has brought us face to face with many perplexing problems of finance, food, transportation and supplies. These are all material. But one problem of far greater moment than the material is the human problem, the problem of Americanizing our immigrant aliens, both male and female.

We have here in our midst millions of immigrant aliens who have for years supported themselves and families, have enjoyed the blessings of freedom and individual liberty, have had for the asking every advantage that a free democracy can give them, and yet have remained aliens, never learned the national language, never qualified themselves for the rights of citizenship, but have been satisfied to remain foreigners in our land, have isolated themselves from our national life, interest, institutions, habits and hopes, and have retained their racial and national habits and language by living in an environment in which are reproduced the same practices, language, and religious associations which they nominally surrendered by emigration.

These are the facts and the problem resulting from these facts is how shall we cause the immigrant alien to cease to be an alien, how shall he take his part in the corporate life of the great nation in which he has a human if not a civic duty? Unassimilated, unabsorbed into the body politic, he becomes a menace to our life and institutions, and potentially an outpost of a foreign power, a point of contact for the propaganda of aims which his fatherland may desire to further. Now when the menace is critical it is hardly becoming to lay the whole blame on these aliens for their unsympathetic and antipathetic attitude. When any serious danger from the alien seemed improbable were we not indifferent to their isolation and neglectful of their needs? Need we wonder, therefore, that neglect is repaid with antipathy and that in this present crisis of our national history and life we find them unresponsive to our appeals for sympathy, patriotism, and service. We are indeed a polyglot assemblage of peoples; we have yet to be fused into a national unity and solidarity that will eliminate the hyphen from our social and political vocabulary.

This then is the problem: We have today in our midst, yet not of us, 3,000,000 aliens who do not speak our language. Aliens by immigration, they are still aliens in fact and in self-determination. What is the solution for this problem, how shall we remedy this condition, how change the situation, how turn a menace into a defense?

Many solutions may be proposed and perhaps have been proposed, but to my mind the radical and essential method must be one which enables the alien to enter into our modes of thought, assimilate our views, be in daily touch with our political, educational, civic and social life, leads him to study and to understand the national principles which underlie our government, in a word that method which will enable him to say with conscious pride, sympathy and conviction, "I am an American."

The one dynamic factor best adapted to produce that result is that of teaching the alien to speak and think in English, our national language. Moreover, it seems also to be the first thing to do. It lies at the foundation of citizenship. So important has this problem become, and so necessary is it to find some solution that the national government has taken the problem in hand by organizing and promoting an "America first" campaign, which in an official statement is described as "a concrete national movement to promote the unqualified allegiance of every foreign-born citizen to the United States; to nationalize the use of the English language and to effect greater national unity and solidarity behind the fighting line". It must also be emphasized that the scope and area of the problem is nation-wide, not restricted to a few cities congested by foreign immigration. The menace is found wherever a foreign community isolates itself from the national life by its racial prejudice, preserves its alien habits and language and withdraws and segregates itself in its own peculiar racial and national environment.

Still further it must be remembered that the problem is not simply limited to the male immigrant, but involves the female also. The enfranchisement of women in our State of New York has made the woman an elector, and the foreign woman, the wife of a native citizen or of one foreign-born, becomes by virtue of her marriage a citizen and a voter. Heretofore what efforts have been made to imbue the immigrant alien with our democratic ideals have been addressed to the man, today we must include the woman.

Because of the magnitude of the problem and the area of the field, the co-operating forces must also be nation-wide, embracing national, state, civic, educational, industrial, philanthropic, fraternal, labor and religious organizations and associations.

Now in the solution of this vast national problem—so vital to the safety and perpetuity of our institutions and heritage, so essential as a bulwark against disloyalty and anarchy, so necessary to promote loyalty, order and devotion—what is the Church's part, what is the Church doing to help the nation in its hour of extremity? For the problem of Americanizing the alien is not only a political, social and educational problem, it is also a religious problem.

In the past the alien has been coolly and at times contemptuously neglected, his religious self-isolation through ignorance of our language accepted as a matter of course. He has been forgotten or passed by, regarded as "too hard", "not worth while", "unresponsive", "unassimilative", while the Church has been too "preoccupied" with its fictitious problems of constitution and causes, liturgies and doctrines, its tithing of mint, anise and cummin, its partisan bickerings and its frantic attempts to divest itself of its ecclesiastical identity. Meanwhile the tragic problem of the very existence of the Church, its development and service, its claims to be a national church have been threatened by an arrested growth of its membership, due largely to the shortsighted policy and practice of limiting our ministrations for the most part, to English-speaking people, being competitive for the religious and ecclesiastical allegiance of those whose affiliations are as a rule settled; due also to the fact that as the foreign people who come here increase, our so-called native families are steadily dying through the reduction of the size of their families. In the face of a dying native strain, and the steady increase of the foreign strain, does it not become the duty of the Church to face the situation, take note of conditions, adjust itself to its new environment, gird up its loins for a new task by adopting new methods and gaining a new vision.

At the recent meeting in New York of the synod of the Second Province it was officially reported that the total gain in membership for the year for the great province embracing some of the strongest dioceses of our Church was less than 400. What a lamentable, humiliating record if accurate. What a revelation of inefficiency and decline, what a warning to us to set our house in order, what a possibility that our candlestick may be removed. Hush! Twelve hundred and sixty-six clergymen and among them eleven bishops ministering in 1,233 parishes and mission stations in these seven dioceses adding to the communicant roll of our Church less than 400 during the past year, i. e., to say, it took three clergymen to add one communicant. Is there not something radically wrong in this condition? Such a situation calls for serious searchings of heart, and close scrutiny of the problem why this Church has made so little advance, that with all its boasted advantages of an apostolic ministry and priceless heritage of an incomparable liturgy it has made such a faint im- (Continued on page 539)

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

ARCHBISHOP OF YORK SAYS FAREWELL TO AMERICA

Address to New York Church Club Will Be Long Remembered

NEW YORK CITY—"It was the kind of evening that enriches life for all time. It has been an evening that none of us can ever forget".

In these words to a friend, an elderly officer, wearing the uniform of the United States, summed up the thought uppermost in the minds of nearly a thousand people, as they slowly left the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria a week ago Wednesday night, where they had listened to the valedictory of the Archbishop of York to his fellow Churchmen in America.

It was indeed a night never to be forgotten. In the years far in the future, when the black cloud of this war shall have long been dissipated, the children in many a church family will listen with thrilled hearts to the story of that night, when the Archbishop of York, endeared to all who heard him, spoke so graciously his farewell to America.

Over the gathering, in which were not only the members of the Church Club and their wives and friends, and many people well-known throughout America, but nearly all of the bishops of the Episcopal Church in this country, there was a consciousness of peculiar solemnity. Since his appearance in the same hall five weeks before, when he had spoken to the Pilgrims of America, the Archbishop had traveled to many cities, and had spoken to a hundred thousand citizens of the United States. And since that night the soul of His Grace, as well as that of America, had been tried as perhaps never before, as anxious eyes watched the colossal combat on the Western front.

There was real gratitude in the hearts of New Yorkers, as they listened to the brief address of Bishop Greer—gratitude that the Metropolitan city possessed in its bishop one who could so graciously express to the Archbishop on this interesting occasion what they would have most wished to say.

And in no lesser way were all Churchmen present grateful for their Presiding Bishop. As he rose in his rugged simplicity, he embodied that democratic virility and good will which Americans like to feel is characteristic of their best. When his final words thundered over the assembly—"bear with you to your people the message of the determination of a United America that right shall, before God and man, be made this whole world's might"—they seemed to many symbolic of the unconquerable guns of the Allies, and evoked prolonged cheering from the floor and the galleries.

In the first parts of his address, the Archbishop was revealed to those who had heard his other addresses in a new vein. His humorous references to his experiences during his tour of America brought shouts of laughter in their train.

THE CHURCH'S WORD OF FAREWELL

"The Archbishop has made his faith visible among us by his personality", said Bishop Greer. "He has done it not by trying to do it. He has made the issue for us a vision more than ever that the great struggle is something upon which we have solemnly entered as before the altar of God, and must not and will not be abandoned until it has been fully and completely accomplished.

"It has been said here tonight that the Archbishop has spoken to more than ninety thousand people; we wish that he might have spoken to one hundred millions. I have been told that there were nineteen minutes of his time among us for which the committee in charge had made no engagement. This was, of course, reprehensible and not at all characteristic of an American committee (Laughter). We regret that he could not lengthen out those nineteen minutes to as many years among us.

"As he goes from us we wish him God-speed and God's protection. We wish him to say to his people, now our people more than ever before, that we will stand by, that we will not fail or fall; we will freely give of our substance and ourselves, at whatever cost or sacrifice, until this great struggle to make the world free shall have been at last accomplished".

Bishop Tuttle spoke but a few moments.

"I am rising to say that I want to associate myself with the kindly greetings of the President and the Bishop of New York, and to couple them with the welcome of all my fellow-guests. Especially I wish to be a voice for my brothers, the bishops of the Church in the United States, and to speak for them our gratitude for your visit to the United States".

After sketching the history of old York, Bishop Tuttle continued: "New York greets old York for what she did and what she was, and New York takes pride in knowing that the steady flow of apostolic succession has by no means run dry (Laughter and applause).

"When you go away bear with you to the people of your Empire and your Church, our Mother, a message of brotherly love and hope, and the message of the determination of a united America that right shall, before God and man, be made this whole world's might".

THE ARCHBISHOP'S FAREWELL

The Archbishop said in part:

"I am most deeply touched by the words of the Bishop of New York, and by those of one whom we all revere as a true father in God. There is nothing in the world more beautiful than an old man who keeps the spirit and soul of a boy. My only regret at this time is that you have spoiled the apostolic simplicity of your bishops by associating with them anything so suspicious as an archbishop".

The Archbishop told the story of a little girl who asked the meaning of arch-conspirator, and was informed that it meant the worst kind of conspirator.

"So, then, I suppose the Archbishop is the worst kind of bishop. You are proud of your bishops, for unlike your fellow laymen in England you are largely responsible for making them (Laughter).

HOUSE OF BISHOPS HAS A TWO DAYS' SESSION IN N. Y.

Accepts Bishop Jones' Resignation and Elects Bishop for Philippines

NEW YORK CITY.—Two days were spent by the House of Bishops at its special meeting called at Synod Hall, New York, on the morning of April 10. On the first day the Archbishop of York was presented to the house by Bishop Greer and Bishop Lawrence, and made an address. On the same day the house passed upon the appeal from Dr. Newman Smyth and others, which was printed in THE CHURCHMAN of last week, later acting upon an appeal from the churches of New Brunswick, New Jersey, looking toward church unity.

On the second day the Bishops gathered in St. James' Chapel at the Cathedral for a celebration of the Holy Communion, after which they balloted for the election of a missionary bishop for the Philippines. On the second ballot the Very Rev. James Wilmer Gresham, D.D., dean of Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, was elected.

The House of Bishops accepted the resignation of Bishop Jones, tendered on the second day. On the following day, April 12, the Presiding Bishop appointed Bishop Touret, Bishop of Western Colorado, to be in charge of the Missionary District of Utah.

The Bishop of Vermont presented the following report on the Newman Smyth appeal on behalf of the special committee:

"The House of Bishops has given consideration to the Memorial presented to it, signed by the Rev. Dr. Newman Smyth and the Rev. Dr. Williston Walker on behalf of many others representing several Christian communions.

"While heartily appreciating the earnest plea for the subordination of any partisan or sectarian interests to the cause of a united witness to Christ and His rule, and humbly lamenting the comparative powerlessness at this great world crisis of the Christian Church by reason of its divisions, we cannot perceive in the course suggested by the petition any real remedy for existing evils.

"As in the civil sphere, so in the ecclesiastical, a patched-up peace, not resting on sure foundations, however immediately alluring, would be provocative of fresh misunderstandings and separations.

"Our differences lie deeper than questions of ordination, important as these are. Though often unperceived, the real difference between religious communions goes down, in many cases, to the recognition or not of a definite revelation of God's mind and will made by our Lord Jesus Christ His incarnate Son, and of His Church as the minister of His truth and grace.

"We must remind the memorialists that, in the case of many of the religious communions represented by them, there is no central and authoritative body with which we can treat as to questions of intercommunion. By the terms of this organization, each congregation is independent as to its doctrine, discipline and worship.

CHURCH WOMAN KILLED BY GERMAN BOMB IN FRANCE

Associate of Sisters of St. Mary and Member of School Faculty

DAVENPORT, IOWA—News has come from France of the death of Miss Marion G. Crandell, an associate of the Sisters of St. Mary and a member of the faculty of St. Katharine's School, Davenport, Iowa.

Miss Crandell was released from her teaching duties soon after the Christmas holidays to take charge of a canteen for the Y. M. C. A. She had offered her services to the French government without cost. She was educated in Paris and believed she could accomplish much for the soldiers because of her intimate knowledge of France and the language.

Miss Crandell was killed by the explosion of a huge German shell which destroyed the French Soldiers' Fireside, where she was working on the French front for the soldiers who were in action. This was during the bombardment of St. Menhould near Chalons. She was taken to a near-by hospital where she died without regaining consciousness. The funeral services were held the next day, Maundy Thursday morning, a French army chaplain presiding. Her coffin was draped with the French tricolor and stood next to the coffin of a French soldier killed in the same bombardment. She was given a military funeral and interment was made in the military cemetery where hers was the only woman's grave among 6,000 French soldiers.

"She came to work for soldiers; she died like a soldier", declared the army chaplain.

Miss Crandell was the first American woman to be killed in Y. M. C. A. work at the front.

In a letter received at the school the week of Miss Crandell's death she said, "Give my love to everyone and tell all that we cannot sacrifice too much, for we must win this war and it can only be done through sacrifice".

St. Katharine's School is planning a memorial for Miss Crandell.

DEGREE FROM COLUMBIA

Notable Gathering as the Archbishop of York Is Honored

NEW YORK CITY.—The Archbishop of York received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Columbia University Thursday afternoon. The degree was conferred by President Nicholas Murray Butler in the trustees' room of the university, where not quite a year ago Columbia had greeted Marshal Joffre, René Viviani, Arthur James Balfour, and Lord Cunliffe, before conferring upon the same honorary degree with ceremonies.

In the trustees' room were gathered the Board of Trustees, the University Council, the Trustees of Barnard College, Teachers' College, and the College of Pharmacy; the vestry of Trinity Parish; members of the standing committee of the Diocese of New York, and members of the executive committee of the Pilgrims and of the Council of the Alumni Federation of Columbia.

The Archbishop entered the trustees' room at 3:45 o'clock escorted by Dr. Butler. Among those in attendance were Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, Bishop Harding of Washington, J. Pierpont Morgan, August Belmont, ex-Senator Chauncey M. Depew, Brig.-Gen. George R. Dyer, Sir George R. Parkin, Samuel W. Fairchild, Abram I. Elkus, John H. Finley, commissioner of education in New York State, and James Speyer.

The Archbishop was escorted to the Columbia campus by Bishop Greer, representing the trustees, and by Prof. Bedinger Mitchell, representing the faculties. President Butler received the Archbishop in the hall of the big library and immediately the academic procession moved to the trustees' room.

PRESENTED BY BISHOP GREER

Bishop Greer presented the Archbishop formally to Dr. Butler, who then conferred the degree. In accepting the honor, the Archbishop said in part:

"If there be any university with whom I would naturally wish to have this connecting link it would be this university. From no one could I have received a degree more acceptably than from you (Dr. Butler), not only on account of your place in the public life, but because at this crisis your words have expressed so clearly and so forcibly the ideals for which the allied nations stand."

The gathering then adjourned to St. Paul's chapel, where the Archbishop made an address.

The same evening the Archbishop spoke at a Liberty Loan mass meeting in Carnegie Hall.

BISHOP ISRAEL WELCOMED BY GERMAN AIRPLANES

Wears a Gas Mask and Carries a Steel Helmet

By Chaplain Charles R. Tyner

SOMEWHERE-IN-FRANCE, Palm Sunday, 1918—I was much pleased to receive a message from the director of religious activities for this district that Bishop Israel was coming and would speak in the huts along the line. The train was late but eventually got here and I was certainly glad to see the Bishop. This was Saturday, March 23. In the way of a welcome the Boche airplanes paid us a visit at 2.30 p. m.; also again at 9.30, but were driven back by our anti-aircraft guns. As the Bishop has been all over the battle front such incidents bother him little.

He immediately arranged for a celebration of Holy Communion at the Enlisted Men's Club, even though the guns were booming not very far away. Quite a lengthy schedule has been made out for the Bishop and he truly has a strong message for the boys.

After saying "Good-bye" to me, he adjusted his gas mask, picked up his steel helmet, and got into the camion that would take him up to the next hut where he would speak words of comfort and encouragement to the soldier boys who were waiting for nightfall, when they would go into the trenches.

ORDINATION

On the first Sunday after Easter, at St. Paul's church, Brunswick, Maine, the Bishop of Maine, the Rt. Rev. Benjamin Brewster, ordained Mr. Robert J. Evans to the diaconate, and advanced to the priesthood the Rev. William W. Ridgeway.

VESTRIES KEEP SALARIES DOWN—"GET AWAY WITH IT"

Even Hebrew Merchants Pity Clergy Says "Church News"

In its current number the Church News of the diocese of Pennsylvania publishes report made by a special committee o clerical salaries to the last convention the diocese of Maryland, together with th resolution adopted by the convention. Com menting editorially on this report, the News says that the threatened disaster to the sem naries from lack of candidates is intimate bound up with the question of salarie which are lower than those of a mechani and adds the following straight talk vestries:

> For it is not the enduring of unavoidable hardships that creates bitterness, least of all in the ministry, but the feeling that the hardships are unnecessary, and due to the neglect of vestries to give any thought to the plight of their rectors in the face of increasing costs of living. It is precisely that neglect which the admirable resolutions adopted by the diocese of Maryland seek to end. If vestries find that fuel, light and janitor's service are going to cost them more than formerly they may groan, but they find the means to foot the bills. They ignore increasing costs in the rectory because they can do so and get away with it. Is it manly? Is it not bound to seriously damage the Church in the future? The resolutions in Maryland, unless they are ignored will force the vestries of that diocese to confer with their rectors and find out how things are going with them: they will put an end to an ignorance that may have been blissful to the vestries but was anything but that to the rectors.
> On top of the tremendous increase in the cost of food, fuel and clothing, the clergy have been called upon to bear an additional ten per cent. increase in the cost of clothes, furniture and furnishings through the withdrawal of "Clerical Discounts" by all the stores in Philadelphia. Those discounts were really contributions by the stores to all the congregations in and around Philadelphia for they helped the various congregations in the support of their ministers for unquestionably many congregations have reconciled themselves to the salaries paid their ministers partly on the ground that the ministers got discounts at the stores. Well, we may now write of such discounts along the lines of Sydney Smith's famous essay on "Snakes in Ireland: Concerning snakes in Ireland. There are no snakes in Ireland". There never was any reason why these discounts should have been given. They were a disgrace to the Christian churches which allowed their ministers to be such public objects of charity that even Hebrew merchants felt moved to help them out! They were a mortification to many ministers, and submitted to only for the sake of their families. But it will be an even greater disgrace to the Christian churches if they let the loss caused by the withdrawal of these contributions fall upon the ministers. Gentlemen of the vestries, members of the congregations, will speak for those who cannot, or at least will not, speak for themselves. It may be that you are doing all that justice requires or that you are able to do. It may be that you are not. You owe it to yourselves to determine which is the case with you. "Let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind". You cannot be so until you have ascertained the facts, and weighed them.

DR. FINLEY CALLS FOR RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION

Commissioner of Education Wants It Co-ordinated With Public Schools

New York City—Dr. John H. Finley, Commissioner of Education for the State of New York, has emphasized the need of the Church teaching religion in close connection with the public school, and has proposed certain definite methods. These are of interest in connection with the G. B. R. E. War-Time Education Fund.

Dr. Finley's proposal is almost a challenge. It should be considered as a war-time responsibility, for the connection between the successful carrying on of the war and the work in public education is most direct. The war is for ideals, but factories, shops and commerce are calling, and boys and girls are quitting school, neglecting education and forgetting religion, the only enduring foundations for ideals of justice and righteousness.

Dr. Finley's proposals do not seek to establish any sectarian teaching in the schools. He says:

"A state giving welcome to all creeds can not in its public schools, which it taxes all to support and which it wishes the children of all to enter, impose any religious teaching without contravening the very principle of freedom that is at the foundation of this republic of diverse traditions, tongues and creeds."

Sees Need of Instruction

But this does not prevent Dr. Finley from seeing the need of religious instruction. This is his position:

"With our varying creeds the religious teacher may not come with his or her particular creed into the school, but that should not prevent a co-operation between school and church or between school and home which will insure the religious teaching of every child outside the school. The time has come for Protestant and Catholic and Jew and Gentile to co-operate to the end that every child may have his moral and religious inheritance.

"Some practical way for this co-operation we must find. We must not in this democracy assort our children by creeds. We must bring them together so far as we can in the study of those elements essential to the maintenance of a democracy, but we must find a way to see that every child does have outside the school in this land of freedom of worship that for which many of our ancestors came to it, the thing which makes freedom of worship worth having."

Proposes Three Methods

Dr. Finley proposes the three following methods by which religious instruction may be co-ordinated with the public schools:

1. The preparation of a book of selections from the Bible by an Interdenominational Commission appointed by the Legislature or by the Board of Regents, for use in the schools.

2. The formulation of a plan for non-proselyting co-operation between the school and the various denominations to the end that every child may have its democratical and its religious instruction.

3. The granting of regents' credits for serious work in Bible study outside of the schools.

No. 1 has been discussed frequently but many are convinced that the reading of selections from the Bible gives the child only a portion of his religious inheritance.

No. 2 has passed beyond the experimental stage. In Gary, Indiana, the General Board of Religious Education has maintained a Religious Day School with a salaried teacher for three years. This school has co-operated with the public school so effectively that Mr. William Wirt, the superintendent of the Gary School, writes:

"We believe that the Church School in Christ church parish, Gary, is increasing in value each year and that it is a most important form of co-operation with the public schools."

No. 3 has been in operation successfully for several years in North Dakota, Colorado, Texas, Indiana, Michigan and other States.

In order that the Church may respond to public school leaders, the general board made provision in its war-time education fund of $45,000 for one or more persons to become expert in this new and important enterprise. These educational workers would be at the call of bishops and rectors in the many communities that are preparing to act on this most important subject.

Today not only armies, but peoples and nations are at war. Such a war can only be maintained by the minds and will of the people. In a democracy the training of the mind and the will of the youth exercises a quickening influence on the total national life. In the near future the work done in our churches and public schools today in leading our boys and girls to save and sacrifice, to study and train, may provide the balance of power that will win the victory in the critical hours of 1920 and 1921.

Subscriptions for the War-Time Education Fund of $45,000 should be sent to Harper Sibley, chairman of the Finance Committee, 100 Sibley block, Rochester, N. Y.

ARMY CHAPLAIN ASSISTS WIFE OF FAMOUS ACTOR

Mrs. Mansfield Has Ministration of "Little Church" When Son Dies

San Antonio, Texas—The reticence and avoidance of publicity essential to army life make possible strange and fortunate coincidences. The other morning Voluntary Chaplain Dwight Cameron casually overheard a sergeant say at the telephone that "the family from New London want to start" and stating a certain hour for departure. The chaplain turned and asked for an opportunity to serve.

He was sent to see Mrs. Richard Mansfield at a near-by apartment house, whose son had died the night before of spinal meningitis at the Base Hospital of Fort Sam Houston. Always a great admirer of the art of Richard Mansfield, and that of "Beatrice Cameron", it seemed indeed providential that the chaplain, who is senior curate to Dr. Houghton of the Church of the Transfiguration, should be privileged to preserve the traditions of the "Little Church Around the Corner" by ministering to this great family of the American stage.

Mrs. Mansfield placed a memorial window in the Church of the Transfiguration several years ago after the death of her husband. Now, her only son, who had inherited much of the genius of his noted father, has given his life in the service of his Nation. And the "Little Church Around the Corner" extended its sweet consolations to its own children far away down in the great military camps of West Texas.

UNION LENTEN SERVICES BLESSING TO COMMUNITY

"No One Can Express Debt of Gratitude", Says College President

Lancaster, Pennsylvania—Remarkable results were accomplished by the "Noonday Lenten Services in War-time", which were held in St. James' church, this city.

"All of the 29 local clergymen who preached were most kind and helpful", said the Rev. Clifford Gray Twombly, rector of St. James. "No one in the city who was asked to preach refused—except the two Roman Catholics asked, who were not allowed to do so by their bishop. There was not a single discordant, or inappropriate, or discourteous word said by anyone during the whole season, while the sermons as a whole were most helpful, and of an unusually high order".

Dr. Henry H. Apple, president of Franklin and Marshall College, who preached twice during the series, and was present practically every day, has written for The Churchman the following account of the services:
